Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I think it is very probable that the objections were to that bill. I do not definitely recall that fact, but nevertheless, Mr. President, I think I ought to look at my correspondence in reference to the matter. As the Senator knows very well, an objection carries the bill over for the day.

Mr. BRYAN. Not now, after 1 o'clock.

Mr. GALLINGER. Unless the Senator chooses to move to take it up.

Mr. BRYAN. That was my purpose in rising. I hardly know what to say if the Senator prefers that request. I hope——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I suggest to the Senator from Florida to give notice that he will move to take up the bill to-morrow.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator will have an opportunity to move to take it up very soon, and very likely there will be no objection to considering it.

Mr. BRYAN. I will say to the Senator that I have been waiting; that for several weeks I have sat here and other bills have gone through and we almost reached it when we were upon the calendar last week. I thought it was the fair thing to do that we should begin at the calendar where we left off, but objection was made to that course. I am within my rights in moving to proceed to the consideration of the bill now. I hesitate to do so, however, if the Senator insists that I should allow it to go over.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say frankly to the Senator that I am not sure whether my correspondents objected to the bill as passed by the House, which, I understand, allows a deposit without limit, or whether they would object to the proposal to change the amount from $500 to $2,000.

Mr. BRYAN. Let me make this suggestion to the Senator from New Hampshire: Will the Senator send for his correspondence and allow the bill to be temporarily passed over, with the understanding that before the morning hour expires I shall move to proceed to its consideration?

Mr. GALLINGER. I can not object to the Senator moving to take up the bill if he chooses to do so.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. BRYAN. Does the Senator mean that I shall make the motion now, or would he prefer to have it made later?

Mr. GALLINGER. I would much prefer to have the bill go over for the day, but of course it is within the right of the Senator to move to take it up.

Mr. BRYAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7967, the objection to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Let me ask the Senator from Florida if this is a unanimous report from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads?

Mr. BRYAN. It is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). The motion is not debatable.

Mr. BRYAN. It is a unanimous report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7967) to amend the act approved June 25, 1910, authorizing a postal savings system.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 5, to strike out the words "provides that" and insert "reads 'but,'" so as to read:

That such part of section 6 of the act approved June 25, 1910, authorizing a system of postal savings depositories as reads "but no one shall be permitted to deposit more than $100 in any one calendar month" is hereby.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 1, line 7, after the word "hereby," to strike out "repealed" and insert: "amended to read as follows: 'but the balance to the credit of any person, exclusive of accumulated interest, shall not exceed $2,000.'"

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire to ask a question of the Senator from Florida. In the report upon the bill it is stated that—

The millions on deposit have been released for commercial purposes in the very localities from which they were withdrawn, for, under the present law, 95 per cent of all postal savings receipts are deposited in the qualified banks of the localities where they originate.

Is the Senator from Florida sure that that is the present law?

Mr. BRYAN. I have no reason to doubt it, Mr. President, unless the Senator means that perhaps the Federal reserve bank act changed that provision.

Mr. CUMMINS. My recollection of the law in that respect is that only 60 or 65 per cent of the money deposited in the post offices is required to be deposited in the banks of the localities in which it is gathered.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is not so now, I think.

Mr. BRYAN. That may be, but there is no prohibition against the deposit of all in the local banks.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I think very much of the merit or demerit of the bill possibly is dependent upon the accuracy of that statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. SHIVELY. I wish to make an inquiry. I understand the evidences of deposits in the postal savings banks are not taxable by the local authorities.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think not.

Mr. SHIVELY. They are not under the present statute?

Mr. GALLINGER. No.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think not.

Mr. SHIVELY. The question in my mind was how far we could increase the amount to be deposited and not furnish a facility to escape taxation.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, when the act was originally passed some three or four years ago there was a very earnest controversy in the Senate with regard to this point on which I am now inquiring. It arose, I think, originally upon an amendment proposed by myself and afterwards by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. We were of the opinion that it would do great harm to these communities if the moneys gathered in the post offices were brought to Washington and used here in the Treasury instead of being deposited in the banks of the localities, and in that way serve the commercial needs of those localities. Originally we passed an amendment which did require the money to be so deposited; but afterwards, under some influence which I remember very well but which I shall not attempt to describe, that amendment was in part reconsidered, and my recollection is that in its stead only 60 or 65 per cent—I can not remember just the amount—was required to be kept in the locality.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. BRYAN. It must be true now, I take it, that 95 per cent is required to be deposited in the locality from which the money is taken, because I remember the representative of the department stated that all the money was put right back into the localities from the post offices.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator from Florida mean to say that the law requires 95 per cent of it to be so deposited or that the Treasury Department has of its own will or pleasure so deposited it?

Mr. BRYAN. I understand from the statement of the representative of the department that 95 per cent is now required to be deposited in the localities.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am quite clear in my recollection with regard to the law, because it was the subject of a great deal of debate in the Senate.

Mr. BRYAN. Whether it is required to be deposited in the locality or not, the statement is that it is all deposited there.

Mr. CUMMINS. But I, for one, am not willing to modify the law so that an additional sum can be gathered in the post offices and held to the credit of the various depositors and the money so deposited brought here or used for any purpose except the commercial necessities of the localities by being deposited in these banks. I think it would be very bad policy to increase the amount of these deposits unless we at the same time protect the communities in which they are gathered.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. BRYAN. I agree with the Senator in his proposition, and if he will frame an amendment requiring the deposits to be placed in the localities from which it is taken I think it will be acceptable to the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Utah will remember what the law is, I am sure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the law creating Federal reserve banks. That law specifically provides, in section 15, that postal savings shall be deposited in reserve banks in the localities in which the banks are located.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask the Senator to speak so that we can hear him.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought I was doing so.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator's back was turned toward us.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there has already been an amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW], allowing the postal savings fund to be deposited in not only the member banks under the reserve bank act but in private and State banks as well. I am quite sure that the law now, I will say to the Senator from Iowa, requires that the postal funds shall be deposited in member banks, and the law does not specify——

Mr. CUMMINS. It requires them to be deposited in the reserve banks.

Mr. SMOOT. In the reserve banks.

Mr. CUMMINS. But that does not answer the point I made, that the deposit of 95 per cent of it, or all of it, with the Federal reserve banks is to take it away from the localities in which it is gathered.

Mr. SMOOT. That is providing there is not a reserve bank in the locality.

Mr. SWANSON and Mr. REED addressed the Chair.

Mr. SMOOT. I know there are a number of cities, and quite large cities, that will have no member banks; they are State institutions; and under the law as it now exists postal funds can not be deposited in those banks; the money will have to be sent away from that community entirely. So the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] proposes to allow wherever there is no member bank in a city, the deposit to be made as it is to-day, in a State or private bank.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. WEST. In a community where there is but one national bank, say, if this increase is allowed, would that bank receive all the deposits?

Mr. SMOOT. All the deposits from the postal savings fund under the new law.

Mr. WEST. Under the new law?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; but if there is in that State——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri has sought recognition. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield; but I think the Senator from Georgia was first on his feet.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have a copy of the act that we have been discussing. Section 9 reads:

That postal savings funds received under the provisions of this act shall be deposited in solvent banks, whether organized under National or State laws, being subject to National or State supervision and examination, and the sums deposited shall bear interest at the rate of not less than 2½ per cent per annum, which rate shall be uniform throughout the United States and Territories thereof; but 5 per cent of such funds shall be withdrawn by the board of trustees and kept with the Treasurer of the United States, who shall be treasurer of the board of trustees, in lawful money as a reserve.

Mr. SMOOT. That has been amended, however, by the recent act.

Mr. BURTON. If the Senator from Iowa will yield to me, I will state that there is a further provision in the act.

Mr. CUMMINS. To which act is the Senator from Ohio now referring?

Mr. BURTON. The postal savings bank act of June 25, 1910:

Not exceeding 30 per cent of the amount of such funds may at any time be withdrawn by the trustees for investment in bonds or other securities of the United States, it being the intent of this act that the residue of such funds, amounting to 65 per cent thereof, shall remain on deposit in the banks in each State and Territory willing to receive the same under the terms of this act, and shall be a working balance and also a fund which may be withdrawn for investment in bonds or other securities of the United States—

Now follows a significant portion—

but only by direction of the President, and only when, in his judgment, the general welfare and the interests of the United States so require.

The idea seems to have been that 95 per cent should remain in banks in the vicinage, but that in the case specified 30 per cent of the amount, leaving a remainder of 65 per cent, might be withdrawn and invested in bonds or other securities of the United States.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, that is precisely as I remember it. The money is first deposited in the post office. Then 95 per cent of it may go temporarily into the banks of the locality, 30 per cent of it can immediately be withdrawn for investment in the bonds of the United States, and the remaining 65 per cent can be withdrawn by the direction of the President, when in his judgment the general welfare would be promoted by so doing.

Then came our currency act of this year, in which it is provided that these deposits so to be made in the banks of the locality can only be made in the member banks. If there be in a particular city or town no member bank, then that locality is at once deprived of the entire deposit; or if there be half the banks in the town member banks and half not, then the half that are member banks are permitted to have the entire deposit. Such is the law at the present time. I think when we propose to increase, as we do here, the deposits that may be made by a particular depositor, and in that way encourage the amount of the aggregate deposits, we ought to take some measure that will protect the banks of the locality. There is no such protection here.

I had it not in mind that the bill would be before the Senate this morning, and therefore I am not prepared with any appropriate amendment to bring about the state of affairs that I think should exist. I hope that the bill will not be finally disposed of until we can have a little further time for its consideration.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the original law does provide for the withdrawal of the 30 per cent of postal deposits at the discretion of the board in charge for investment in Government securities. It requires 65 per cent permanently to be left on deposit and permits 95 per cent permanently to be left on deposit, but allows the withdrawal of 30 per cent to be invested.

Mr. CUMMINS. It requires 65 per cent to be left on deposit unless the President shall certify that the public interest requires its withdrawal. I do not remember just how much of the actual deposits has been withdrawn for the purpose of being invested in bonds, but possibly this report will tell. Yes; it is stated that there has been invested up to this time in Government bonds $2,389,120 of a total deposit of $33,818,870.

Mr. President, I have made these suggestions because they seem to be important; but I repeat, I am not prepared to offer the amendment that is necessary in order to preserve this status. What objection has the Senator from Florida to having this bill passed over until the next time we take up the calendar?

Mr. BRYAN. I do not know when that will be. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] has a bill to so amend the Federal reserve act as to accomplish the purpose which the Senator from Iowa seeks to accomplish. I am in thorough sympathy with the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am informed that the Senator from Kansas has an amendment which touches the subject. I think that, in view of his engagement in the Interoceanic Canal Committee, he ought at least to be notified that we are considering a matter in which he has evidently great interest.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, it seems to me that this bill ought to go over until the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] is here. There are some objections to the bill which I should like to point out to the Senate without regard to the point which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] has raised. I will not take the time to do so now if the Senator from Florida is willing to have the bill go over until the calendar is again called. Otherwise I shall want to take some time to point out what I think are some serious objections to the bill.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. It seems to me this matter can be very easily adjusted. As I understand, the Post Office Committee had no purpose to change the existing law in connection with the postal deposits except as to the amount that could be deposited. Of course, the Federal reserve act recently passed does modify the provisions of the postal savings bank law. It seems to me if an amendment were offered to this bill simply reaffirming the existing law on this subject as it stood prior to the passage of the Federal reserve act that would solve the problem. If this bill contained such a provision and were enacted into law, being passed subsequently to the Federal reserve act, it would, of course, prevail. It seems to me simply to add an amendment to this measure reasserting the law of 1910 as suggested by the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] would obviate all objections which have been urged.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. WEEKS. There are other objections to this bill. I presume the bill comes with a unanimous report from the Post Office Committee, though I am not informed as to that; I was not a member of the committee when the bill was reported; but the purpose of the bill is entirely contrary to the purposes of the original act. It was never intended, so far as I am informed, that the postal savings banks should be brought into competition with other banks. This bill does put the postal savings banks into direct competition with the savings banks everywhere, and would, in my judgment, particularly affect the mutual savings banks of the Eastern States. I think that ought to be considered before we pass this proposed legislation. I should like to have an opportunity to point out to the Senate in what way this bill will affect the mutual savings banks, and other savings banks everywhere, for that matter. For that reason I think the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] ought to be willing to let the bill go over until the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] is here and until the calendar is again called.

Mr. WEST and Mr. SWANSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To whom does the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President, the point is this: Would not this legislation have a tendency to increase the amount deposited at one time? Would it not have a tendency in any community, at first, to concentrate the money in one depository?

Mr. CUMMINS. It evidently would have a tendency to increase the amount of deposits in the post offices.

Mr. WEST. Yes, sir.

Mr. CUMMINS. And inasmuch as the distribution now is different from the distribution when the postal savings bank law was passed, it would have a tendency to concentrate the deposits in certain banks of a locality and to exclude certain other banks.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. SWANSON. Would not the reenactment of the provisions contained in the act of 1910, as to the amount that must be deposited in local banks, as to the character of those banks, and so forth, entirely eliminate the objections made by the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CUMMINS. So far as I am concerned, I have made the point that was first in my mind. I think it is well worthy of consideration, however, whether we ought to increase the limit of deposits in the postal savings banks. There is very much to be said against the policy that we would thus adopt. However that may be, we are in a position now of having modified this law by the banking and currency act; that is to say, we have designated certain banks in which the deposit must be made. I take it that it is not the purpose of the Senator from Virginia to change the banking and currency act by an amendment at this time; but the fact that the deposits are thus limited to certain banks is very material when I am considering the question of whether the limit of the deposit ought to be increased. I am not prepared, Mr. President, as I said before, to present an amendment, and I feel that I am occupying the time of the Senate rather aimlessly when I can not present what I desire to present in the way of a modification of the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to say to the Senator, if he will yield for that purpose, that I have an amendment prepared which I have taken from the bill of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW]. One of the objections would be completely covered by this amendment, and, if the Senator will yield for that purpose, I will offer now an amendment to the bill, to be added as a new section.

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as a new section to the bill the following:

SEC. 2. That the act entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of Federal reserve banks, to furnish an elastic currency, to afford means of rediscounting commercial paper, to establish a more effective supervision of banking in the United States, and for other purposes," approved December 23, 1913, be amended as follows: In section 15 strike out the words "or of the postal savings."

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have offered as an amendment, omitting the formal part, the bill presented by the Senator from Kansas. If that should be adopted here as an amendment to this bill, it would obviate the difficulty which I think everybody concedes to be formidable; that is——

Mr. CUMMINS. That is to say, it would leave the postal savings law just as it is.

Mr. NORRIS. It would leave the postal savings law just as it was before the adoption of the currency act; in other words, it would permit the deposit of postal savings funds in all banks, including member banks and those that are not member banks, just as was the case prior to the enactment of the currency act.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I raise a question of order. I should like to inquire who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] has the floor.

Mr. REED. I should like to inquire how, if the Senator from Iowa has the floor, amendments can be offered to the bill by other Senators?

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Iowa yielded to me for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa yielded to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. REED. I should like to inquire, Mr. President, if a Senator can hold the floor and yield it to have an amendment to the bill offered, while four or five Senators are on the floor at the same time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are not four or five on the floor.

Mr. REED. There were.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that there is no one on the floor except the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. GALLINGER. I inquire if there is not a pending amendment reported by the committee which must have priority?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is pending an amendment reported by the committee, and the question is on agreeing to that amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will hold the floor only long enough to say that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] obviates the objection that I originally made. Of course it does not reach the objection suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the pending amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 7, it is proposed to strike out the word "repealed" and insert "amended to read as follows: 'but the balance to the credit of any person, exclusive of accumulated interest, shall not exceed $2,000.'"

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire to be heard a moment on that proposed amendment. First, I ask the Senator from Florida the precise meaning of the proviso commencing in line 12, page 1, reading as follows:

Provided, That no interest shall be paid on such part of the balance to the credit of any person as is in excess of $1,000.

Does that mean that $2,000 can be deposited, but interest will be paid only on $1,000?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is it, exactly.

Mr. BRYAN. That is the intention.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, that improves the bill from my viewpoint.

Mr. President, I always hesitate to make a suggestion which relates to my own community or my own people, because I think my associates in the Senate will bear me out in the statement that I am not in the habit of taking provincial views of public questions; but we have savings banks in New England, and they have received a pretty severe blow of late in a direction that I will not stop to discuss to-day. Their deposits are taxable, ordinarily, at a lower rate than other property; but we derive an income from the deposits in our savings banks, which are very numerous in New England, and in which there is a large amount of money deposited.

When the postal savings bank bill was up for consideration that very matter was discussed. I made certain suggestions about it, and we had the assurance, practically, that the purpose was not to inaugurate a system that would come in competition with the savings banks in New England. The postal savings banks, it was admitted, would keep a small amount of money out of other savings banks, and we were quite willing that that should be done, but the postal savings bank system was not designed to be a competitive system, and with that understanding the bill was passed without any serious controversy. Now, I hesitate, and my people hesitate, to inaugurate a new system whereby a very considerable amount of money will be kept out of our savings banks and placed under this new system and be removed from taxation in our community.

I have an impression that the objections which my correspondents have raised are directed to the House bill, which opened the door wide and actually created a competitive system of banking with our savings banks; and if the proposition now were to pass the House bill, I should resist it to the best of my ability; and it is safe to say that probably the bill would not pass to-day under those circumstances.

The committee has improved the bill very much, but I am going to suggest to the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN], who is always courteous and is always reasonable, that if we amend this bill so as to allow a deposit of $1,000 in place of $500, it is enlarging it to a very considerable extent, and that we might go that far with safety to our institutions already established, and in which there is, as I have said, a very large amount of money deposited and a very large amount loaned out all over the country.

I do not know how large a proportion of the money of our savings banks in New England is now loaned out in the great West, but there was a period in the history of our country, not long ago, when the deposits in our savings banks in New England, and in my own State in particular, were largely loaned upon farm lands in the West. Most of them, I think, perhaps have been paid, because prosperity has come to the West to a greater extent than to New England; but, nevertheless, that money is there; it is loaned out at a fair rate of interest; interest is paid to the depositors at about 3½ or 4 per cent, and the deposits are taxed.

I think I am entitled to say in behalf of the people among whom I live, and whose interest is my interest, that we ought to go cautiously about this matter, and not open this door wide enough to cripple to any very serious extent those institutions that concern almost all our people. More than one-half of the citizens of New Hampshire a little while ago, and almost 50 per cent now, men, women, and children, have deposits in these savings banks.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether the bill would be less objectionable to him in the form in which it passed the House?

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, not at all. It would be very objectionable in that form.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senate agrees with the committee amendment?

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to have the amount reduced to $1,000 from $2,000, as reported by the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. Has the Senator noticed in the bill that provision is made that no interest shall be paid on any amount in excess of $1,000?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; I have noticed that, and it occurs to me that that is not a very wise provision. I do not know why a poor man, if he is permitted to deposit money in a bank, should not be given some rate of interest on it.

Mr. NORRIS. I presume the Senator's objection comes mostly from the fear that money will be drawn out of the savings banks. If that is true, I should think a limitation to $1,000 of the amount on which interest shall be paid would bring about practically an actual limitation to $1,000. At least, the amount in excess of $1,000 certainly would be money that theretofore had not been deposited anywhere; and in that case the fear of the Senator about money being drawn out of savings banks would not be well founded.

Mr. GALLINGER. That improves the bill so far as the savings banks are concerned, without a doubt. It allows interest only on a thousand dollars. Nevertheless, it keeps $2,000 out of the banks if they choose to deposit it there.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator there. Does he not think that any person who would make a deposit of a greater amount than $1,000, so that he would be depositing money upon which he would be getting no interest, even if the postal savings bank law did not exist, probably would not deposit money in a bank? The very fact that he was depositing it there without interest, when he could deposit it in an ordinary savings bank and get interest, would show a fear of the banks so great that probably if he did not deposit his money in the postal savings bank he would keep it concealed somewhere, and thus it would be kept out of circulation.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator is right on that point. I do not know that much of that money would go into our banks; perhaps a very small proportion of it.

Some Senator has suggested that it is not the foreign element and the poorer classes that are depositing in these banks. I think in New England it is that class—the foreign element—the Italians who have been in the habit in their own country of depositing in Government banks, and who have a fear of our ordinary savings banks.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, all of this was considered by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. The postal savings system is not paying the Government now. It is being run at a loss. The Government pays 2 per cent and loans its money out at 2½ per cent. The difference is not sufficient to make it self-sustaining. It was thought that if the Government paid interest only on amounts up to $1,000 it would get some deposits in excess of $1,000, and that possibly the system could be made self-sustaining in that way. We have no purpose to make any money by it, but we thought the system should be self-sustaining.

We also had evidence before us that it would be beneficial to the banks. If there is a run, if there is a panic in a city and people lose confidence in banks, but have confidence in the Government, they can go and make deposits with the Government of $1,000 or $2,000, and the Government will at once deposit the money in a bank, to continue in circulation. We were satisfied that this system, instead of being injurious to the banks in time of panic, in time of want of confidence, would really be efficient in preventing a panic in a city or community.

I can readily understand why that would be. If there is a panic in a town and people lose confidence in the banks, and it is an unwarranted lack of confidence, they can go to the post office and deposit this money, and the Government will take it and deposit it back in the same bank, and the money will continue in circulation, and that may very readily stop the panic.

That was one consideration that influenced the committee. We thought the House bill as amended was the best way to make the system self-sustaining, the best way to help the banks, the best way to prevent the keeping of money in stockings and withdrawing it from circulation. We were satisfied that an extension of the postal savings system would put into circulation more money that is now locked up for lack of confidence in the banks than would be taken from the banks, as an aggregate, in the country.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, that matter was discussed very fully when the original bill was passed. Of course I am not familiar with the investigation made by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. I am not a member of that committee. I do not see how this would prevent panics at all. If these men have none of their money in the savings banks, and there is a run on a bank, I do not see how deposits in the postal savings banks would have any effect upon that run.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me further?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. SWANSON. Here is a man who loses confidence in all the ordinary banks in a city. He takes out his money, locks it up in his safe, or puts it in his pocket. He has confidence in the Government. If he can deposit that money in a postal savings bank, he does so, and he gets 2 per cent interest on it.

Mr. GALLINGER. And that very circumstance may wreck the bank.

Mr. SWANSON. The Government goes and deposits this money, the same day, in one of the local banks. The Government does not lock it up.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Government would not deposit it in savings banks.

Mr. SWANSON. It would deposit it in some banks there that could aid the savings banks. If one of the local savings banks were a depository for Government funds, it could be deposited there. The Government can select them as well as any other banks.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator that that is true, providing the banks have the collateral to deposit with the Government at the time the post office is ready to deposit the amount withdrawn from other banks. They must first deposit with the Government certain bonds—bonds of the Government of the United States, bonds of the city, or bonds of a school district approved by the Postal Savings Board here in Washington. The bank may be completely wrecked before ever it can purchase the required and acceptable bonds; and if the bank did not have the bonds on hand it would have to take the actual money out of the banks and buy the bonds for collateral to be deposited with the Government.

Mr. SWANSON. Under conditions like that, when there is a panic, such securities can be obtained. They are loaned. What they need is money. If a bank is solvent, it can always get sufficient collateral to have these deposits. It has been done in time of panic. People have loaned United States bonds to banks to get deposits in time of panic. This is simply an effort to bring money out of the pockets of the people and put it into circulation. The experience of every country in the world has shown that it has put into circulation money that otherwise would be kept out.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have but a few more words to say, and I will now conclude.

My suggestion is that if we establish a system of banking—whether we call it a postal savings bank system, or anything else—that opens an avenue for men to withdraw money from our savings banks and deposit it in these banks with the security of the Government behind it, and if we make it liberal enough, we endanger the perpetuity of our ordinary banks, and I hesitate to do anything in that line.

The truth is that ninety-nine times out of a hundred runs upon banks are simply caused by fright. There is no real sense in them. I think we do not want to open a channel whereby, upon a rumor, men can rush to our savings banks in New England, withdraw their money, deposit it in postal savings banks, and in that way do great harm to the savings banks themselves.

Our savings banks in New England are an institution of which we are very proud, and we want to protect them in every proper way. As an illustration, we have in New England 3,464,083 depositors in savings banks. The total of the deposits is $1,426,805,782.05. Those deposits are small, as a rule. They are loaned out at a low rate of interest; and, as I said a moment ago, they are taxable to the State.

While I am not going to offer any factious opposition to this bill, I think we ought to be careful in this legislation not to overreach ourselves, and in trying to do good to one class of our people do harm to another.

For that reason I am going to propose an amendment, which I hope will be agreed to, reducing the amount which may be deposited from $2,000 to $1,000, and the amount upon which interest may be paid from $1,000 to $500.

I offer that as a substitute for the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire offers an amendment which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 9, in the committee amendment, the Senator from New Hampshire proposes to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$1,000," and on page 2, line 2, to strike out "$1,000" and insert "$500."

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I think the suggestion made by the Senator from New Hampshire is preferable to the bill as reported by the committee; but either one of them, in my judgment, is obnoxious to the whole purposes of the postal savings bank law.

The arguments that were advanced for the passage of the postal savings bank law in 1910 were that a certain percentage of our population, largely those who came from foreign countries, familiar with government banks but not familiar with joint-stock or other private banks, did not deposit their money in the banks here, but did send it to their native countries to be deposited in the government banks there, thereby taking from our resources a considerable amount of money which might be kept here if suitable arrangements were made for security; and that there was in hiding a certain amount of money which would not be deposited by its owners in any bank except a government bank, through fear, and for that reason only.

For those two reasons the agitation for a postal savings bank became sufficiently acute in 1910 so that the present law was passed. It was passed with those two purposes in mind—that the foreign depositor might certainly have a safe place in which to deposit his money, and that the hoarder of money might have an assurance that if his money were deposited in a Government bank he could get it when he needed it.

There are, however, in various parts of the country savings banks, both stock banks and mutual banks. Some of them have very large deposits. Those in Massachusetts have an aggregate deposit of about $850,000,000. Of the population of Massachusetts—three and a quarter million—more than two and a quarter million are depositors in savings banks. They are scattered throughout the State. Under the law only $1,600 can be deposited in a Massachusetts savings bank by any one person, and that includes accumulations of interest; and yet we are proposing in this bill to allow $2,000 to be deposited in a postal savings bank by one person, thereby giving to the postal savings bank in Massachusetts a privilege not conferred by the State law which regulates and governs our mutual savings banks.

In my judgment, it never was intended by anyone that the Government should be put into the savings-bank business. It was intended that there should be these depositories, convenient to all depositors, where a small amount of money could be deposited and kept in circulation by redepositing it in the local banks. If, however, you should pass this bill as it is now, you would open the way to allow every depositor in every Massachusetts savings bank to withdraw every cent he has in a Massachusetts savings bank and redeposit it in the Government post office.

I claim, in the first place, that the Government is not equipped to conduct this business as it should be conducted. It is a burden and a hardship to the depositors themselves, because they get in the mutual savings banks from 3½ to 4 per cent, year in and year out, and they get only 2 per cent in the postal savings banks. We do not want to encourage them to deposit their money in the postal savings banks. We want to encourage them to save their money by putting it in other savings banks, joint-stock banks, or mutual banks. We want to encourage them in every way to save their money and to invest their money, as far as possible, in Government securities; but we do not want to encourage them to deposit their money in banks where they will get only 2 per cent for it when they can readily get 3½ or 4 per cent for it by depositing it in other banks, where it can be safely invested for them.

The whole purpose of a savings bank is to enable the individual of very small means, having very small savings, not having the knowledge or facilities required to invest his money himself safely, to put it somewhere where it can be joined with other moneys of similar character and invested in such securities that there will be absolute safety as a result. By increasing the amount which may be deposited in the Government banks we are putting the Government into the savings-bank business to a greater extent and deeper than the State of Massachusetts has put its mutual savings banks, and they have been in existence nearly 100 years.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WEEKS. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I will call his attention to the fact, with which doubtless he is familiar, that the average deposit in the savings banks of Massachusetts is $378 and in New Hampshire it is $465. For all the New England States $411 is the average deposit. So we are trying to take care of the poor people.

Mr. WEEKS. The reason the deposit in the New Hampshire banks is somewhat larger than the deposit in the banks in Massachusetts is because, I think, $5,000 may be deposited in the New Hampshire savings banks by one person.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; I think we have not any limit.

Mr. WEEKS. We have in Massachusetts a limit of $1,600. If any Senator in this Chamber went to a Massachusetts savings bank with a thousand dollars and wished to deposit it, the treasurer of the bank would refuse to take it. He would say to the Senator, "Your facilities for investing your money are just as good as are the facilities of the board of trustees of this savings bank. The purpose of this savings bank is to enable persons of very small means who have not the knowledge and facility required for investing their money safely to come here and deposit it and have us invest it for them with other funds of a similar character."

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to inquire, if the Senator will permit me, what action was taken with regard to House bill 9318?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator from Kansas that it was passed over.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is satisfactory.

Mr. WEEKS. There was another provision in the postal savings bank bill which has been entirely lost sight of in the proposed legislation, and that was the attempt to get the depositors in the postal savings banks to reinvest their money in Government bonds. That was the reason for putting the limit of $500 on the amount of deposits that could be put in the postal savings banks, hoping that when the depositor got $500 saved he would turn around and invest his money at a higher rate of interest in a Government security.

I think the rate of interest which we placed on those securities was too low. Time has demonstrated that it should have been made 3 per cent instead of 2½ per cent; but it would enable the depositor to get one-half of 1 per cent more than he is receiving from the Government in any case and have exactly the same security, because he would have a Government bond. It was believed, in framing that law, that we could not do a wiser thing than to encourage our people, and especially those of small means——

INSPECTION AND GRADING OF GRAIN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 120.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 120) to provide for the inspection and grading of grain entering into interstate commerce, and to secure uniformity in standards and classification of grain, and for other purposes.

[Mr. SHERMAN resumed and concluded the speech begun by him on the 10th instant. See Appendix.]

Mr. NELSON obtained the floor.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to his colleague?

Mr. NELSON. I yield.

Mr. CLAPP. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The junior Senator from Minnesota suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SHIVELY] is unavoidably absent on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, if I thought this grain-inspection bill would be of benefit and advantage to the farmers of the Northwest—to the grain farmers of Minnesota—and that it would not absolutely break up and utterly destroy a valuable State grain-inspection system which we have built up in Minnesota in the last 28 years, I should certainly not oppose the bill. I have no other interest in this legislation than that of the farmer. I have never dealt in wheat except to sell the wheat which I have raised on my own land. I have no interest, either directly or indirectly, in elevators or warehouses, and have never had any. My interest has been and is wholly in the welfare of the farmers of our State.

As the governor of the State of Minnesota from January 1, 1893, to February 1, 1895, I drafted and was instrumental in getting the legislature to pass one of the most important laws relating to grain inspection—a law that has proved more effective to protect our farmers than has any other of our laws on that subject. It is a law to which I shall hereafter refer more in detail, and a law the like of which I do not think any other State has on its statute books. I refer to the so-called country elevator law.

So far as I know we have in Minnesota no objection to, in fact we favor, the establishment by the Federal Government of standard grades of grain; but I shall call your attention later to the fact that when you come to establish standards for wheat and other small grain, it will be necessary at least to establish from 10 to 12 different classes of standards or grades for wheat, owing to the great varieties of wheat raised in this vast country of ours.

To the Lever bill, so-called—and a similar bill has been introduced in the Senate, I believe, by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]—in its essential features we have no objection; such a law would not destroy our State grain-inspection system. I have heard of no complaint of our present system of grain inspection from the farmers in Minnesota; we have had no complaint from them for many years; not since we put into effect what I have already referred to and shall hereafter refer to as our country elevator law. The only complaint I have heard of is that which has been made by a small set of commission men who have given themselves the name of an equity association. Two or three enterprising grain commission men in Minneapolis have styled themselves—whether they are incorporated or not I do not know—the equity association or something of that kind. They have made war, not upon our grain-inspection system, but upon the methods of doing business on the grain exchange in the chamber of commerce. They started an investigation before our legislature a year ago. One of the association, who admits that he was its lawyer—and some claim that he was a stockholder or partner of the association—is now a Member of the other House of Congress; and he has brought up the same matter in that House for investigation. I inquired of him the other day when I met him, "What is your grievance? Is it against the board of trade, or is it against our system of State inspection in the State of Minnesota?" He assured me, "We have no complaint to make of the grain-inspection system of Minnesota; our complaint is, and our objection is, to the method of carrying on business on the grain exchange."

Mr. President, I have been in close touch with the farmers of Minnesota for more than 30 years—in fact, I have been one of them—and during the last 12 or 15 years, while this proposed legislation has been pending in Congress in one form or another, I have received no complaint from our farmers against our State grain-inspection system, and no demand has come from them for a system of Federal grain inspection.

This bill, Mr. President, is simply in line with a movement which has been so pronounced in recent years to withdraw as much power of regulation as possible from the States and to lodge it in the Federal Government. I am one of those old-fashioned men who believe that the several States should retain the power to regulate their domestic affairs as far as possible. The States are in closer touch with their citizens than is the Federal Government; they know better what the needs of their people are; they know better what legislative remedies are required; and they are in every way more competent to deal with subjects of this kind than is the Federal Government at Washington. As I have said, however, there has grown up a tendency in recent years whenever there has been a grievance against a State government or against the administration of affairs by a State to appeal to the Federal Government. There has arisen a class of men who always invoke the aid of the Federal Government and say, "We must put the power into the hands of Uncle Sam; the Federal Government is the cure-all." In this manner by gradual stages power of regulation is sought to be abstracted from the States and conferred upon the Federal Government.

The State of Minnesota has been one of the most progressive States not only in the matter of the grading and inspection of grain, but also in the matter of railway regulation. Minnesota was one of the pioneer States in this direction. It was one of the first States in the West to establish a railway commission and to attempt to regulate the railroads and railroad rates. We have from time to time added to the original legislation on these lines by increasing the powers of the railroad commission, and in other ways improving conditions, until to-day I venture to say there is not a State in the Union which has a more comprehensive and more effective system of railway regulation than has the State of Minnesota. I may say, furthermore, that the low rates which we are to-day accorded on the railroads in Minnesota have not been brought about through the Interstate Commerce Commission; they have not been brought about through Federal legislation or the interstate-commerce law; but they have come to us because of the work of our own legislature and of our own railway commission. I can to-day buy a ticket from St. Paul to my own home, a distance of 140 miles, at a cheaper rate than I can buy a ticket from here to the city of New York one way; in other words, I can get a ticket for 2 cents a mile; and with us to-day in the State of Minnesota, whether a man travels 1 mile or 1,000 miles, the fare is only 2 cents a mile.

So it is, Mr. President, with our grain-inspection system. We have been in the forefront in that matter. We have gradually adopted the most comprehensive and effective system of grain inspection, I believe, that exists anywhere in this country. I say this without criticizing the systems that prevail in any other State.

Eight of the great grain-growing States in the Union have adopted State systems of grain inspection and grading. I have a communication from the Agricultural Department, signed by the crop technologist in charge, showing this fact.

The following-named States are the States that now have State grain-inspection systems, to wit: Minnesota, Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, Wisconsin, Montana, Washington, and Oklahoma—all of them great wheat-producing States.

The basis of the claim for this legislation as advocated by the Senators from North Dakota—and they place it all on that ground—is that the grain-inspection system of Minnesota is a bad system. It is because of the aspersion which they have cast upon that system and because of the fact that they base their claim for Federal inspection upon the fact that the State of Minnesota has a vicious and bad system that I shall have to call your attention at greater detail than I otherwise would care to do to the main features of the Minnesota system.

Before I proceed to do that, however, I will call attention to another matter. While I am not here to defend the methods of doing business of the so-called grain exchanges and their system of "spot" and "future" sales, I desire to call the attention of Senators for a moment to the advantages which we have under our system as compared with the systems in other countries. I have myself for years past labored under the same prejudices as some other Senators labor under now concerning the methods of selling grain on the grain exchanges of the country and have considered their practices detrimental to the interest of the farmer. I do not ask you to take my ipse dixit on this branch of the question, but I shall quote to you from a work entitled "Wheat Fields and Markets of the World," by Rollin E. Smith, published in 1908. Mr. Smith is a great grain expert. He traveled over all of the principal countries of Europe; examined their systems of grain inspection and inspected their wheat fields and the lands on which they raise the grain; in other words, he endeavored to become entirely conversant with the grain business both from the standpoint of the farmer and from the standpoint of the distributor and dealer in grain.

As all Senators know, one of the greatest wheat-raising countries is Russia; in fact the wheat crop of Russia, I think, one year with another largely exceeds ours, and Russia is a far greater exporter of wheat than are we. The greatest port for exporting grain in Russia is Odessa on the Black Sea in southern Russia immediately contiguous to the great steppes—what we would call in this country prairies—of the Don and Volga regions, a prairie country, where a great quantity of the Russian grain is produced. Now, let me read from this book in order that those who are interested in the farmer may know how they handle grain in Russia:

> Moving the wheat crop in Russia is altogether a different matter from what it is in the United States or Canada, where the great line elevator companies and other buyers have elevators at every railroad station, with ample facilities for receiving all the grain brought to them. Moreover, in America and Canada buyers pay the farmer the ruling prices at the market centers, less freight and other charges, and about 1 per cent margin of profit. Or, if the farmer prefers, he may ship his grain to the nearest market, to some member of a grain exchange, where he will get the same price that any big elevator company would. Furthermore, he will be advised of the hour of the day his grain was sold, and to whom. His interests are safeguarded in every way possible by the grain exchanges.

Now I come to the description of buying and handling grain in Russia:

> In Russia, even near the great exporting city of Odessa, the method of buying and handling grain is of the crudest and most primitive kind. The grain is sold by the peasants to speculators or to merchants—country storekeepers they would be called in America. And as the buyers are in the business for the profit they can make on the grain, it requires no great perception to see that they buy as cheaply as possible. In America the price makes no difference to the elevator company, for it "hedges" its grain immediately by selling it for future delivery in the pit.

In other words, a big elevator company which to-day buys from the farmer grain in any quantity at the market price, to protect itself, or cover itself, as the Senator from Illinois has well said, will immediately "hedge," as they call it, or sell an equal amount of grain for future delivery.

> To digress for a moment, the matter of speculation in wheat seems apropos at this point. While this is being written there is a bill in the House of Representatives and another in the Senate at Washington to prohibit future trading in grain. It is hoped by those who are interested in the measure to thus stop speculation in wheat. This is mentioned merely to contrast the American system of grain traffic with the lack of system where there are no great central markets; where the traffic is in the hands of individuals unrestrained by associations or organizations and with no price basis to work on. That is what America has grown out of; and while to abolish future trading would not reduce the grain business to the level of Russia, it would place the farmer at the mercy of the buyer. For, in the absence of future markets, where the elevator company can immediately sell for future delivery the grain bought in the country, it would not be safe to buy great quantities and carry it until there is a milling or an export demand.

Either the farmer would himself hold it until the actual consumptive demand brought him a good price, or he would be compelled to sell to some one willing to do so; and, of course, no one will buy wheat that he can not promptly sell, unless he gets it very cheap.

In other words, if the men who purchased grain from the farmer in large quantities were compelled to hold that grain for the future without knowing what the prices would be, they would run great risks and would not be able to buy it at so close a margin as they otherwise could. Under this system the elevator companies buy according to the market rates, less freight, insurance, elevator charges, and a margin of from 1 to 2 cents at the elevators, and immediately, in order to protect themselves against the future, they sell the same amount of wheat. That is called hedging. All our mills in Minnesota and elsewhere throughout the country—all the mills, big or small, engaged in merchant milling—have to engage in hedging. They buy a certain quantity of wheat for the purpose of manufacturing it into flour. They do not know whether that wheat will fall or rise in price in the future. The price of flour follows the price of wheat. In order to protect themselves for the future, all the millers throughout the country do what they call "hedging" to protect themselves.

I have known small country mills in Minnesota that were engaged in merchant milling for export to go out of business for the very reason that they were located in the country and were not conveniently situated to be able to do what they call a "hedging business." They said that without protecting themselves by hedging, and by selling wheat against what they bought, it was utterly impossible for them to carry on their business.

I continue reading from the book:

Now, this is the situation of the Russian peasant. He must sell his wheat to speculators, the amount they can take depending upon their means; or to merchants who, of course, buy on the same basis. Then the agents of exporting houses or jobbers at Odessa buy the wheat from the first buyers.

In other words, in Odessa they have no grain exchange. When wheat comes to Odessa they will have to sell it to those wheat merchants. There is no wheat exchange; and in order to protect themselves they buy on a much greater margin than they otherwise would do if they had a grain exchange.

In this connection I beg leave to quote a further statement from this book as bearing upon this question. I am simply calling attention to the fact. I am not here to defend the grain exchanges. This bill does not affect them. They can get along with any system, whether it is a Federal system or a State system, with their future sales.

In Germany, some years ago, they thought they would cure this evil of future trading in grain, and I quote from this same book the following:

A broad difference between the grain exchanges of America and those in Europe is that, in the markets of Europe, with the exception of Buda Pest, the trading in wheat is almost entirely confined to the members of the grain trade. The wheat markets on the Continent have all been more or less subject to agrarian legislation and prejudice, while the older prejudice against trading in breadstuffs has left its mark in England. A few years age an attempt was made by the agrarians in Hungary to place restrictions on the trading in grain in the Buda Pest market, but it was unsuccessful.

This is what I desire to call your attention to:

The extreme to which adverse legislation was carried in Germany is widely known in a general way. In brief, the Bourse law of 1896 prohibited future trading in grain and placed other restrictions on the trade. The result was that the Berlin brokers "seceded" and there was no open market at the Bourse; no quotations. No one had any trustworthy price basis and the grain growers were at the mercy of the provincial dealers. It is said that the Government at once recognized the disadvantages to all business interests through the lack of an exchange with its official quotations and it was not long before the minister of commerce opened negotiations with the brokers; but no agreement was arrived at until January, 1900.

By that time even the agrarians felt the necessity of an exchange. For although the growers could sell their grain in advance of delivery, they could not do it advantageously because of the absence of official quotations; and moreover there was no board of appeal for adjusting differences in grading.

The Berlin Produce Bourse was reopened on April 2, 1900—

After it had been closed four years.

There we have a case where, at the instance of what they call the agrarians or farming interests in Germany, composed mostly of large landowners—most of the men who actually cultivate the land are mere tenants—legislation was passed to close up the Bourse or the grain exchange. They thought it would help them. They had four years' experience with it, and they found it was detrimental and destructive to their interests, and they were very glad to go back to the old system.

But what are these grain exchanges? I will quote from this same authority, because Mr. Smith states it in much clearer and more exact language than I could state it.

Grain exchanges are corporations governed by a board of directors elected by the members; and the exchanges do not have any transactions in the markets. The corporation or association provides a place in which the buying and selling are done by its members; and one of its chief functions is to make and enforce rules for such buying and selling.

Besides officially recognizing the prices made daily in the exchanges, the associations perform a valuable service by widely distributing the quotations and permitting them to be distributed, thus placing it within the power of every one interested to learn the value of commodities.

An important function of the Chicago Board of Trade is the gathering of crop information from all countries, and this is supplied to other exchanges by its members by means of private wires, and given to the press. Members of the exchanges are continually gathering and disseminating crop and commercial news. And so information that could not otherwise be obtained is supplied to the readers of the market pages of the papers; and the farmer is kept as well informed on the condition of the crops of other countries and of the markets as are the brokers themselves.

I ask you to listen to this. This is Mr. Smith's statement:

After close association with and study of the markets for some 10 years, the writer believes that if there are any weak points in the general system (and there are some) they are not opposed to the agriculturist's interests. In fact, it is impossible to see how he could be better served than he is, from buying of his grain at the railroad station to the final selling of it to the miller or the exporter.

When the farmer's crop is ready to market he may ask, and he has a right to ask: Is the price that I get all that I could get under any other general market system? Are there any undue profits made anywhere between producer and manufacturer? Are the systems of inspection, grading, and weighing such that my interests are fully protected? * * * The farmer is, in fact, well represented on the floor of the grain exchanges, though he does not realize it. A large part of the active membership of exchanges is made up of commission men, dealers who sell on commission the grain that is shipped to them from country buyers or farmers. These commission men get a fixed rate of commission, but they strive to get the highest possible price for the grain, because a satisfactory transaction insures them further business. Many farmers ship their grain direct to the Western markets, and they are safe in doing so, for the rules of exchanges make it compulsory for the commission houses to report the name of the purchaser of all grain and the hour on which the sale was made. In Minnesota the weighing and inspection departments are State institutions, and certificates are sent to shippers.

They had an investigation before the legislature some years ago about the grain exchange at Minneapolis. I quote some of the testimony given at the hearing as bearing on this question. I read from Mr. Smith's book:

In this connection, some of the matter brought out at an "investigation" of the Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce by a committee appointed by the legislature during the session of 1906–7 is of interest. One of the members of the exchange who was asked to appear before the committee was the manager of one of the big milling companies. Another was the manager of a large elevator company.

The miller was asked what the result would be if the grain exchange should be disbanded.

"If the Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce were disbanded the millers would, in my opinion, be able to buy their wheat from 3 to 5 cents a bushel less than they do," was the reply.

"Why are you a member of the chamber of commerce?" was asked.

"It is necessary for me to be a member on account of the nature of our business. It is in the chamber that grain is sold. There is no reason why we should not buy grain from the farmers; but they don't offer us any."

What is the benefit of the chamber of commerce to the millers?

There are several. We can always get grain, we are dealing with responsible parties, and are enabled to do buisness on a more reliable basis. One great risk that we avoid in dealing with the grain firms is the constant danger of buying grain with chattel mortgages on it. When we buy a quantity of grain on the floor we look no further than the firms we are dealing with and they are responsible for the delivery of the grain.

Is the chamber of commerce of any benefit to the farmers?

I think that it is. Without the chamber and its excellent rules the risks assumed by the farmers in consigning grain would be much greater. Busines is done at a closer margin of profits and the farmer gets the benefit. Under the present system the farmer gets the quotations almost as soon as I do.

Asked about the Minnesota Farmers' Exchange which had sought admission to the chamber of commerce, the miller testified that some one representing the farmers had interviewed him with the object of devising some plan for direct dealing between the farmers and millers in order to wipe out the middleman's profits. The plan was not practical. "But," continued the miller, "I told him if he wanted my vote to close up the chamber of commerce he could have it."

The elevator manager explained that the exchange is a benefit to the elevator companies, as it supplies a market in which to dispose of the grain they buy. The membership gives them a standing with the trade and with bankers.

"What would be the result to terminal elevators of the disbanding of the chamber of commerce?" was asked.

"We would have to do business on an entirely different basis. Instead of being warehousemen and doing business for the storage charges, we would become merchants and buy the grain. We would then have to have larger margins, as we would have to take chances of the market fluctuations."

In this connection I will read further, as bearing on this question, as follows:

The grain business of Minneapolis all centers in the chamber of commerce. Every car of grain coming into Minneapolis, whether for mill, elevator, or commission house, is sold by sample on the tables at the exchange.

I want to call your attention to that. All cash sales in the grain exchange of the Chamber of Commerce of Minneapolis are made by sample. I shall show you, later on, how those samples are taken. It is only when you come to future sales that they are sold by grades.

For instance, where a man buys 5,000 bushels of cash wheat from farmers or from elevators, and he wants to grind that wheat into flour, or hold it, to protect himself he hedges. He goes to the grain exchange, and he sells the same amount of wheat for future delivery on the grain exchange. When you come to sell for future delivery, then you sell by grade—No. 1, No. 2, or whatever it may be; but all cash sales of wheat on the Board of Trade of Minneapolis are made, not on the grades of the Minnesota inspection, but on samples taken from the cars.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. NELSON. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Just so that we may understand this matter clearly; the car itself is inspected, is it not?

Mr. NELSON. Yes; the car and the grain is inspected by the State, but the grain is not sold on the State inspection.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is inspected, and then a sample is taken to the chamber of commerce?

Mr. NELSON. No; not by the State inspector.

Mr. McCUMBER. No.

Mr. NELSON. Not by the grain sampler.

Mr. McCUMBER. I did not say by whom. I say it is first inspected——

Mr. NELSON. No; it is not.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then, a sample is taken, not by the inspector—I did not say who took it there—but a sample of that wheat is taken to the board, and it is sold upon that sample.

Mr. NELSON. No; the Senator is utterly mistaken. The sample is not inspected. I shall show you later on how the business is done.

When cars loaded with wheat come into Minneapolis, in the early morning, the State samplers, as they are called, go there and take samples of the grain from each car. They take the number of the seal, they take the number of the car, on what road it is, and from what point it comes, but they know nothing about the ownership. They take a sample of the grain and put it in a sack which is sent and delivered to the State inspectors. At about the same time, or subsequently, the chamber of commerce send their samplers, who go there and take samples of their own out of the same car, giving the same numbers. The sample that they take is delivered to the chamber of commerce, and it is the sample thus taken by the samplers of the exchange and the board of trade that is used on the grain exchange. I shall show further—and I shall show it by North Dakota authority, by the way—that that is the practice.

I quote further from Mr. Smith:

The mills and elevators, not only of the city, but of the whole Northwest, do a large part of their hedging in the wheat pit of the chamber, while other markets also send a large amount of business.

I may say that the amount of wheat received at Minneapolis in the course of a year, depending somewhat upon the crop, runs from 75,000,000 bushels up to 90,000,000 and 100,000,000 bushels.

I continue quoting from this book:

Three-fourths of the wheat received in the market is bought and ground by the local mills. Eighty per cent or more of the flaxseed received is used by the local linseed oil mills. But by far the greater part of the barley and oats and practically all the rye is shipped to other markets or to outside dealers.

Over 80 per cent of the grain received at Minneapolis, however—and they receive, as I said, from 75,000,000 to 100,000,000 bushels a year—is ground right there.

There, in this connection, and before I leave the subject, I will quote further from this book as to the milling capacity:

Minnesota is a great milling State even outside of Minneapolis, and the amount of wheat ground in North and South Dakota is also considerable. According to statistics compiled by the Northwestern Miller in 1906, largely based on actual returns from the mills and partly by estimates the wheat ground in the Northwest is approximately as follows, together with the number of mills:

I will say that there is not much difference between the condition then and the condition now. It fluctuates in amount according to the crop of wheat and the price of flour. This is the amount of wheat they grind:

	Bushels.
Minneapolis, 22 mills	65, 500, 000
Duluth, 4 mills	4, 500, 000
Minnesota, not including above, 322 mills; that is, mills outside of Minneapolis and Duluth	53, 000, 000
North Dakota, 64 mills	8, 300, 000
South Dakota, 97 mills	6, 700, 000

I presume they may have some more by this time.

A total of 138,000,000 bushels of wheat ground in these mills.

If we add up the mills in Minnesota, we find that 123,000,000 bushels of that wheat are ground in that State.

I have referred to these matters of the grain exchanges not for the purpose of defending them, not for the purpose of holding them up as models of perfection, but for the purpose of showing the useful and necessary functions they perform in connection with the grain trade, and that with all their imperfections, they are superior to the systems in other countries.

Some years ago, before I came to the Senate, a bill was introduced and pending in the Senate to prevent all trading in futures in grain; in other words, to break up the grain-exchange business. It provoked a good deal of discussion in the public press and among the farmers of Minnesota. I was then not in public life. I was simply a plain farmer and a country lawyer; but I remember the discussion very well, because the farmers took a great interest in it, and they finally came to this common-sense conclusion:

They said: "Here, if you abolish all these grain exchanges, these public market places like Duluth, like Chicago, like Minneapolis, like Buffalo, like St. Louis, like Cleveland, who, then, are our buyers, and where do we get quotation of prices from? There is, then, no one to buy our grain except the millers and exporters or the men representing millers or exporters and speculators who hold for a rise in the market, and they will be sure to buy as cheaply as they can, because there is no public market in which they can protect themselves by hedging against fluctuations in the market." The farmers further said: "It may be that at times they do some juggling on these grain exchanges. It may be that sometimes they create corners there—unfair, unjust corners—but is it not better for us farmers to have this double market, and have the millers and the exporters on one side, and have this market of the grain exchanges with their daily quotations on the other?" If you wipe out the market of the grain exchanges you have no quotations of prices.

To-day at my home at Alexandria, if I want to haul my wheat to the elevator and sell it I can tell approximately what I can get for it by looking at the quotations of yesterday's grain market at Minneapolis or at Duluth or Chicago in our daily papers. Mr. President, wipe out those grain exchanges, wipe out those public market quotations, and you are simply remitted to a set of local buyers, millmen, exporters, grain speculators, and elevator men who are buying for the purpose of speculation. All these men deprived of the privilege of hedging by future sales on the grain exchange will buy on a much greater margin—at much lower figures—in order to be safe against future fluctuations in the market. They will be like Russian grain merchants at Odessa.

Now, I am not here to justify any of the bad practices of these grain exchanges. They have sometimes and in some instances been bad in the past, but in recent years there has been great improvement, and few complaints have been made in recent times. The only complaint, so far as I have heard of, comes from a man by the name of Loftus, who is at the head of a commission firm or company calling itself the Farmers Equity Exchange, or something of that kind. While he carries the idea that his company is a grain exchange, it is nothing of the kind, but merely a commisssion house, and his grievance, I believe, is that he has not been permitted to become a member of the Minneapolis Grain Exchange.

Mr. President, we raise, one year with another, about the same quantity of wheat in Minnesota that they do in North Dakota and pretty much of the same quality. Some years North Dakota raises a little more and some years Minnesota. I have the figures here for a series of 10 or 11 years, and I find that in 5 of those years Minnesota exceeded North Dakota, and 4 years North Dakota exceeded Minnesota, it depending somewhat upon the climatic conditions. One year the crops of the two States were pretty much even.

Mr. President, we have a system of grain inspection to-day in Minnesota that is satisfactory, so far as I know, to our farmers. I have not had a complaint, and if there had been ground for complaint I think the farmers of Minnesota would have written to me and said something to me about it. It is very strange that a system which is now satisfactory to the farmers of Minnesota should be such a bad system for North Dakota. The grading and inspection are identical. Their grain is inspected and graded by the same system that our grain is graded and inspected.

I do not want to criticize my colleagues from North Dakota. I know the situation they are in. I have had some such experience in past years. In years past we had in Minnesota a species of farmers who were also great politicians, great reformers. They invariably sought to inject the grading and inspection of grain into every political campaign, and for years they made a success of it, until finally in 1893 the legislature adopted a country elevator law regulating and controlling all the country elevators throughout the State, putting them under State regulation. Since that time the mission of the politicians who were all the time making a political use of the grain-inspection service has disappeared and subsided.

I shall show further on, and I shall quote official authorities from North Dakota to show, that the great trouble with the Dakota farmers is that they have never had a local system of grain regulation and inspection as we have had in Minnesota. As a matter of fact, over 90 per cent of the wheat the farmers raise when it comes to the terminal points of Duluth, Minneapolis, and Chicago, is no longer the wheat of the farmers who raise the wheat. They sell it to the local elevator man, the man at the railway station, and the question in the first instance is between him and the farmers. If he is an honest man, if he gives them fair grades, and if he gives them proper dockage, they are all right. If he is a scoundrel and there is nothing to regulate him, the farmer catches it.

We found in Minnesota, Mr. President, that until we could secure a regulation of the country elevators, and put them under safe control, our farmers were at the mercy of the country elevators. I remember an instance which a great railroad president told me of, not a great while ago. I will not give the road or the line, but he said there was an elevator company in Minnesota that had a line of country elevators on the line of his railroad. The vice-president of that company, or rather the manager of it—I know him too—took a trip over the railroad line where those elevators were located and instructed the men who bought the grain from the farmers, who inspected it and graded it in the first instance, to give them as low a grade as possible, to "keep the grades down all you can." This great railroad president went to the president of that elevator company and told him what this man had done, what orders he had given to the local elevator companies, and said, "You will have to discharge him, turn him out of your company, or I will not permit you to do any business with us;" and that man, to my knowledge, was discharged: he was taken off from the company, just because of that trick.

I have had some experience, Mr. President, and Senators will pardon me for going into details. In 1892, when I was a candidate for governor, as I was passing through the State among the farmers, talking with them, making speeches to them, they complained to me greatly of these country elevators—how badly they graded their grain and of the great amount of dockage and the great injustice they did. I said to the farmers, "Your complaints appear to me to be well founded and call for legislative relief. If I am elected governor, I will see that you get legislation to cure it." One of the first things I did after I took office was to prepare and draw up what was at that time called the "country elevator law," putting all the grain elevators and warehouses in the country, outside of terminal points, under the control and regulation of the railroad and warehouse commission and requiring them to take out a State license.

That legislation was contested by some of the elevator companies. They refused to take out a State license. One of those companies, a Wisconsin company, was haled into court because it refused to take out a license and refused to submit to State regulations on the ground that they operated a private elevator; that they simply bought and sold their own grain, and on that ground they were not amenable to State regulation and State control. But the Supreme Court of Minnesota held that they were liable, because a local elevator at a railway station is a public market place, where the farmers have to go and have their wheat examined and tested and graded, and because it is a public market place the public have an interest in it, and therefore have a right to regulate it.

The company appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States and that court sustained the validity of the law. It is the case of Cargill v. Minnesota, found in 180 U. S. R., page 452. I will read only a little bit from the opinion, which was delivered by Mr. Justice Harlan. Here is what the Supreme Court said:

> But to require the defendant company to obtain a license is not forbidden by the amendment

The objection was made that this was in violation of the fourteenth amendment.

> The authority to make such a requirement is to be referred to the general power of the State to adopt such regulations as are appropriate to protect the people in the enjoyment of their relative rights and privileges, and to guard them against fraud and imposition. (Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U. S., 114, 122; Plumley v Massachusetts, 155 U. S., 461.) The State court well said that the defendant's warehouse could be fairly regarded "as a sort of public market, where the farmers come with their grain for the purpose of selling the same, and where the purchaser, a party in interest, acts as market master, weighmaster, inspector, and grader of the grain."
> We can not question the power of the State, so far as the Constitution of the United States is concerned to require a license for the privilege of carrying on business of that character within its limits.

This case contains the so-called country elevator law of 1893, as amended by the act of 1895.

Mr. President, it will probably take me about two hours longer. I have not gone into the Minnesota grain-inspection system. It will be necessary for me to describe that in detail. I shall be very glad to stop at this time and take it up in the morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection the bill will be temporarily laid aside. The Chair lays before the Senate bills from the House of Representatives for reference.

S. 3843. An act for the relief of Bellevadorah Steele.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I wish to inquire concerning one of the last bills reported by the Secretary. There was so much confusion going on around me that I did not hear what it was about.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Vice President announced his signature to the enrolled bill (S. 1689) authorizing the accounting officers of the Treasury to allow in the accounts of the United States marshal for the district of Connecticut amounts paid by him from certain appropriations.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am taken by surprise by that announcement. I do not know exactly what would be the proper course, but I will state my understanding of the matter.

There was a bill to that effect passed by the Senate a year or so ago, and then the embodiment of the bill was put in an appropriation bill and became a law. The matter was all composed in accordance with the terms of the bill in the department. Now the bill has been reported by the House committee and passed the House, received the signature of the Speaker, and the Chair has just announced his signature to it, concerning a matter that was all closed months ago. Until I can find out what is best to be done with it, I would suggest that the matter be withheld.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will withhold the announcement.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I suggest that the enrolled bill be held in the custody of the Chair, at least for the present, and I will look it up.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will withhold the announcement until the Senator from Connecticut examines it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very good.

HAY-PAUNCEFOTE AND HAY-BUNAU-VARILLA TREATIES.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The other day I offered a resolution calling upon the President for the information which might be in the State Department concerning the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. I have heard, through one of the Senators who has been at the State Department, that the resolution which the Senate agreed to calls for information only as to the negotiation and ratification of the treaty, and there have been other communications concerning it since that time. It was suggested that the resolution be submitted in a little more comprehensive form. Therefore I ask that the following resolution may be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 339) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the President is hereby requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to cause to be transmitted to the Senate all information, papers, correspondence, messages, dispatches, and records in the Department of State relative to the superseding of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty by the so-called Hay-Pauncefote treaty, signed November 18, 1901, from the beginning of negotiations to this date, and also relative to said Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would suggest in that connection that it would be well to ask for the same information about the treaty between the United States and Panama.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In redrafting the resolution I have simply endeavored to stick to the particular topic I had in mind originally; but I have no objection whatever if the Senator from Mississippi wishes to move that as an amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The reason I ask it is because in connection with the negotiation of the treaty between the United States and Colombia some correspondence took place between the United States and Great Britain, and that is of a good deal of importance as affecting both treaties.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. As I have said to the Senator, I have no objection to his suggesting such language as he wants as an amendment to the resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator happen to remember the name of the treaty between the United States and Colombia?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It was the Hay-Bunau-Varilla treaty.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Hay-Bunau-Varilla treaty. I ask that, after the words "Hay-Pauncefote treaty," there be inserted the words "and also similar information, papers, correspondence, messages, and so forth, relative to the Hay-Bunau-Varilla treaty between the United States and Colombia."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The modification being accepted, is there any objection to the resolution? The Chair hears none, and the resolution is unanimously adopted.

REVENUES OF RAIL CARRIERS, ETC.

Mr. KERN obtained the floor.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. KERN. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Pursuant to a resolution which I submitted some days ago calling upon the Interstate Commerce Commission to transmit the testimony which they have taken and are taking in the cases, Docket No. 5860, entitled "Revenues of rail carriers in official classification territory" and Investigation and Suspension Docket No. 333, entitled "Rate increases in official classification territory," a transcript of the testimony was received by the Senate, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed as a public document. I also at this time ask unanimous consent that such additional testimony that the Interstate Commerce Commission may transmit later as a part of the same cases, together with the exhibits, may also be printed as a part of it.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator want to have it all printed as one document?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I want to have it all printed, and if it makes more than one volume, of course it will be printed in separate volumes.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator want it to carry the same number? Of course the Senator may desire to have different numbers.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It should be under the same number.

Mr. SMOOT. Not unless it is ordered by the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I see no reason why, with the additional testimony, it can not carry the same number.

Mr. SMOOT. I was just trying to think for a minute what routine it would have to go through, if that could be done.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is precisely the proceeding which we had when the testimony was taken in the last advance-rate cases in 1910. I introduced a resolution requiring a transmission of a copy of the testimony, and the same was printed, and there was very great demand for it. It is exceedingly valuable matter.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator understands that I have no objection to the printing.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, I know.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it ought to be printed. The only thought was, if it were printed as a public document and given a number, and then in the meantime there is a public document printed again, the record might show a different number. When other testimony comes in I was wondering if it would be possible to print the subsequent matter in connection with the first public document with that number or not.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is, of course, in the control of the Senate. I do not know how many volumes the testimony now in will make. The testimony in 1910 made 10 volumes. It was furnished to the libraries of the country and there was a general public demand for it. There is a good demand already for this testimony. I have a letter from the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission so stating, and I have myself received many letters of request for copies of the evidence. I can see no reason why the document should not be numbered, say, Document No. 500, and, as additional testimony comes in, making up what would be another volume, or even more, the additional volumes to bear the same document number.

In order to complete the case I make the request to include any additional evidence that may be submitted, the succeeding volumes to bear the same document number that the testimony now received shall bear, in order that all the volumes may have the same number.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have no objection to the request; but I will suggest to the Senator that when the testimony is finally completed, in presenting it to the Senate I think he ought to call attention to the fact that it is to be part of a document already printed, so that the final print may show the number of volumes, as is always done, and indicate that the testimony is completed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will bear that in mind.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin for the printing as a Senate document of the evidence and exhibits received by the Senate in the cases referred to by him, and also for the printing of additional evidence in the same cases as it is sent to and received by the Senate as additional volumes of the same numbered Senate document? The Chair hears none, and unanimous consent is granted.

The order as agreed to was reduced to writing, as follows:

Ordered, That the testimony and exhibits received from the Interstate Commerce Commission in the cases, Docket No. 5860, entitled "Revenues of rail carriers in official classification territory," and Investigation and Suspension Docket No. 333, entitled "Rate increases in official classification territory," pursuant to Senate resolution 310, adopted on the 23d day of March, 1914, together with the additional testimony and exhibits hereafter received in said cases from the Interstate Commerce Commission pursuant to said Senate resolution, be printed as a Senate document; and that the volumes be numbered consecutively, and that all volumes bear the same document number.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 15 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 15, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 14, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord God our Father, how wonderful and manifold are the ways which combine for the development of all that is truest, best in us. The struggle for existence, the hopes and aspirations which fill our breast, the desire for supremacy in the mastery of self. The awe-inspiring scenes which environ us, the home, the State, the religion which engage our thoughts, the intellectual, moral, and spiritual life which makes for our highest welfare; angels in disguise, agents of Thy will in the supreme plan which Thou art working out in us, through us, for us. May we be susceptible, that we may reach the full fruition of the life divine. In Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the Journal as read will stand approved.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I see by the RECORD—I do not know whether the same item is in the Journal—that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD], from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which committee was referred the bill (H. R. 15762) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service, and so forth, reported the same. That report, if made, was made through the basket. It is not in order under the rules for an appropriation bill to be reported in that manner. If that item appears in the Journal, I do not think the report should be received in that way. In the first place, the bill was not referred to the committee, but it was reported from the committee and under the rules should be reported in the House from the floor.

The SPEAKER. Why, that undoubtedly is correct.

Mr. MANN. Well, I think the Journal should be corrected, striking that out showing any report was made.

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly the correction ought to be made in the RECORD. Inasmuch as it was reported through the basket, as it seems to have been, the Chair does not remember its being reported from the floor——

Mr. MANN. It was not reported from the floor.

The SPEAKER. Therefore it would not be in the Journal.

Mr. MANN. Well, the Journal, that portion which is not ordinarily read——

The SPEAKER. We will have the Journal back in a moment and see.

Mr. MANN (continuing). Usually copies reports of committees as they appear in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The RECORD will be corrected, and if it is in the Journal, which in all human probability it is, the Journal will be corrected also. Without objection, the Journal as corrected will stand approved.

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15279, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15279, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, with Mr. GARNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15279, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 106, line 25, by striking out the figures "$1,400" and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "$1,600."

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, the statutory provision——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment.

Mr. FOWLER. Well, Mr. Chairman, the statute provides a salary of $1,600 for this engineer.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman the statute?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will reserve the point of order and let the gentleman talk.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, there is no question about the statute providing a salary of $1,600 for this engineer. The bill provides for a salary of $1,400. The engineer is a laboring man, and we have learned from Holy Writ that the laborer is worthy of his hire, and I stand on Holy Writ in favor of this laboring man, and I am asking for his salary to be restored to that provided for by the statute. I see no reason, Mr. Chairman, why it should not be done. I am informed by laboring people, those who are the low-salaried people, that they are on the verge of pauperism. I receive letters and communications every day to this effect; yet in a land of plenty we find many suffering for the necessaries of life, while those higher up revel in riches and diamonds and plenty. Why this should be true in America, in a land of the free and the home of the brave, I can not understand. I insist, Mr. Chairman, that liberal legislation should be had for the benefit of the common people the same as that of the rich people. The poor need help. The rich are independent and do not need special favors. I insist, Mr. Chairman, that it is not right to reduce the salaries of laboring men from that which is fixed by the statute and at the same time increase the salaries of high-salaried men above the amount fixed by the statute. I can not reconcile my conscience to a condition of that kind. Mr. Chairman, in 1907 the Superintendent of the Library Building and Grounds, Mr. Green, gave testimony before the House committee in which he said he drew his regular salary from the Government for the duties of that position. He now gets $5,000. I suppose he got that at that time. He was superintendent of construction of the New Willard Hotel. He received as general contractor of the Government $2,000, from his own statement. He received $4,000 for his services in the construction of the new State capitol at Harrisburg, Pa., making a total of $11,000. Yet he said at that time he gave all of his time to his duties as Superintendent of the Library Building and Grounds. Now, I am not complaining of Mr. Green personally at all. I do not know him. I presume he is an estimable gentleman or he would not be kept in the place which he now occupies; but I cite this instance, Mr. Chairman, as an evidence of profligacy in appropriations for men who do not devote their time to the duties of the positions which they occupy and to emphasize the stinginess on the other side by cutting down laboring men's salaries below the amount fixed by law, thereby pauperizing labor.

I submit Mr. Green's testimony, which is as follows:

HEARING BEFORE SUBCOMMITTEE OF HOUSE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS IN CHARGE OF LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL FOR FISCAL YEAR 1907, FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1906.

Mr. James A. Tawney, chairman of Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. Bernard R. Green, superintendent of the Library of Congress Building and Grounds.

Mr. TAWNEY. How much time do you give personally to your work over there in the Library

Mr. GREEN. I can not answer that, except to say that I am employed all the time.

Mr. TAWNEY. You are the architect employed in the construction of the National Museum Building?

Mr. GREEN. I am doing that as general contractor for the Government. I have been in the business so long that I do business for Uncle Sam in that way.

Mr. TAWNEY. You get extra compensation (32 Stats., 1102; extra compensation not published in Biennial Register, 1903–1911) for that over and above your salary?

Mr. GREEN. I get $2,000 a year for that.

Mr. TAWNEY. Do you do any work for outside parties in addition to that?

Mr. GREEN. Outside of the Government service?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. GREEN. Very little, except when my friends sometimes want me to help them in things that I happen to be personally interested in. Just now some people that I know have come after me at the Raleigh Hotel, where they are building a little addition to it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Did you not also superintend the construction of the New Willard Hotel?

Mr. GREEN. I did look after it for the owners. They are friends of mine. I have not time to do business of that sort regularly, to make a business of it, but——

Mr. TAWNEY. Are you employed as superintendent of construction of the State capitol at Harrisburg, Pa.?

Mr. GREEN. No, sir; I simply act as general adviser to the commission. I simply went to their meetings once or twice a month.

Mr. TAWNEY. In addition to your salary you are compensated for your work that you do outside?

Mr. GREEN. Yes; I get something for it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, one question further in regard to your own personal service. You say you are employed in an advisory capacity by the commission having control of the construction of the new State capitol at Harrisburg, Pa.?

Mr. GREEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAWNEY. And that you attended the meetings of the commission

Mr. GREEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAWNEY. How often do you attend those meetings, and when and where where they held?

Mr. GREEN. They were held at Harrisburg about once a month. I went up other times, too.

Mr. TAWNEY. How long has that employment continued?

Mr. GREEN. It is ended now.

Mr. TAWNEY. How long has it been?

Mr. GREEN. About three years.

Mr. TAWNEY. What compensation did you receive for that service?

Mr. GREEN. That is a private matter, but I have no objection to telling you. I received $4,000 a year and my traveling expenses.

* * * * * * *

Mr. TAWNEY. How much time do you devote to the National Museum?

Mr. GREEN. I can not put it down in hours and minutes. I should say all the time. I am in constant communication with the people there, and make visits frequently.

* * * * * * *

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman. we have not found a statute fixing the compensation of this office. The law quoted as to the salary is the old salary-grab law, and was repealed the next year after its enactment. I withdraw the point of order, and will let the committee vote on it. I want to say that the Committee on Appropriations has not reduced this man's pay. We appropriate the same amount for him that was appropriated for the current year, and the Postmaster General has not asked for any increase, and there was not a word of testimony before our committee that would justify us in giving him any more than we have.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division. I want to see who will stand for the laboring man.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 5, noes 38.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of any appropriations made for the service of the Post Office Department in conformity with the act of July 2, 1836, shall be expended for any of the purposes herein provided for on account of the Post Office Department at Washington, D. C.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I would like to ask the gentleman whether this item is recommended by the Post Office Department.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No. They do not recommend it, but it has been carried in the bill for years.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Office of the Attorney General: Attorney General, $12,000; Solicitor General, $10,000; assistant to the Attorney General, $9,000; 6 Assistant Attorneys General, at $6,000 each; Solicitor for the Department of the Interior, $5,000: Provided, That this change of title shall not affect the status of the present incumbent or require his reappointment; Solicitor for the Post Office Department, $5,000: Provided, That this change of title shall not affect the status of the present incumbent or require his reappointment; Solicitor of Internal Revenue, $5,000; Solicitor for the Department of State, $5,000; 4 attorneys, at $5,000 each, one of whom shall have charge of all condemnation proceedings in the District of Columbia and supervise the examination of titles and matters arising from such condemnation proceedings in which the United States shall be a party or have an interest, and no special attorney or counsel, or services of persons other than those provided for herein, shall be employed for such purposes; attorneys—1, $3,750, 5 at $3,500 each, 1, $3,250, 14 at $3,000 each, 2 at $2,500 each; assistant attorneys—1, $3,500, 2 at $3,000 each, 2 at $2,750 each, 5 at $2,500 each, 1, $2,400, 2 at $2,000 each; assistant examiner of titles, $2,000; chief clerk and ex officio superintendent of buildings, $3,000; superintendent of buildings, $500; private secretary and assistant to the Attorney General, $3,000; clerk to the Attorney General, $1,800; stenographer to the Solicitor General, $1,600; law clerks—3 at $2,000 each, 1 of class 4; clerk in office of Solicitor of Internal Revenue, $1,800; attorney in charge of pardons, $3,000; superintendent of prisons, $4,000; disbursing clerk, $2,750; appointment clerk, $2,000; chief of division of investigation, $3,500; examiners—2 at $2,500 each, 4 at $2,250 each, 2 at $2,000 each, 3 at $1,800 each; librarian, $1,800; clerks—8 of class 4, 10 of class 3, 10 of class 2, 20 of class 1, 17 at $1,000 each, 15 at $900 each; chief messenger, $1,000; packer, $900; messenger, $960; 6 messengers; 13 assistant messengers; 7 laborers; 7 watchmen; engineer, $1,200; 2 assistant engineers, at $900 each; 4 firemen; 2 elevator conductors, at $720 each; head charwoman, $480; 24 charwomen. Division of Accounts: Chief, $2,500; administrative accountant, $2,500; chief bookkeeper and record clerk, $2,000; clerks—3 of class 4, 6 of class 3, 6 of class 2, 5 of class 1, 3 at $900 each; in all, $452,830.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve——

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against the increase of salary of six Assistant Attorneys General at $6,000 each and the change of the title or name of the Attorney General for the Interior Department to "Solicitor for the Department of the Interior."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma make the point of order?

Mr. CARTER. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the point of order is well taken. The reason for changing the phraseology was to make the law uniform as to all of the departments. We have a Solicitor for the State Department, a Solicitor for the Internal Revenue, a Solicitor for the Treasury Department, a Solicitor for the Department of Commerce, a Solicitor for the Department of Labor. These gentlemen are designated as Assistant Attorneys General. They are selected by the head of the departments, though named by the Attorney General. The only purpose in changing the phraseology is to let the Attorney General for each department be designated by the same name. It does not change the salary; it does not change their status, because the men who are now in will not have to be reappointed. If the gentleman desires to make the point of order, it is well taken.

Mr. CARTER. But the salary of the six Attorneys General are increased $1,000 each?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Let us finish this item first. Does the gentleman care to press his point of order?

Mr. CARTER. At the request of Mr. Ferris, who can not be present, I feel obliged to make the point of order.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the gentleman will pardon me a minute, when the Attorney General made the suggestion he said that so far as the Assistant Attorney General of the Post Office Department was concerned he had absolutely nothing to do with his appointment, did not even suggest it, and he is not under his authority in any way. Now, it is rather an anomaly to call him "Assistant Attorney General to the Post Office Department" under those circumstances.

Mr. CARTER. I notice that in the hearings.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And his idea in making the law uniform, as the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] suggests, was that it would dignify these places and enable him to keep them better in hand. I hope the gentleman will not press his point of order with reference to this. It is a change of designation, pure and simple.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I want to ask the gentleman if the law does not provide for seven Attorneys General? That was to include an Assistant Attorney General for the Interior Department, and that is a change of law to that extent, because the law as it is now—and I have a brief of it here, if you have any doubt about it—provides for seven Assistant Attorneys General where you are now providing for six, and then placing the Assistant Attorney General for the Interior Department in the class of Solicitor for the Interior Department and not the Attorney General. I am going to say to the committee frankly that I have no desire to press the point of order; but the labor is as burdensome on the Interior Department as in the other departments, and if the salary of the solicitor was increased I would not squabble over the change of the law.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. All the Assistant Attorneys General in the class that the Assistant Attorney General of the Interior Department is now classed are getting $5,000. It says "seven Attorneys General."

Mr. DAVENPORT. It says six.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The law as it now stands says seven.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman will remember a law was passed a year ago to increase the salary of one of these.

Mr. DAVENPORT. The act of March 4, 1913.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It leaves six.

Mr. DAVENPORT. It says "seven Attorneys General, at $5,000 each." I have the law here.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I understand one of those positions was increased to $9,000.

Mr. DAVENPORT. That was the Solicitor General, the assistant to the Attorney General.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am speaking of the current law.

Mr. DAVENPORT. The current law carries seven Assistant Attorneys General, with a salary of $5,000 each, and this seeks to give six of them $6,000 each and drop one of the seven and change his title to "Solicitor to the Interior Department" instead of "Assistant Attorney General."

Mr. KINDEL. I make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. KINDEL. The point of order is reserved on the increase of the Assistant Attorneys General from $7,000 to $9,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It would not lie anyway. That is the salary fixed by law.

Mr. DAVENPORT. That is a past issue.

Mr. KINDEL. A past issue? I thought it was $7,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No. Since the last appropriation bill was passed a law has been enacted making that salary $9,000. We are following the law. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT] is in error about these Assistant Attorneys General.

Those whose salaries are to be increased by this bill are the men whom the Attorney General has brought around him for the purpose of enforcing the antitrust law and engaging in litigation generally on the part of the United States. The other Assistant Attorney General, to whom the gentleman refers, is assigned to one of the departments.

The reason why the Attorney General desires to increase the compensation is this: Very large attorneys' fees have been paid out of a lump sum for the enforcement of the antitrust law. The Attorney General desires to abandon that practice as far as possible and to gather around him, as a permanent force in the department, a corps of attorneys able to cope with the able corporation lawyers that the Government must meet in all antitrust litigation. That is the purpose.

The Attorney General asked for $7,500. He thought if allowed that sum he could have a force of his own in the department that would enable him to try most important cases for the Government without paying the large fees that have been paid heretofore out of a lump-sum appropriation. The committee agreed to give him an increase of $1,000 each for six men, believing that he might get a force and train it with that money. It is subject to a point of order if anybody desires to make it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTER. I think there is much virtue in what the gentleman in charge of the bill has to say, and he almost persuades me to be satisfied with the language of the bill. But my point of order was made at the request of my colleague from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], who can not be present this morning, and on that account I would not feel like withdrawing the point of order. I feel that in justice to Mr. FERRIS I must insist upon it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Is the point of order addressed to the language?

Mr. CARTER. As to the language and the amount.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The point of order is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] makes a point of order, as the Chair understands it, against these Assistant Attorneys General at $6,000 each.

Mr. CARTER. I make the point of order that the present law provides for only $5,000 each.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma makes the point of order that it is not authorized by law?

Mr. CARTER. That is it.

The CHAIRMAN. The next point of order is against the language, "Provided, That this change of title shall not affect the status of the present incumbent nor require his reappointment."

Mr. CARTER. And against the language in lines 10 and 11, "Solicitor for the Department of the Interior." I make the point of order that that language is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. And the gentleman also makes a point of order against the language in lines 14 to 16, "Provided, That this change of title shall not affect the status of the present incumbent or require his reappointment." That is the point of order that the gentleman makes?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, on just what is the point of order sustained? We could not hear.

The CHAIRMAN. On the provision in the bill in lines 9 and 10, "Six Assistant Attorneys General, at $6,000 each"; and on the provision in lines 10, 11, 12, and 13, "Solicitor for the Department of the Interior, $5,000: Provided, That this change of title shall not affect the status of the present incumbent or require his reappointment"; and on the provision in lines 13, 14, 15, and 16, "Solicitor for the Post Office Department, $5,000: Provided, That this change of title shall not affect the status of the present incumbent or require his reappointment." Those provisions of the bill go out on the point of order.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I have reserved a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] has kindly consented to withdraw his pro forma amendment. Now I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] has reserved a point of order against other paragraphs.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not desire to lose that right.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does not that reservation come too late?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] was on his feet, clamoring for recognition, when the Chair recognized the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER]. The gentleman from Illinois should have his day in court.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. All right.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the item on page 115, lines 6 and 7, "clerk to the Attorney General, $1,800." The last bill carried a provision for this same position at a salary of $1,600. This is an increase over the current year, over the current law. I say, the bill provides for a clerk to the Attorney General, at $1,800. The last bill, or current law, carried an appropriation for the same place at $1,600, an increase of $200 above the amount in the current law of last year. I make a point of order against it, because I do not regard a clerk as being any better than a carpenter or an engineer.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the point of order is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

Mr. KINDEL. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the committee to the reading of a salary in the Department of Justice, which appears in lines 8 and 9 of page 114, where the Assistant to the Attorney General is increased from $7,000 to $9,000. I make the point of order against that.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, the law fixes the salary at $9,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's point of order comes too late. He did not seek to reserve a point of order.

Mr. KINDEL. I thought I did.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is provided in the law passed in October, 1913, and is now permanent law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask a question.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment to the paragraph, to provide for three attorneys.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 114, in line 9, after the sum "$9,000," insert "six Assistant Attorneys General, at $5,000 each."

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment by striking out the word "six" and inserting the word "seven," in order that it may comply with the existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out "six" and inserting "seven."

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does the gentleman mean the amendment to the amendment?

Mr. MANN. Yes; I reserve the point of order on the amendment to the amendment. There is no authority of law for this additional place.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the Attorney General does not ask for more than six men by that title. I think that is all that the amendment should provide for.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Does not the law read and provide for seven Assistant Attorneys General?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The appropriation does, but the law does not.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I think I can show it to the gentleman in the law. The law says so.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The appropriation says so.

Mr. BARTLETT. If the gentleman will let me call his attention to the statement of the Attorney General, which has already been referred to, he will see that there are seven Assistant Attorneys General, but one of them is for the Post Office Department. He has already been provided for. The Attorney General states in his testimony before the committee that, including the Assistant Attorney General for the Post Office Department, there are seven. The Attorney General has no control over the assistant for the Post Office Department. Leaving out that one, that leaves six under the Department of Justice, and those are the ones for whom we are endeavoring to provide.

Mr. CARTER. Is it not a fact that one of those Assistant Attorneys General is at present employed in the Interior Department?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. And not in the Post Office Department?

Mr. BARTLETT. There are seven in all, of whom one is in the Interior Department.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman said the Post Office Department.

Mr. BARTLETT. There is one in the Post Office Department, over whom the Attorney General has no control. The six provided for in this bill are the six not including the one for the Post Office Department.

Mr. CARTER. Then there are eight in all?

Mr. BARTLETT. Seven.

Mr. CARTER. You provide here for six Assistant Attorneys General and then provide for a solicitor for the Interior Department and a solicitor for the Post Office Department, so that makes eight.

Mr. BARTLETT. No.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, I think if you will take the citation that the gentleman has there, and the estimates given by the Attorney General, and will refer to section 348 of the Revised Statutes and to the act of March 3, 1903, and the act of March 4, 1913, section 1, you will find that there are carried seven Assistant Attorneys General, who are assistants to the Attorney General, and one Assistant Attorney General for the Post Office Department, who is named by the Postmaster General. There are still left seven who are carried to-day in the statute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes a point of order against the amendment to the amendment, on the ground, as the Chair understands it, that there is no law authorizing seven Assistant Attorneys General. Now, if the gentleman from Oklahoma can show the Chair any statute authorizing seven Assistant Attorneys General, the Chair will promptly overrule the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. DAVENPORT. The Attorney General stated that he carried seven.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma desire further time in which to procure the statute?

Mr. DAVENPORT. I would like to have it, if the Chair please.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the committee about the difference in the salaries of these engineers. I see on page 106 of the bill the salary of an engineer is $1,400, and on page 115 there is an engineer at $1,200. This engineer at $1,200 has two assistants. Now, what is the difference in these engineers that there should be that difference in the salary?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the difference in salary is due to the fact that there is a difference in the size of these buildings, and a difference in the labors that are placed upon these men. The engineer in the Treasury Building gets $1,400. The engineer in the Post Office Building gets $1,400. The engineer in the State, War, and Navy Building gets $1,400. The engineer in the Department of Commerce gets $1,000. The engineer in the Department of Justice gets $1,200. If the gentleman has ever been over to the Department of Justice, he will recall that it is a very small building, just a large residence.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Why these two assistants, then?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The engineer at the Department of Justice simply has charge of a heating plant sufficient to heat that building. It is lighted from an entirely different source. In the State, War, and Navy Building the engineer not only has charge of the heating plant, but he has charge of a great lighting plant that lights that building and the White House and the Mills Building, or the Annex, as it is commonly called. I have no personal knowledge of the person holding the place. I will say that we have appropriated the amount that we were asked to appropriate, the amount carried in the estimates, and there was no evidence on the subject before the committee.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Has the gentleman any information as to why the engineer of the Department of Justice has two assistants?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. They have three or four buildings that they heat, and these men perform the more arduous labors. This man simply superintends the others.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, this man has two or three buildings, and the other engineers have only one each. It seems that the engineer of the Department of Justice has the biggest job. I do not see any justification for paying the engineers in the other places $1,400 and paying this man only $1,200. I offer an amendment to increase the salary of the engineer of the Department of Justice to $1,400.

Mr. MANN. There is already an amendment to the amendment pending.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MOON). The Chair understands that there is pending an amendment to the amendment. Another amendment would be out of order.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I will offer it later.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] that there is a good deal of difference in the responsibility and work of attending to a mere heating plant and in attending to a plant not only for heating, but for lighting, where they have electrical machinery to superintend and take care of. In the Department of Justice they simply have charge of a heating plant, and the engineer has two men to assist him to do the arduous work.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. It seems that he has charge of the heating plants for two or three buildings.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Two or three buildings, but these other men do the work.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. From my point of view I do not think $1,200 is enough for any engineer, anyway, who is capable of holding a responsible position of that sort. I think the engineer who has to look after these three buildings probably finds that it costs him as much to live as it costs the fellow who is looking after the other plant. The standard of living ought to be kept up about the same. If you call them engineers, I do not see why they should not be in one classification and paid the same salary.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have a ruling from the Chair on the amendment to the amendment. If the gentleman from Oklahoma can find any law providing for seven Assistant Attorneys General I will go back to it.

Mr. DAVENPORT. If the Chairman desires to rule at this time, I do not want to delay the House except to say that in running this law down I find that they have been legislating all the time by appropriation bills according as they required the service of the Assistant Attorneys General and the assistants that the Attorney General is entitled to have. The only law of a general statute is for three Assistant Attorneys General, and each time that they needed a new one it has been provided for on an appropriation bill, and the last one carries seven.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman says that the statute only authorizes three. Therefore any amendment offered to this bill in excess of three is subject to a point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask a question of the chairman of the committee. In line 17, page 115, there are 6 messengers, 13 assistant messengers, 7 laborers, 7 watchmen, and there is no salary specified. I suppose they are paid from a lump sum, are they?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; but the bill fixes the salary.

Mr. FESS. Where is the provision for the appropriation at specifying the salary?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. On page 143 the gentleman will find the law fixing the rate.

Mr. FESS. The point I wanted to ask was, would it not be better to have the salary specified here rather than in a lump sum?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No; because we provide for these people all the way through the bill, and by using one paragraph at the end of the bill we save repeating the language probably fifty times.

Mr. FESS. I asked the question purely for information.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to a matter which reflects great credit on this committee and the House of Representatives. It was through this committee that the Commerce Court was abolished, and it was said at the time that by abolishing that court litigation would so increase in the district courts as to practically impede justice. I want to state that I have made an examination and find that between January 14, 1913, and the 1st day of this month, April, 1914, only three suits have been brought in the whole United States to vacate, annul, or suspend any order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that instead of litigation being increased by the abolition of the Commerce Court it has been greatly reduced, and that about $50,000 per annum has been saved by the wisdom of this committee and the House in adopting the amendment for the abolition of that court, and justice has not been impeded anywhere. The court would have had practically nothing to do if it had been retained.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Has not that peculiar condition of affairs been caused by the fact that during the last year the Interstate Commerce Commission has made practically no orders reducing freight rates?

Mr. SIMS. Their orders may be made as to practices as well as rates, and two of the suits that have been brought have reference to orders pertaining to terminal practices and not rates, as I understand.

Mr. MANN. But most of the suits have been in regard to freight rates, and there have been no reductions on rates the last year.

Mr. SIMS. There have been no attempts by the railroads, except in a few instances, to increase rates. It has proved the wisdom of Congress in not continuing a special court when the commissioners' orders have been so just as to give no cause for litigation.

Mr. MANN. It is purely a temporary condition of affairs in regard to freight rates.

Mr. SIMS. I hope not.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman hopes that the rates will be reduced in the end.

Mr. SIMS. I hope existing rates are reasonable and that rates will continue to be reasonable and that the railroads will not attempt to increase them without just cause; but I can not conceive of litigation growing out of contested orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission respecting rates in volume so great as to clog the dockets of the United States district courts, as was so freely predicted by some gentlemen who opposed the abolishment of the Commerce Court.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment after the amendment which has just been adopted. That is, to insert "one Assistant Attorney General for the Interior Department, $5,000."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. On that I reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "each," in line 10, page 114, insert the words "one Assistant Attorney General for the Interior Department, $5,000."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I am informed by my friend the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] that he thinks the law provides for four Attorneys General, one of which shall be an Assistant Attorney General for the Interior Department.

Mr. BARTLETT. If the gentleman will pardon me, I did not state quite that. I said the law provided for three Assistant Attorneys General for the Department of Justice, and I was under the impression that there was one for the Interior Department.

Mr. CARTER. That was my statement.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I did not quite hear what the gentleman's statement was.

Mr. CARTER. I said that my friend the gentleman from Georgia had stated to me that a certain number of Assistant Attorneys General were provided for by law, and his impression was that one of the Attorneys General the law provided for should be assigned to the Interior Department.

Mr. MANN. That might be; but we have provided for six Assistant Attorneys General, and if the law provided for one to be assigned to the Interior Department, he would be so assigned.

Mr. CARTER. If that be true, the gentlemen in charge of the bill are not dispensing with the Attorney General for the Interior Department. Some Attorney General not provided for by law will have to be cut off, and it will not be the one in the Interior Department, but one in the Department of Justice.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. As I understand it, the law provides only for four Assistant Attorneys General. The bill provides for six, and that provision has been passed. I make the point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma on the ground that it is not authorized by law.

Mr. CARTER. Perhaps the gentleman may be right, and perhaps the point of order may be good, but I call the gentleman's attention again to the fact that he may not be cutting out the Attorney General that would be assigned to the Interior Department, but one of the six Assistant Attorneys General that he is attempting to provide for.

The law provides now that one of the attorneys general shall be assigned to the Interior Department, as I understand it. My only object in offering this amendment is to provide that no injury shall be done to the service.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the Attorney General requested the committee to arrange his force so that he would have six assistant attorneys general, whose services might be devoted to the enforcement of the antitrust law, and he requested the committee to provide for a solicitor for the Interior Department, just as is provided for all of the other departments of this Government with the exception of the Post Office Department. The committee thought that the Attorney General in making that request knew more about his department and about the service of these men possibly than Members of the House, and the committee agreed to adopt his suggestion. The gentleman has made the point of order against the provision.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Did not the Attorney General confess by his request, and did not the committee by reporting the bill confess, that there was a provision in law somewhere for the assignment of an Assistant Attorney General to the Interior Department when they wrote into the bill the provision that the change of title should not require his reappointment and reconfirmation.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, no; there was no such confession made by either the Attorney General or by the committee.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Then why did they write that into the bill?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not deny the fact that the Attorney General did ask for a solicitor for the Interior Department, but the gentleman by his point of order cut that out of the bill.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I did not make the point of order.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman's colleague did.

Mr. DAVENPORT. But I would have made the point of order if he had not.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. We were satisfied to allow a Solicitor for the Interior Department, but the gentleman's colleague made the point of order upon it.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. DAVENPORT. If it is not admitted by the bill, why did they write that cumbersome provision in and say that the change of title was not intended to require a reappointment?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not mean to say that an Assistant Attorney General has not been assigned to the duties of a Solicitor for the Interior Department.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say a word to the Chair. The law now does provide for seven Assistant Attorneys General, one of whom is assigned to the Interior Department. The bill provided for six Assistant Attorneys General and one solicitor, merely changing the title so that the law does authorize seven Assistant Attorneys General.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin cite the Chair to that statute?

Mr. LENROOT. If the Chair is in doubt, I would ask that it be passed over, and I will cite it later. The last Assistant Attorney General was added in an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has been advised that the statute authorized three Assistant Attorneys General, but the appropriation act carries seven Assistant Attorneys General. The statute authorized only three and, of course, the point of order against any number above that would lie.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; but it is my recollection that the language of the appropriation act increasing the number made it permanent law, but if the Chair is in doubt about that I will ask that it be passed over for the time being.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, there is no such law as that. If I were not thoroughly satisfied there is no such law, I would give the gentleman time to hunt it up.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, there is no question that the appropriation act of March 4, 1913, carried an appropriation for seven Assistant Attorneys General at $5,000 each. I ran that down from the act of 1871, and I find that only three Assistant Attorneys General are provided for in the statute, except by appropriation acts. They have been increasing the number from time to time, but one of the six has been, since 1871, designated and assigned to the Department of the Interior.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, the Chair does not want to rule upon this until he is in possession of all the information?

The CHAIRMAN. No.

Mr. CARTER. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I ask the Chair to wait.

Mr. LENROOT. It is some time since I looked the matter up, I will say to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has sent out for a copy of the last appropriation act. Has the gentleman from South Carolina a copy of the last appropriation act?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the last appropriation act carries this item:

Seven Assistant Attorneys General, at $5,000 each.

That is all there is to it. There is no authorization or anything else.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The only law that has been suggested to the Chair authorizing more than three Assistant Attorneys General is the appropriation act of last June, and that simply makes an appropriation for seven Assistant Attorneys General, and in no way makes it permanent law. Therefore the statute authorizes only three, and this is clearly without authority of law, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 115, line 19, strike out the figures "$1,200" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$1,400."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois) there were—ayes 6, noes 28.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE.

Office of the Secretary: Secretary of Commerce, $12,000; Assistant Secretary, $5,000; private secretary to the Secretary, $2,500; confidential clerk to the Secretary, $1,800; private secretary to Assistant Secretary, $2,100; chief clerk and superintendent, $3,000; disbursing clerk, $3,000; Chief of Appointment Division, $2,500; Chief Division of Publications, $2,500; Chief Division of Supplies, $2,100; clerks—10 of class 4; 9 of class 3 (3 transferred to Department of Labor); 8 of class 2 (5 transferred to Department of Labor and 1 transferred from Census Office); 12 of class 1 (1 transferred from Census Office and 2 transferred to Department of Labor); 8 at $1,000 each (2 transferred to Department of Labor); 6 at $900 each (1 transferred to Department of Labor and 1 transferred from Census Office); 2 telephone operators, at $720 each; messenger to the Secretary, $1,000; 5 messengers; 7 assistant messengers (2 transferred to Department of Labor); 6 messenger boys, at $480 each (2 transferred to Department of Labor and 1 transferred from Lighthouse Bureau); engineer, $1,000; 2 skilled laborers, at $840 each (1 transferred to Department of Labor); 3 elevator conductors, at $720 each; 2 firemen, at $660 each; 13 laborers (4 transferred to Department of Labor); 2 laborers, at $480 each; cabinetmaker, $1,000; carpenter, $900; chief watchman, $900; 8 watchmen (3 transferred to Department of Labor); 20 charwomen (5 transferred to Department of Labor and increase of 7); in all, $151,520.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I find an engineer in this department at $1,000, and I desire to offer an amendment, on page 118, line 11, after the word "engineer," to strike out "$1,000" and insert "$1,200."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 118, line 11, strike out the figures "$1,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,200."

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the Department of Commerce is in a large building, and it seems to me the engineer there would be entitled to even more than $1,200. We failed to get another engineer, probably as competent and capable of getting $1,400 and who needs the money just as badly, but we find now in this Department of Commerce, which is located in one of the new large buildings in the city of Washington, an engineer at $1,000. I can not understand this difference in regard to engineers. Certainly if you are going to classify a man as an engineer who has to come up to that qualification there ought to be some sort of understanding in regard to their salary, and it seems to me that the Members of this House ought not withhold their consent to this amendment and fail to appropriate $1,200 a year for this engineer because somebody has not asked for it. Now, in some of the departments they may be more active in securing these increases than they are in others. I am of the opinion that the main reason for this difference in the salaries of these engineers is due to the fact that somebody has been making an effort to get an increase in some of the departments and in others they have not. I can not see for the life of me any justification in paying one engineer $1,000 and another $1,400, and it seems to me at least reasonable to ask that this be increased to $1,200.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, just one word. We do not know anything about the people who have charge of this building. The committee has absolutely no information. I have never found a department of this Government backward about requesting very liberal appropriations. The Secretary of Commerce came before the committee and asked us to provide an engineer at $1,000, and that is what we have done. There is nothing but a heating plant there.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appear to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois) there were—ayes 4, noes 15.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order there is no quorum present? The Chair will count. [After counting.] Seventy-one gentlemen are present, not a quorum.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, that can not be done after the Chair has declared no quorum is present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is correct, and the Chair thanks the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent——

The CHAIRMAN. The record shows there is no quorum present, and it can not be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. Or any other way.

Mr. BARTLETT. The Chair might recount.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the roll had better be called.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Thereupon the committee rose; and Mr. HAY having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. GARNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill H. R. 15279, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, finding itself without a quorum, he had caused the roll to be called, and that 274 Members answered to their names—a quorum—and that he presented therewith the names of the absentees.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FOWLER. There was an amendment pending at the time the committee found itself without a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois that he has examined the RECORD and he remembers distinctly himself that the amendment had been reported upon and the result announced before the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] made the point of order. And therefore the amendment has been disposed of. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation and per diem, to be fixed by the Secretary of Commerce, of special attorneys, special examiners, and special agents, for the purpose of carrying on the work of said bureau, as provided by the act approved February 14, 1903, entitled "An act to establish the Department of Commerce and Labor," the per diem to be, subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Commerce may prescribe, in lieu of subsistence, at a rate not exceeding $4 per day to each of said special attorneys, special examiners, and special agents, and also of other officers and employees in the Bureau of Corporations while absent from their homes on duty outside of the District of Columbia, and for their actual necessary traveling expenses, including necessary sleeping-car fares; in all, $175,000.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee in what way is this paragraph authorized by law?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The gentleman will notice that on page 119——

Mr. TOWNER. I refer to the first paragraph on page 119.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The Department of Commerce is referred to in that item. The Department of Commerce took over the Bureau of Corporations, and these duties are devolved by law upon that bureau.

Mr. TOWNER. The act itself provides that these special agents, and so forth, referred to in the paragraph, may be provided for when authorized by law. Is there any authorization of law as contemplated in the original act?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me? I will state that I am the author of that law. The matter of employment of officials in the department under authorization of law has long been one of some contention. In recent years in creating departments, and that was the case in creating the Department of Commerce and Labor, the authority was given for the employment of certain experts or other persons when authorized by law, the purpose of that being, under construction of the rules of the House in force, that the authorization would be in the appropriation bill itself.

The authorization for the employment was in the original organic act, except that that authorization instead of specifying the amount which may be appropriated for the number of experts who may be employed, says "such number as may be authorized by law." That was under a construction of the rules of the House holding that in such cases that language authorized the appropriation bill to carry a provision for those experts. And gentlemen can easily see the reason for that construction. It is not possible in creating a new department or a new bureau to provide specifically for the number of the employees who may be in the department and the bureau, unless you leave it so that there can be no growth or, if there is growth, so that every time there is a growth it is subject to a point of order. Hence under the construction of the rules of the House in the organic act creating the Department of Commerce and Labor, and I think also in the organic act creating the Department of Labor, and in creating a good many other bureaus of the Government, there is the provision that persons may be employed as authorized by law. That authorization by law means the appropriation acts.

Mr. MADDEN. Is that the usual construction?

Mr. MANN. That has been the construction all the time. That was the construction before this language was used in the organic act of the Department of Commerce and Labor and has been the construction of that language ever since.

Mr. MADDEN. Could there be any item in any bill subject to a point of order if that construction was made universal?

Mr. MANN. Oh, certainly, because it could only be of those classes of people who are authorized by the organic law.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. MANN. I was interrupting the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. TOWNER. I will be very glad to have the gentleman from Georgia interrogate the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BARTLETT. I apprehend that there can be no dispute about the position of the gentleman from Illinois, that the act creating the Department of Commerce and Labor provides for a Bureau of Corporations and directs that bureau shall carry on certain investigation and find out certain information, and that authority justifies the House and the Appropriations Committee in reporting means by which to carry out the direction authorized by Congress in order to fulfill that purpose.

Mr. MANN. I think that is undoubtedly true.

Mr. BARTLETT. Just on a similar line that we could appropriate money to carry on a public work. That is not contrary to the rule; neither is the carrying on of existing work or work contracted for. The statute which the gentleman referred to is this:

Said commissioner shall have power and authority to make, under the direction and control of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, diligent investigation into the organization, conduct, management, and business of any corporation, joint-stock company—

and to make recommendations—

And so forth.

That is found on page 828 of the Revised Statutes, and is the law. This gives the commissioner full power to make these appointments, full power to carry out the work, and it would be futile to say that the Congress authorized the commissioner to carry on this work and that we could not appropriate for the employees with which to carry it out, it seems to me.

Mr. MANN. There is a provision providing for the appropriation, it seems to me.

Mr. TOWNER. There is a provision in the organic act which says:

There shall also be in the said bureau a chief clerk and such special agents, clerks, and other employees as may be authorized by law.

Now, there is no authorization of law except that which is carried in the appropriation bill in the indefinite language that is used in the section that I am referring to, on page 119. In other words, a lump sum of $175,000 is placed in the hands of the Secretary of Commerce for the purpose of employing certain attorneys, special examiners, and special agents. These are nowhere specifically provided for. The general authorization is all the authorization that could be claimed. Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] says that that is a sufficient authorization under the terms of the act. If that is true, we should understand it. In order that there may be a ruling by the Chair, I make the point of order it is not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Unless the gentleman from Illinois desires to be heard, the Chair will rule.

Mr. MANN. I do not desire to be heard unless the Chair is going to overrule the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say that he does not think the point of order is well taken. The Chair may say in this connection, however, that he has not investigated the matter on his own authority, but there are a number of precedents bearing out this identical point, and the Chair does not feel authorized to overrule them without going into an exhaustive examination, which he is not inclined to do at present. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bureau of Lighthouses: Commissioner, $5,000; deputy commissioner, $4,000; chief constructing engineer, $4,000; superintendent of naval construction, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,400; clerks—1, $2,000; 2 of class 4; 2 of class 3; 2 of class 2; 5 of class 1; 7, at $1,000 each; 2, at $900 each; 1, $840; messenger; assistant messenger; messenger boy, $480 (one transferred to Secretary's office); assistant engineers—1, $3,000; 1, $2,400; 1, $2,250; draftsmen—1, $1,800; 1, $1,560; 1, $1,500; 1, $1,440; 2, at $1,200 each; in all, $64,030.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. In reference to the item to which a point of order was just made and the point of order overruled, where you provide for persons traveling in lieu of subsistence at a rate not exceeding $4 per day—which is probably a reasonable rate—is there any very good reason for making a discrimination on this rate between the Department of Commerce and the Department of Labor?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman's question, I would say that all the way through this bill he will find that in some places they are allowed $4 in lieu of subsistence, and in other places they are allowed $3. This committee has not changed any of those rates.

Mr. MANN. I am under the impression that the gentleman is mistaken. The committee has changed the rate as to the Department of Labor from $4 to $3.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No; we have not raised or reduced any of them. We have taken the rates as we found them. Why Congress in the past allowed $4 to one department or bureau and only $3 to another I do not know. There are many post-office inspectors—390, I believe—and their allowance is $3 a day.

Mr. MANN. So far as that is concerned, I think Congress has usually endeavored to allow $4 a day to those employees who would be most likely to spend most of their time in the larger cities and $3 per day to those most likely to spend most of their time in smaller communities, where the hotel rates are lower.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is likely; and then there is another thing: Some of the investigators spend a long time at one place and others are only temporarily located at any one place.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For securing information for census reports, provided for by law, semimonthly reports of cotton production, periodical reports of stocks of baled cotton in the United States and of domestic and foreign consumption of cotton; per diem compensation of special agents and expenses of same and of detailed employees, whether employed in Washington, D. C., or elsewhere; cost of transcribing State, municipal, or other records; temporary rental of quarters outside of the District of Columbia; for supervising agents, and employment by them of such temporary service as may be necessary in collecting statistics required by law, including $15,000 for collecting tobacco statistics authorized by law in addition to any other fund available therefor: Provided, That the compensation of not to exceed five special agents provided for in this paragraph may be fixed at an amount not to exceed $8 per day, $835,000.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the language of this paragraph on page 120, line 20, beginning after the word "employees," reading "whether employed in Washington, D. C., or elsewhere." Is that new legislation?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Oh, no. It is not new legislation.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The law provides for that sort of language?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. This appropriation has been carried for a number of years, ever since I have known anything about this bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. It is the law at this time?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Is there any provision in the statute providing "whether employed in Washington, D. C., or elsewhere"?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is perfectly legitimate, of course.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. If it is not authorized by law, it is new legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The Census Office is charged with the duty of gathering statistics, and this appropriation is to enable the Census Office to discharge the duties that the law imposes upon it. We do not require the Census Office to do anything in that paragraph except the things that the law requires it to do. Some of those things must be done outside and some inside of Washington.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I would like to have the gentleman point to any law that specifies where it is to be done.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, would my colleague permit me to ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that where one of these lump-sum appropriations is made they are not authorized to spend any of it in the employment of official services in the District of Columbia unless it is specifically provided in the appropriation act?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is right. The act of 1882 prohibits the use of any part of these lump-sum appropriations within the District of Columbia unless the act making the appropriations permits it specifically.

Mr. MANN. But if it is for a general purpose, it is authorized to be used in the District of Columbia?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Only in accordance with the provisions of the law.

Mr. MANN. I have a faint notion in my head that my colleague has another item in mind in this bill where you do not make that authorization. I think probably the provision is not subject to a point of order. Does the chairman agree with me about that?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I withdraw my reservation, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill what peculiar work these special agents are required to do that entitles them to $8 a day? What extraordinary ability have they over the average employee which enables them to draw that salary?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will say that there are only five out of a great number who are permitted to draw $8 a day. That is a salary, in round numbers, of $3,000 a year, and it was claimed several years ago—not before the committee making up this bill—that there were a few men of a high order of ability whom they needed and whom they could not get for less than $8 a day.

Mr. COX. My question was, What peculiarity of work is it that requires such high-grade men to go out and get these statistics?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The gentleman will find by reading these paragraphs that these men are required to make all kinds of investigations, and experts of a very high order are required.

Mr. COX. Under this do these fellows draw a per diem?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. COX. How much per diem do they get? The paragraph does not specify the amount of per diem that these men shall have.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I can give the gentleman the information that the per diem allowance in the Census Office is fixed by the Secretary of the Interior at not to exceed $4 a day, or actual expenses not exceeding $5 a day.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman know whether or not this class of employees get $4 a day or $5 a day or their actual expenses?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. If it is actual expenses, it is not to exceed $5 a day.

Mr. COX. Can the gentleman tell me whether or not they get $3 a day or $4 a day, or what they do get?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Under the law as it was passed the Census Bureau employees get only their actual expenses.

Mr. COX. They get only their actual expenses. Is that right? Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that is an enormous salary that these men get. I do not know that it is of any use to offer an amendment here to make that compensation less than $8 a day. There is no showing that it requires any superior ability for anyone to go out and get the data and statistics beyond the ordinary average, but I will not make a point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. May I ask what is the reason for the very large increase in this appropriation from $354,000, as carried in the current law, to $825,000, carried in this provision?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the reason for the increase in this bill over the appropriation for the current year is that the next fiscal year is the time for the taking of the quinquennial census of manufactures. The law requires the taking of a census of manufactures midway between the decennial censuses.

Mr. MANN. What census do they take next year that is not being taken now, provided for in this item?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. They take the census of manufactures.

Mr. MANN. What has this to do with manufactures? What language is there in this item that covers manufactures?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. There is a law requiring a census of manufactures to be taken, and we are simply providing for it in this amount.

Mr. MANN. But I do not see it. Where is there any authorization in this item to take a census of manufactures?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It is authorized by law.

Mr. MANN. I suppose it might be construed to be included in the language—

For securing information for census reports, provided for by law—

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is the authority.

Mr. MANN. It further says:

semimonthly reports of cotton production, periodical reports of stocks of baled cotton in the United States and of domestic and foreign consumption of cotton.

If the appropriation for the manufacturers' census is included in the cotton census, I think that is a matter that is subject to criticism. They make the cotton census regularly, and entirely separate and apart from the manufacturers' census. To include them both in one item is no proper method of making appropriations, I take it.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Why do not the committee separate the two things, so that the public will know that the manufactures census is to be taken out of this money thus appropriated? They have specified everything else.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No; we do not specify everything.

Mr. MADDEN. The manufactures census is quite as important as the cotton census, and it ought to be set forth in the appropriation, so that the people will know the money is to be expended for that purpose and for no other purpose.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman had been very anxious to find out, he could have found out.

Mr. MADDEN. That is what I am asking for now. I thought the gentleman was the source of all knowledge in connection with this bill, and that it would be futile to look for information anywhere else. So I am on my feet asking the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The report sets out the fact that we appropriate so much money, and that the reason for appropriating it is in order to take this census of manufactures.

Mr. MADDEN. I know the reasons, but what about stating it in the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We not only set out in the report the reason for the increased appropriation but we set out the amount that it will take to have the work done.

Mr. MADDEN. But I assume that the gentleman knows that when the bill is enacted into law the report is not a part of the law.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; but the report is for the information of the House, and I thought the gentleman from Illinois was seeking information.

Mr. MADDEN. That is what I am doing, but I should like to know what is going to be done with the money after the bill is passed?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We are going to take a census of manufactures, and the estimates set out how many people they are going to employ and what they expect to pay them.

Mr. MADDEN. Good.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. So that the estimates and the report and the law together make a very clear exposition of the matter, as the gentleman will see if he will examine them.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the gentleman will pardon me, the bill on its face provides—

For securing information for census reports, provided for by law.

The law provides for the making of this census of manufactures. I do not see how it could be any more plain.

Mr. MADDEN. I thank the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] for the very full exposition which they have made of the matter, and the information which they have furnished.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To further promote and develop the foreign and domestic commerce of the United States, $75,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce: Provided, That not exceeding $3,000 out of the sum hereby appropriated may be expended for the purchase of documents, manuscripts, plans, specifications, and other publications necessary for the promotion of our commercial interests.

[Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph close in five minutes.

Mr. PHELAN. Make it seven minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will modify my request and make it seven minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph close in seven minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I simply rise to say that I am heartily in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. MURDOCK. What was the amendment?

Mr. MADDEN. To strike out the last word. [Laughter.]

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Chairman, the provisions contained in this paragraph, together with the other provisions contained in this section, are in line with the suggestions made by the Secretary of Commerce in his last report. Secretary Redfield, as a large manufacturer and exporter, is peculiarly fitted to deal with the problem of the development of our foreign trade, and he has applied himself to the work with a most commendable energy and enterprise. The country is to be congratulated that it is enabled to avail itself of his invaluable service in this department. I believe the work which he has done in the past 13 months is but the start in the growth of a future tremendous export trade.

There is no part of the country which is more vitally interested in foreign trade than the section in which I live—New England. Indeed, the particular district which I have the honor to represent in Congress is second to no other congressional district in the Nation in its industrial prominence. The city of Lynn ranks high in its electrical products and is the leading shoe producer of the country. The city of Lawrence far exceeds any other city of the United States in the production of worsteds, and the town of Peabody is the leading center in the production of leather. I might add that although the cities of Lawrence and Lynn are outranked by many other cities in population, the city of Lawrence stands twenty-fourth and the city of Lynn stands thirtieth in the value of its manufactured output, according to the last census report, for the whole United States. I have mentioned New England in particular because it is a part of the country from which I come, but I appreciate that the extension of our export trade is of the utmost importance to the whole country. Mr. E. A. Brand, of the Department of Commerce, in speaking before the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce in 1912, pointed out that in 20 years the products of our mills had increased from $9,000,000,000 to an aggregate value of $21,000,000,000 in 1912. He stated:

These figures indicate clearly that we are reaching a point where our ability to produce will be greater than our ability to consume. Until within the past few years American manufacturers had been occupied fully in furnishing supplies for domestic markets, so that relatively few of them had given consideration to the opportunities that are offered in markets beyond the seas.

In various lines of production American enterprise and ingenuity have enabled us to lead the world. In spite of this fact we have not taken advantage of our superiority, but for one reason or another have neglected to reach out into the fields of trade and commerce abroad. For example: We have demonstrated that we make the best boots and shoes in the world. Where we have competed with foreign countries we have beaten them. Indeed, in spite of the disadvantage of tariffs and freights we have gone right into foreign countries and sold our boots and shoes in competition with domestic producers. Yet our exportation of boots and shoes amounted to only $16,000,000, according to the census of 1912. Of this amount less than five and one-half millions consisted of women's shoes, although women's shoes in particular demand style and fit, two things in which our American manufacturers are unequaled.

I believe one reason for our failure to develop our exports in anything like the measure we ought to do is that we have been too much engrossed with our domestic trade and have not even made a real attempt to invade the foreign fields. Moreover, when we do endeavor to sell our manufactured products abroad we make too little investigation of the needs and desires and tastes of our prospective customers in foreign lands. Instead we attempt to sell them the styles and grades which we ourselves use. In other words, we do not adapt our product to their wants. If we are to extend our foreign trade, we must invade the foreign field with the same energy and activity that we show in seeking domestic trade. American manufacturers must be made to realize the opportunity abroad, and the Government should give every cooperation in furnishing our manufacturers with the information which will enable them to know the lands of opportunity and to become familiar with the particular wants of each country in which we attempt to sell our product.

Within very recent years a great step forward has been taken in the extension of our foreign trade. Secretary Redfield in his last report, after referring to our $2,466,000,000 of exports, states:

Quite as important as the aggregate, however, are some of the details that go to make up the totals. Our exports of domestic manufactured goods of all kinds amounted to $1,507,000,000, or 63 per cent of our total domestic exports Again, it will be noted with special interest that out of this total of sales of manufactures the particular portion which represents the sales of fully finished manufactures was $778,000,000 in value, or 50 per cent of the total exports of manufactures. To state it differently, our exports of crude foodstuffs and of crude materials of other kinds have fallen to a minor place, and the largest element in the greatest aggregate of foreign sales ever made is that of manufactured goods, and among these manufactured goods the item of fully finished manufactures is the largest. It is also that which has been growing most rapidly.

A glance at these figures will show not only what has been done within the past few years but will indicate, what is much more important and significant, the opportunity there is for the future.

In the final analysis the development of our export trade will depend upon our own manufactures, but the Government can be of great help to our manufacturers, especially at the present time when we are only just beginning to develop this great field. The provisions of this bill to which I have referred will afford a great opportunity for aid in this growth. In addition to the $75,000 which is to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce to promote and develop the foreign and domestic commerce of the United States, a new appropriation of $50,000 will be appropriated for promoting commerce in South and Central America. One hundred thousand dollars, moreover, is appropriated in this bill for commercial attachés to be accredited through the State Department to investigate and report on conditions in the manufacturing industries and trade of foreign industries as may be of interest to the United States. At the present time our consular agents abroad investigate foreign conditions and make reports thereon. While they have rendered valuable service, very much better service can be obtained through these special attachés, whose sole business will be to investigate and report on the trade conditions. They will obtain for us information which will be invaluable to our American manufacturers.

Supplementing the work of these foreign attachés an increased appropriation in this bill will enable the Secretary of Commerce to appoint additional commercial agents similar to those now established in New York, Chicago, San Francisco, and New Orleans. These commercial agents will disseminate promptly and fully the information obtained from the attachés and consuls abroad, and all other information relative to trade which comes into the possession of the Department of Commerce. This great Department of Commerce, working through its Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, constantly will be placing before our American producers the situation and conditions abroad and will be constantly urging our producers to investigate this great field of commerce. Our manufacturers will receive the information necessary, they will receive the incentive necessary, and the only thing remaining for them will be to take advantage of their opportunities—an advantage which I think they will be very quick to grasp.

When we recognize the supremacy of the American manufacturer in the many lines of production, we are sometimes almost astounded by the relatively small export trade of this country. It is only fair to say, however, that in some respects we have been at a disadvantage compared to some foreign countries. The opening of the Panama Canal has already done a great deal to call attention to the importance of our foreign trade. The canal itself will be of inestimable value in the development of this trade. There is, however, one great piece of constructive legislation, which has recently been enacted into law, which will do as much for the extension of our trade across the seas as any single piece of legislation which has been enacted in a generation. I refer to the Federal reserve act, which is the work of this Democratic administration. Under our national banking law, no provision was made for the establishment of an American bank in foreign countries. Foreign countries, England and Germany in particular, have their banks scattered all over the world.

One of the greatest obstacles to the extension of our foreign trade has been the lack of our American banks in foreign countries. By means of their banks England and Germany have diverted millions and millions of dollars of trade to those countries which rightfully belonged to us. They have come to our very doors in South America and have taken trade away from us. Under the banking and currency act recently passed provision is made for the establishment of American banks in foreign countries. Within a few years we undoubtedly will have such banks. Thus one of the greatest deficiencies in the development of our foreign trade has been supplied. I regard this single feature of our banking and currency law as one of the important achievements of our Democratic administration, and while great credit has been given the Democratic Party for this legislative work, I believe there are few in the country who will realize the importance or the significance of this single feature of the Federal reserve act. The provisions of this bill to which I referred will be a great aid in the growth of this export trade. While the amount of money asked for is relatively small, it signifies the purpose of the present administration to do everything possible to develop our foreign exports and thus help our American producers, who in turn will give added employment to our wage earners.

These simple provisions are in line with the other constructive work of this administration. I have already pointed out a single section of the Federal reserve act which will also aid in the development and growth of our export trade. From the time President Wilson called this Congress into special session we have been constantly at work on constructive legislation. Our purpose is to build up and develop.

I have taken time to comment on these few sections of this lengthy appropriation because I am impressed with the constant endeavor of those responsible for legislation in this Congress to develop production in this country to the benefit and prosperity of every citizen in the Nation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the item under consideration is to further promote and develop the foreign and domestic commerce of the United States. It carries $75,000. One would have supposed, to listen to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, that this was some new enterprise appropriating some enormous sum. The fact is, it is an increase of $15,000 over the existing appropriation. Whether it is intended to expend the $15,000 in Boston, I am not certain, but I judge that that, with the balance of it, they expect to go there. The truth is that this side of the House for the last two years, at least, since the provision went into the legislative bill reorganizing the service, has been trying to get proper appropriations for this purpose and for other purposes. On this side of the House we have offered that side the opportunity several times to vote down amendments giving sufficient amounts for this purpose, and that side of the House has never yet declined to do that. It has always voted down any amendment to increase the amount. While my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. MURRAY] congratulates the committee in bringing in some items this year following the items which we offered as amendments last year, I am not sure whether it is the Committee on Appropriations or the majority side of it which is entitled to congratulations or the minority side of the House, which kept at the subject, insisting upon votes upon it until you gentlemen ran away from your position and yielded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Investigating cost of production: For salaries and all other actual necessary expenses, including field investigations at home and abroad, compensation of experts and special agents, to be employed in Washington, D. C., or in the field, rental of quarters outside of the District of Columbia when required, purchase of books of reference and manuscripts, to enable the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce to ascertain at as early a date as possible, and whenever industrial changes shall make it essential, the cost of producing articles at the time dutiable in the United States, in leading countries where such articles are produced, by fully specified units of production, and under a classification showing the different elements of cost of such articles of production, including the wages paid in such industries per day, week, month, or year, or by the piece; and hours employed per day; and the profits of manufacturers and producers of such articles; and the comparative cost of living and the kind of living; what articles are controlled by trusts or other combinations of capital, business operations, or labor, and what effect said trusts or other combinations of capital, business operations, or labor have on production and prices, $50,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 123, line 8, amend by striking out "$50,000" and inserting "$100,000."

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BARNHART). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division. That is what the department asked for. Let us give it to them.

Mr. MURDOCK. This is in place of a tariff commission.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 21, noes 38.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. MANN and Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina were appointed to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 33, noes 59.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Promoting commerce, South and Central America: To further promote and develop the commerce of the United States with South and Central America, including the employment of experts and special agents in Washington, D. C., and elsewhere, purchase of books of reference, reports, traveling and subsistence expenses of officers and employees, and all other necessary incidental expenses not included in the foregoing, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce, $50,000.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], a few moments ago, in support of the amendment he proposed, criticized the Democrats for not increasing the appropriation from $50,000 to $100,000 and at the same time ridiculed the gentleman from Boston [Mr. MURRAY] for praising the appropriation in the provision passed just prior to the last provision, because it carries an increase of only $15,000 from the last appropriation bill. The gentleman is mistaken about the increase being only $15,000. In the last appropriation bill $60,000 was carried in that provision to promote "domestic and foreign commerce." That was all that was appropriated by the Government for this important work. In this bill $275,000 is carried to encourage and promote this work. You will notice that there is an increase of $15,000 carried in this provision over last year. A provision for $50,000 is carried for investigating the cost of production and $50,000 for promoting our commerce in "South and Central America" and $100,000 for "commercial attachés of the Department of Commerce." Does not that look like a very material increase over past appropriations for this important service in the department?

I believe that this infant bureau in this department, together with the infant bureau in the Department of Agriculture known as the Division of Markets, are destined to work much good and be of untold benefit to the people of this country. The Bureau of Markets will assist the farmers of the country in producing, marketing, and transporting their produce and selling it to the consumers of the country, cutting out much of the expense and charges now extorted from the producers and consumers by the transportation companies and the middleman. These appropriations for promoting our domestic and foreign trade are destined to build up and enlarge our commercial relations with foreign countries. The people in my section, and I believe all over the country, are particularly interested at this time in building up and increasing our trade, particularly with South and Central America. I recall that last year the city of Mobile was so anxious to do something in this work in order to enlarge the trade relations between the United States and South and Central America, that the enterprising merchants of that city sent a large delegation of their leading business men into that country to study the trade there and bring about closer and kindlier feeling between the business people of those countries and our country.

The Department of Commerce sent a representative of that department along with them. That representative did magnificent service for the department and the Gulf Coast section of this country. The reports of the trade conditions there were full and most enlightening and were read with much interest by the business people of this country. I am told that from this visit by those business men into South and Central America much good from a business standpoint has come to the people of Mobile. I understand that like good has come to the people of the city of New Orleans from having sent into those countries representatives of their business interest. The movement has proven such a success that the enterprising business people of other cities are doing the same work. The bureau in the Department of Commerce was not inaugurated by the Republican Party, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] would have the House believe, but the bureau was organized and the initial appropriation provided by a Democratic House of Representatives in the Sixty-second Congress, and since that time the bureau has constantly grown stronger, and by its successful operation and the benefits accomplished popularized itself with the Republicans of the House and the business people of the country. So important is the work of enlarging our domestic and foreign trade and broadening the markets of the world for our merchants and manufacturers that the United States Chamber of Commerce has been organized. It is doing a wonderful work, and has indorsed most enthusiastically the work undertaken by this department of the Government in promoting our trade relations with foreign countries. The Secretary of Commerce, in December, before the Appropriations Committee, said that 624 boards of trade throughout the United States had indorsed what he had asked the Committee on Appropriations to do for this work.

I want to read into the RECORD, Mr. Chairman, what the trade was—the imports to South American countries—in 1911. The imports into South America in 1911 amounted to $790,000,000, and of that amount the United States obtained only $125,000,000, or 17 per cent. In 1912 the imports into South American countries amounted to $900,000,000, and of that amount the United States obtained only $141,000,000, or 16 per cent, showing that from the year 1911 to the year 1912 the trade of the United States into South American countries really fell off 1 per cent. Germany, England, France, and many of the other foreign countries are expending large sums in these countries for this trade. The amount of trade obtained by Germany is the best evidence as to whether these agents are accomplishing anything for those countries.

They are our nearest neighbors. We ought to get the largest part of their trade, and I believe that this Government can do no better service than to appropriate liberally for this particular kind of work. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that we have in this country the most ingenious and the thriftiest business people in all the world. I believe that our manufacturers are the best manufacturers, our merchants the best merchants, and our salesmen the best salesmen that can be found. Believing in their unsurpassed qualities of thrift, economy, and ingenuity as I do, I have no doubt that they will always be able to compete in the markets of the world with foreign competitors.

It was said that the tariff bill would cripple our manufacturers and lessen the trade of this country. What are the facts? During the last six months of the year 1913, four months of which time the new Underwood tariff bill was operating, our foreign trade balances were $38,000,000 more than for the last six months in the preceding year, and our exports exceeded our imports during these last six months of the year 1913 over $400,000,000.

The Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Redfield, stated before the Committee on Appropriations the other day that—

> The exports of the United States for the first four months of this fiscal year were almost exactly $839,000,000, which, as you see readily, is at the rate of $2,500,000,000 per annum.

I believe that the growing increase in our exports in the past, large as they are, will not compare with what they will be in the near future. But while this is true, I think we ought to do all we can to encourage this war of trade that our business people throughout the country are waging in order to open up new markets and dominate old markets with American products. I would much prefer seeing the people of my country an exporting people rather than an importing people. When we are an importing people the money is constantly being drained from us and going into other countries. When we are an exporting people we are constantly enriching ourselves by draining other countries.

The effect is felt, to a more or less extent, in every avenue of trade in this country of every new customer our merchants or manufacturers discover in a foreign market. Suppose a wholesale merchant of one of our cities obtains a customer who lives in Argentina and who formerly had bought his cotton goods in Germany. The sale not only helps the merchant who made it and all who depend on his business, but it helps the manufacturer who manufactured the goods; it gives employment to that much more labor; it also aids the farmer who produces the cotton.

I congratulate the committee on their good judgment and liberality of treatment in providing for this important work of the Government. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Page 123, line 17, after the word "commerce," strike out "$50,000" and insert "$100,000."

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, by this amendment I am seeking to increase the amount carried in the bill for the promoting of commerce in South and Central America from $50,000 to $100,000, the sum asked for by the Secretary of Commerce in his estimates. We have just listened to the very illuminating address of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], setting forth the figures of the foreign trade of South America, and particularly the trade between this country and South and Central America. He has shown conclusively, it seems to me, that we are getting a very small proportion of that trade, much less than that to which we are entitled, and has demonstrated clearly the necessity of adopting the amendment under consideration. Now, Mr. Chairman, with the opening of the Panama Canal there will be a greater field for business in South and Central America. Already Great Britain, Germany, and the other countries of Europe are appreciating this opportunity and are sending through those countries their representatives. They have the trade now. We have hardly 10 per cent of it, and there is no reason why this country should not have a much larger proportion of that trade. My amendment, Mr. Chairman, simply carries out the recommendation of the Democratic Secretary of Commerce, a business man, a man of large affairs in business, a man who knows the need of this very thing. The Members of the House who have examined the hearings before the committee on this subject know he set up a very excellent case. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has referred to the fact that this matter has been taken up by the representatives of boards of trade throughout the country.

I have in my hand a report by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America, the most important organization of business men in the United States, whose membership consists of all the important chambers of commerce, boards of trade, manufacturers' associations, and business men's associations of the more important cities and towns of this country. At the recent annual convention of this organization held in Washington the subject of our trade with South and Central America was widely discussed. The very matter we are talking about was considered as was also the question of commercial attachés, which is to be taken up by the committee after this paragraph in the bill is disposed of. A committee appointed by this organization composed of the foremost business men of the country examined the subject exhaustively, and, among other things, maintained that information relative to trade and contract opportunities, financial and credit conditions in foreign countries is mainly obtained through consuls who transmit such information by letter to the Department of State, which in turn makes the information available through the Department of Commerce. It has been asserted that the consuls of the State Department do not possess the proper business experience for the work provided in this legislation, and this committee of the United States Chamber of Commerce strongly advocated a liberal appropriation for the employment of these commercial agents for South and Central America and for commercial attachés to further our business throughout the world. In a statement before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, which prepared this bill, Secretary Redfield, among other things, made this statement:

> Now, in the same way we want to send a man to South America, let us say, on cotton, another man on boots and shoes, another man on canned goods, another man on woolens, and another man on machinery—each of them traveling as a specialist in that single line throughout all the countries of South and Central America. This is to be a regular commercial force, just as it has been called, and it is intended to be employed especially in collecting commercial information about South America, in view of the increased demands for information about that country. That was put at the special request—and with the hearty approval of the President—of the United States Chamber of Commerce and of the manufacturers' associations in order that there might be developed a more thorough and systematic knowledge of the markets in South and Central America. We have done almost nothing in Central America.

This House has appropriated millions of dollars for the development of agriculture, the building of roads, and has provided for the expenditure of upward of $40,000,000 for the building of the Alaska railroad, and every year over $200,000,000 for the maintenance of the Army and Navy, while my amendment simply provides for the meager sum of $100,000 to be expended for extending our trade with South and Central America. We have already established a considerable trade with Argentina in beef, and have for years maintained a large trade with Brazil in coffee, rubber, asphalt, and other products. We are the "big brother" of the whole South American Continent, and there is no reason why we should not have a larger portion of their trade. This is not alone a matter of interest to the great manufacturing centers of the country—extension of foreign trade means an increase in business in every industry. The manufacturer must obtain his raw material from the forest, the farm, and the mine. The development of our export trade, despite the difficulties we have had to overcome, is the marvel of the civilized world. In 1896, the last year of the former Democratic administration of the United States, our exports amounted to $882,606,938; the fiscal year ending July 1, 1913, practically the last year of Republican administration, our export trade had increased to $2,465,884,149, and in the same period our imports have increased from $779,724,674 in the year 1896 to $1,813,008,234 in the fiscal year 1913. The development of our foreign commerce, as indicated by the above figures, seems almost incredible and are indicative of the enterprise and ingenuity of the business men of the United States. During the past 10 years it has required a ceaseless struggle to maintain our trade abroad. The policy of the Republican Party, through its protective-tariff system, has been to maintain the American market for the American producer, be he farmer or manufacturer.

The action of the Democratic Party in the Underwood tariff law has encouraged the foreigner in the belief that with his cheap labor he will be able to take away from the American producer the markets of the United States. He has a right to that opinion, it seems to me, when we stop to consider that in September, 1913, the last month of the Republican tariff act, 53 per cent of all our imports came in free of duty, while on December of the same year, under a full month's operation of the Underwood tariff law, 63 per cent of all the goods imported came in free of duty. By the action of the Democratic Party we have given a large proportion of our home market to the foreigner, and the things we can manufacture cheaper than he we must seek a larger market for in foreign lands. I hope the Democratic majority of this House will see the force of this situation and support the amendment I have proposed. The Republican Party in Congress in its attitude toward these questions always has been exceedingly liberal. This is the first opportunity since the enactment of the Underwood tariff law that the Democratic Party has had to show how much in earnest they are to help develop the business of the country. I referred a moment ago to the action of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. In a referendum submitted to the organizations throughout the country affiliated with the national body, out of answers received from 196 organizations situated in 34 States, the District of Columbia, Hawaii, Porto Rico, and the American Chamber of Commerce in Paris, France, through their representatives casting 627 votes, 624 were in favor of this proposition and the appointment of commercial attachés, and only 3 were opposed. It seems to me that this is sufficient evidence of how the country stands on the subject. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely trust my amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. MURDOCK rose.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. MURDOCK. Three or four minutes. I desire to support the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in eight minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I understand I am to have three minutes of that time. Mr. Chairman, I favor the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDER] increasing this amount. It is of the highest importance that this Government have political and commercial amity with all the Western Hemisphere. We have heard in the last few moments on the floor of this House that the Atlantic Squadron has been ordered to Tampico. I am glad it has been ordered there to make the Mexicans respect the American flag. [Applause.] But I do not want trouble between our country and any of the South American Republics. Our interests are mutual in this part of the world and we ought to promote them in every way possible. When I was a youth I remember I read, among the first political addresses I ever perused, a paper by James G. Blaine dealing with the mutual commercial possibilities of the Western Hemisphere. He had a real vision in this regard. He believed in building up our trade in South America. It has not been built up; it has been permitted to lag. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] says that it is falling off. Now, here is an opportunity for the House in a practical way to foster this idea and work by an appropriation of $50,000. We have sent Secretaries, members of the Cabinet, south in the past, and will continue to do so in the future, for the purpose of increasing our commercial contact with those nations. Better than sending Secretaries of State through South America is to appropriate $50,000 for dispatching our commercial agents there to do this work of opening new avenues of trade to us. I hope that in this instance the committee will forego its usual pride of standing by its bill and support the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York. It is of decided consequence to the country and will work real benefit to our commerce. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Appropriations were fully impressed with the importance of this work, and we hope that great benefit will come from it, but we believe that the amount we have given in this bill is sufficient for an initial appropriation. It is impossible in the beginning of a new enterprise or a movement like this for a department to use a very great sum of money during the first year. We have been quite liberal in our appropriations in order to encourage our foreign commerce. We believe that during the next fiscal year, with the experience that will come to the Department of Commerce from the expenditure of $275,000 here provided, the department will then be in a better position to expend a larger sum, but for an initial appropriation the amount here provided in the judgment of the committee is sufficient, and I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GARNER). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. CALDER) there were—ayes 27, noes 53.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Commercial attachés, Department of Commerce: For commercial attachés, to be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce, without examination under the civil-service rules, and to be accredited through the State Department, whose duties shall be to investigate and report upon such conditions in the manufacturing industries and trade of foreign countries as may be of interest to the United States; and for one clerk to each of said commercial attachés to be paid a salary not to exceed $1,500 each; and for necessary traveling and subsistence expenses, rent, purchase of reports, travel to and from the United States, and all other necessary expenses not included in the foregoing; such commercial attachés shall serve directly under the Secretary of Commerce and shall report directly to him, $100,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves the point of order.

Mr. RAINEY. I am willing to reserve the point of order—I make the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not make the point of order, because this is a part, and only a part, of the movement for trade the Government is about to initiate. It is no more subject to the point of order than the items which we have just passed.

I do no care to take up the time of the House. The Members all understand what the committee has in mind and what the administration desires to accomplish by these appropriations, and it seems to me that the entire scheme should be allowed to be initiated by the Department of Commerce. It is subject to a point of order if the gentleman insists upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] insist upon his point of order?

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, this section confers upon the Secretary of Commerce the right to appoint an indefinite number of commercial agents or attachés. It also requires that the attachés or agents so appointed shall be accredited by the State Department, and it also provides that they shall report directly to the Secretary of Commerce. Now, this is clearly new legislation.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. We admit that.

Mr. RAINEY. The act creating the Department of Commerce does not authorize the creation of new consular agents in a new manner, but it simply authorizes the Secretary of Commerce to collect commercial data at home and abroad in various ways and through our commercial agents abroad. But our commercial agents and attachés abroad are required by the act to report directly to the Secretary of State, and through the Secretary of State the reports may be transmitted to the Secretary of Commerce. This is clearly new legislation, and it is contrary to the existing law. I am compelled to make the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman withhold his point of order?

Mr. RAINEY. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the committee gave particular attention to this provision of the bill which we are now considering. I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] will not make the point of order; but if the legislation to which he refers is objectionable, I hope he will offer amendments to change it by removing the objection. With the opening of the Panama Canal, as has been suggested, we ought to be in a position to take advantage of the great trade that will be opened up in South America, and unless we do it then, trade lines will be established, and the trade that we ought to get for our manufacturers will go to other countries. Once established elsewhere, it will be hard then to attract this trade to our manufacturers. There is some objection to the legislation, as pointed out by the gentleman from Illinois, but I think he can correct that by appropriate amendment. This provision is a part of a great plan of a great Secretary of Commerce to secure our just share of this commerce for our manufacturers. And if it had not been that we recommended $100,000 for commercial attachés, as requested by the Secretary of Commerce, to secure a part of this trade, I have no doubt that we would have enlarged the opportunities of the Secretary of Commerce to secure this trade in other ways by giving additional appropriations in the two preceding paragraphs.

I hope the gentleman from Illinois, instead of making a point of order will simply offer such amendments to the provisions to which he makes objections, in order that he may perfect it and remove those objections, without at the same time preventing the Secretary of Commerce from securing for the people of the United States, for the manufacturers and producers, the great advantages that will no doubt come through the opening up of these new channels of trade and commerce that will be opened and established if this provision, or something like it, should be agreed upon.

Mr. BARTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I will yield.

Mr. BARTON. Are you in favor of this clause, which says:

Without examination under the civil-service rules.

Mr. GOOD. I do not care very much about that provision. I think the great object which the Secretary of Commerce wishes to attain is so important—that we open up so far as we can this great country for our manufactures—that I do not regard as very important the manner of their appointment nor to whom reports should be made. These matters I am perfectly willing to leave to the Secretary of Commerce, a successful business man and a great Secretary of Commerce. He is abundantly able to make such appointments. It is of the utmost importance that Congress shall give to the Secretary of Commerce power to secure for our manufacturers a part of this trade, and, in my opinion, his plan is the best plan that has yet been devised for this purpose.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of all of these items which will tend to increase our foreign commerce, and believe that we can wisely and profitably expend considerable amounts of money in that direction. I am not so sure about this particular item, which proposes to place the State Department officials under the control of the Department of Commerce so that they will report directly to the Department of Commerce without that report passing through the Department of State. When we created the Department of Commerce it was proposed to transfer to it the Consular Service of the United States, because the consuls are engaged not in diplomatic negotiations but in actual business transactions.

The State Department represented to our committee at the time that that ought not to be done, because consuls were constantly sending in reports and using language in reference to foreign countries which involved diplomatic negotiations, and the State Department desired to have the Consular Service remain under the control of the State Department and have the consuls report to the State Department and permit the State Department to blue pencil anything in the consular reports which might lead to trouble between this country and some other countries. And in the end that was the view which the committee took. We were shown at that time by the State Department, confidentially, a number of reports from consuls, made in good faith undoubtedly, but which if published here and sent abroad would have caused as much trouble there, very likely, as the refusal of Mexico to salute the American flag, which is for no reason that I know. Now, I do not know what the effect would be if you permit the State Department to accredit to a foreign Government an official who reports not to the State Department but to the Department of Commerce, which does not have control over diplomatic negotiations; but I suspect it would not be long before we were explaining or apologizing for language which some enthusiastic gentleman had used in regard to some foreign country.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on his point of order?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes; I insist on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. One moment, Mr. Chairman. I move to insert, after the word "fifty," line 17, page 123, the language now printed, striking out the words "and to be accredited through the State Department."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman from South Carolina proposes, after the words "fifty thousand," in line 17, to add these words:

Commercial attachés, Department of Commerce: For commercial attachés to be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce, without examination under the civil-service rules, whose duty shall be to investigate and report upon such conditions—

And so forth, down to and including line 5, on page 124, and striking out the language in line 21, on page 23—

And to be accredited through the State Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 123, line 18, reinsert the paragraph with the following language, after the word "rules," in line 21, stricken out: "And to be accredited through the State Department."

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that, or I will reserve it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It is not necessary if the gentleman wishes to make it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] makes the point of order, and the point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Steamboat-Inspection Service: Supervising Inspector General, $4,000; chief clerk and Acting Supervising Inspector General in the absence of that officer, $2,000; clerks—2 of class 3; 1 of class 2; 1 of class 1; 2 at $1,000 each; 1, $900; messenger; in all, $15,540.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDER] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 124, line 8, after the word "officer," strike out "$2,000" and insert "$2,400."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against that.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment increases the salary of the chief clerk and Acting Supervising Inspector General of the Steamboat-Inspection Service from $2,000 to $2,400.

An examination of the hearings before the subcommittee on this bill will demonstrate that this man, acting for the Supervising Inspector General during his absence in London attending the International Convention of Maritime Nations, appeared before the committee and in the hearings displayed unusual and intelligent knowledge of his bureau. You find upon examining the bill that there is a large number of men in this bureau serving under this man who receive a larger salary than he does. He is a very excellent public servant. I do not know the man—I never saw him but the one time when he was before our committee—but it seems to me that in justice to this particular individual his compensation ought to be increased.

An examination of the items in the bill will show that the salaries of the deputy commissioners and assistant chiefs of the different bureaus in the Department of Commerce range from $2,400 to $4,000, excepting for this man, and he receives but $2,000. I suppose he has been one of those efficient public servants who has plodded along without any politics or personal backing and has been overlooked. As I said a moment ago, I have no personal interest in him, but am only seeking to right an injustice. Those familiar with the service he is performing believe, I am sure, that he should receive at least $3,000 per annum, but I am simply offering an amendment increasing the salary to the lowest figure any deputy commissioner in the Department of Commerce is receiving.

We have in the Steamboat-Inspection Service a very excellent staff of men. Gen. Uhler, the head of the service, has through his efficient management brought it to a high state of efficiency, and if the amendment I have offered prevails I will move to increase his salary to $5,000. Mr. Chairman, this is a simple act of fair dealing to a faithful official, and I hope that it will have the approval of the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order. The amendment is not subject to a point of order. It is not a statutory position. But, Mr. Chairman, I think, in view of our liberality to the Department of Commerce, we would better vote down this and other amendments increasing the amounts.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDER].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. CALDER. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 27, noes 32.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the investigation of the standards and methods of measurements of public utilities, such as gas, electric light, electric power, water, telephone, and electric railway service, and the solution of the problems which arise in connection with standards in such service, $25,000.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 131, line 16, after the words "$25,000" insert "For the development of color standards and methods of color measurements, with special reference to their use in the industries, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $7,500."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the amount suggested in the amendment is the amount estimated by the department, and in view of the importance of the work I had hoped that the committee might accept this amendment.

I shall not detain the House by any extended remarks, except to refer you to the hearings had before the committee. This is Dr. Stratton's statement and the statement of Secretary Redfield:

Secretary REDFIELD. We have just begun. This is for the purpose of segregating these matters in order that their actual progress may be known. We are not conducting these investigations out of lump-sum appropriations where that can not be known. This is of the greatest possible interest to the lithographing and printer's ink trade and all trades of that kind, who have found themselves entirely incompetent to either have this work done for them or to do it for themselves. The vice president of one of the great lithographing companies told me they had spent over $200,000 in vain in this matter, and we can do it at a comparatively small cost.

Mr. STRATTON. The cottonseed-oil people will pay the entire expense of that investigation if we will let them. Laws are already being passed in the various States requiring that oleomargarine shall not be colored more than a certain percentage. The moment you say it shall not be colored more than a certain amount, it involves a standard of color and color measurement. The paper, textile, and pottery industries are all in need of these standards. This does not involve the expense that some of the other investigations do. It is largely a question of three or four experts and some special equipment. We have one man working on it now. It properly comes under our optical work, but we can not reach results in the time that is wanted or in the way that is wanted.

The bureau is doing excellent work along this line. A number of industries desire this legislation. Undoubtedly it is of great importance, and I trust that the committee will accept the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I do not think this amendment is subject to a point of order, and therefore I do not make it.

We have been very liberal in the appropriations made for the Bureau of Standards, and I am satisfied that if it does not cost over $7,500 to do the particular work the gentleman has in mind it can be done out of the appropriation that we have made, where it is not specifically provided what shall be done with the money. We carry in the first paragraph, under the Bureau of Standards, more than $290,000, and inasmuch as the committee has been so liberal in dealing with the Bureau of Standards I hope this amendment will not be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina withdrew the point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent of buildings and parts of buildings in the District of Columbia, $49,800.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 133, in line 23, after the word "Columbia," insert the following: "including quarters for the Bureau of Labor Statistics of not less than 11,500 feet of floor space."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent of quarters for the accommodation of the Census Office, $17,500, and the Secretary of Commerce is authorized to enter into a contract for the lease, for a period not to exceed five years, of a modern fireproof office building or modern fireproof addition to the present Department of Commerce Building, containing no less than 50,000 square feet of available floor space for use of the Census Office, at an annual rental at a rate per square foot of available floor space not to exceed 35 cents.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. What is proposed by this? It was stated in the papers recently that this contract had already been let. Is that so?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am not certain about that. I do not know whether they have let the contract or not, but it is proposed by that provision to allow the Secretary of Commerce to remove the Census Bureau up to the new building proposed to be erected adjoining the present department building.

Mr. MANN. It has been stated in the newspapers several times that there have been negotiations about this, and that the Secretary had let a contract and signed a lease. Certainly the committee knows whether or not that is so.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman that, so far as I am concerned, I do not know whether there has been a contract executed or not. I have noticed the statement to which the gentleman alludes.

Mr. MANN. Did it excite the curiosity of my friend the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Not to the extent that I inquired into it.

Mr. MANN. It is remarkable that the gentleman did not inquire when he saw a statement that the head of a department had let a contract without any authority at all.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It was stated in the hearings by the Secretary of Commerce, as I remember, that he could acquire a sufficient floor space at 40 cents per square foot, and that there were those who would erect a building of sufficient size adjoining the present department building for that amount of rent.

And he further stated that if the Census Bureau was permitted to move its quarters to the new location adjoining the present department building he would be able to dispense with, I think, something like $16,000 or $17,000 a year for employees and other expenses necessary to be incurred while the bureau is quartered down here in this building adjoining the Capitol.

Mr. MANN. The Census Building down here was constructed for the census of 1900, I think.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes; I think so.

Mr. MANN. At that time there was no permanent Census Bureau. It was a temporary organization created every 10 years for the taking of the decennial census. Then came along a proposition to keep it permanently in existence, and they retained that building. Now, suppose the Census Office moves into this new building and abandons the present building, what will happen when we take the next census? Will we build another new building for it temporarily?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That was a question that was inquired into by the committee, and it was thought by the Secretary and the Director of the Census that there would be no trouble in acquiring buildings with sufficient additional space for the comparatively short period of time that it would be required. Of course no definite steps could be taken now looking to the renting of additional space.

The gentleman will remember that it was necessary to rent some additional buildings for taking the former census. I have one in mind which, I think, was up on Louisiana Avenue. I am not sure about that, but there were two or three buildings rented in addition to the one next to the Capitol.

Mr. MANN. But not now.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, no; they were rented temporarily, and it will be necessary to do the same thing when the next census is taken.

Mr. MANN. What will this building down by the corner of the Capitol grounds be used for?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have no idea. They were very anxious to rent it to the Government, but there is no provision in this bill for its rental, and, of course, it falls back upon the hands of the owners.

Mr. MANN. This building was constructed for a census building. I have seen it criticized somewhere lately, but when it was constructed they said it was the best building for the purpose that had ever been known. Under the circumstances, why should not the Government try to get a reduction of the rental? What can the owners of this building down here do with it? What is it good for?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman very frankly that they did undertake to submit a proposition whereby they would considerably reduce the rent for the building here adjoining the Capitol, and the committee considered the matter quite seriously; but, as I stated awhile ago, the Secretary of Commerce submitted a statement which showed that about $20,000 a year—I am speaking in round numbers—could be saved if he was permitted to move the Census Bureau up to the new buildings adjoining the department building. The committee took into consideration the fact that they could save $20,000 a year, and they thought it was a better business proposition. In fact, as I remember, it would save $60,000 to $70,000 in the course of a few years.

Mr. MANN. I have a great deal of respect and regard both for the distinguished Secretary of Commerce and for the Committee on Appropriations. But I have not the slightest doubt that any individual in this House could rent this Census Building down here for one-half or one-third what it will cost to put the bureau in a new building up there where the Department of Commerce is located on Pennsylvania Avenue. What can they use this building here for? They can not put a beer garden down here, and there is no demand for a roller-skating rink. What else can they use it for?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman that there are a great many people who think that building is not sanitary.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; I know they talk that way; but no one who ever went into the building would seriously contend that it is not sanitary, as compared with a building constructed of many stories and with very little air in it. The Census Building down here is the only building the Government owns in Washington where you can get clear air and sunshine into the building to any extent. Talk about its not being sanitary, and then talk about the buildings that the Government owns—the Treasury Building and the State, War, and Navy Building——

Mr. MURDOCK. And the old Patent Office.

Mr. MANN. And even the new Agricultural Building, located 20 feet below the ground.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The committee considered both propositions. As I remember, this building here was offered for $15,000 a year.

Mr. BARTLETT. Provided it was taken for 10 years.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Provided it was taken for a period of years. The building to which the Secretary proposes to move the Census Bureau will cost $17,500 a year, I think.

Mr. CALDER. That is correct.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And the Government will save, by way of employees and other expenses necessary in this building, about $20,000 a year, and the committee considered it from a business standpoint.

Mr. MANN. What employees will be dispensed with?

Mr. CALDER. Laborers, painters, carpenters, and so forth.

Mr. MANN. We will not save that. This bill is chock full from one end to the other of charwomen, laborers, engineers, messengers, and employees of that sort in every other department. And do you mean to tell me that you are going to abolish them by transferring the Census Bureau from one place to another?

Mr. CALDER. The Secretary submitted a list of places that we cut out, and he agreed to it, and they amount to over $20,000 a year.

Mr. MANN. Yes; I suppose so. It is nonsense to say that the Government is going to get a new building constructed for a less rental than it can get this building down here for, that was put up for that special purpose and can not be used for any other purpose. However, I will not set up my judgment against that of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws his point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.

Office of the Secretary: Secretary of Labor, $12,000; Assistant Secretary, $5,000; chief clerk, $3,000; disbursing clerk, $3,000; private secretary to the Secretary, $2,500; clerk to the Secretary, $1,800; private secretary to the Assistant Secretary, $2,100; chief of division, $2,500; appointment clerk, $1,800; clerks—2 of class 4, 4 of class 3 (3 transferred from Office Secretary of Commerce and increase of 1), 7 of class 2 (5 transferred from Office Secretary of Commerce and increase of 1), 4 of class 1 (2 transferred from Office Secretary of Commerce and increase of 2), 5 at $1,000 each (2 transferred from Office Secretary of Commerce and increase of 1), 2 at $900 each (1 transferred from Office Secretary of Commerce and increase of 1); 2 telephone switchboard operators; 2 messengers; 4 assistant messengers (2 transferred from Office Secretary of Commerce and increase of 2); 3 messenger boys, at $480 each (2 transferred from Office Secretary of Commerce and increase of 1); engineer, $1,000; two skilled laborers, at $840 each (1 transferred from Office Secretary of Commerce and increase of 1); 8 laborers (4 transferred from Office Secretary of Commerce and increase of 3); 4 watchmen (3 transferred from Office Secretary of Commerce and increase of 1); eight charwomen (5 transferred from Office Secretary of Commerce and increase of 3); elevator conductors, at $720 each; in all, $86,740.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, on page 135, line 2, to strike out "$1,000" and insert "$1,200" for the engineer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Amend, on page 135, line 2, by striking out the figures "$1,000" and inserting the figures "$1,200."

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, this engineer is required to look after a heating plant in the building, and is also required to do mechanical work, such as machine work, and so forth. It is a position in which there ought to be not only an engineer but in addition a general utility man. It is not unreasonble, it seems to me, to ask for $1,200 for a salary for anyone that is employed in an important position of this kind, where skill is necessary to efficiently fill the position. I think the committee itself ought to give consent to this increase.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois) there were—11 ayes and 31 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Commissioners of conciliation: To enable the Secretary of Labor to exercise the authority vested in him by section 8 of the act creating the Department of Labor, and to appoint commissioners of conciliation at not exceeding $10 per day while actually employed in any case of labor dispute, and for their traveling expenses and subsistence while so employed, $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I think the Department of Labor ought to have all the money necessary to conduct the business of that department. I do not think it is necessary, Mr. Chairman, to appropriate—although I shall not make any motion to reduce it—$25,000 permanently for the purpose provided for in this paragraph. The purpose, as I understand, and testified to by the Secretary of Labor on several occasions, one on the deficiency bill last year, is that he desires to permanently organize in the Department of Labor a division which would become permanent, not for the purpose of settling labor disputes of laborers engaged in work on railroads or manufactures for interstate commerce, but to settle labor disputes that are entirely within the locality and jurisdiction of the State. I know it is useless to suggest that Congress has not or ought not to have the power to send men from the Department of Labor to inquire into the business in various localities which are not affected or do not affect interstate commerce, labor that is not engaged in the business that is interstate. For one, on the subcommittee when the proposition was submitted on the deficiency bill of 1912 and 1913 at this session, I voted against giving the Commissioner of Labor $20,000 at that time because he asked for the establishment of a permanent bureau in the Department of Labor for this purpose.

Here is the law under which this power is proposed to be exercised, and the only law. It is this:

The Secretary of Labor shall have power to act as mediator and appoint commissioners of conciliation in labor disputes whenever in his judgment for industrial peace it may be required to be done.

That is section 8. Now, we have no authority under that section to establish a permanent bureau in the Department of Labor for that purpose, nor do I think it is wise, Mr. Chairman, for the Congress of the United States to appropriate money to establish a bureau anywhere in Washington for the purpose of sending out officials to engage in the settlement of labor disputes that are wholly within the jurisdiction of the State and which are purely local. I know it is useless and futile to suggest in this House that we have not the power to do anything on earth that we are asked to do, especially where labor is concerned and concerning men engaged in the various occupations of manufacture.

I am not opposed to labor. I am not opposed to organized labor. My record in this Congress from the time I entered it 19 years ago will show that on every occasion in which reasonable demands have been made by labor, reasonable legislation has been asked for, I have been its friend and have supported these measures. The very first bill introduced by me in Congress 19 years ago was a bill to give a right of trial by jury in the Federal court in cases of indirect contempt where men had been arrested charged with violating injunctions. I have in every Congress reintroduced the bill, and I hope that before we adjourn this session we will be enabled to put on the statute books that law and give the laborers the right of trial by jury in contempt cases.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I am one of those who supported the gentleman from Illinois and other members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in reporting to this House the various bills that lessen the hours of labor of those engaged on the interstate railroads. There is no occasion that has arisen in this House whereupon any proposition legitimate and proper for the protection of the rights of labor that I have not supported by my voice and my vote.

I hope I shall have occasion soon to vote for a bill which will take out of the operation of the antitrust laws the right to prosecute labor organizations for organizing themselves in order to better their condition and to lessen the hours of labor. I have introduced a bill for that purpose, which is now being considered by the Judiciary Committee, and I apprehend that no antitrust legislation can pass the House without its being considered and being passed. [Applause.]

I wanted to make this statement, Mr. Chairman, so that I may not be misunderstood in the position I occupy on this proposition. I believe in settling labor disputes by arbitration. I believe that everything ought to be done that can be done to amicably and peacefully settle labor disputes; but I do not believe that the law that we enacted to establish the Bureau of Labor authorizes or justifies a permanent establishment of a department in the Bureau of Labor for that purpose. Much as I respect the laboring man, much as I am concerned in his welfare, as readily and cheerfully as I have voted in the past and will in the future to protect him from wrong, I can not bring myself to the conclusion that it is my duty to vote for a proposition which will subvert the true intent and purposes of this Government. [Applause.]

In matters of this sort which affect purely the locality—the State, the county, or the city—the Federal Government has no right, either by appointing officials temporarily or permanently, to invade the State to say what the States themselves ought to do or what the States themselves ought not to do.

I thought proper, Mr. Chairman, to make this statement, because I am not in favor of the proposition and did not favor it in the committee when it was considered last year or this year. While I may not have reserved the right to oppose it, while I shall not make any motion to strike it out, because I think it would be useless and futile, yet I could not remain silent and permit the proposition to go through.

I repeat, much as I am a friend of labor, much as I have endeavored to assist it in all laudable and reasonable purposes and to support and vote for proper and reasonable and just legislation to better the condition of labor and work in their interest, yet greater than their interest, greater than their rights, is the deep, abiding, and unyielding conviction that I have had all of my life and still maintain, and expect to carry with me through all of my life, that the United States Congress has no power to regulate or meddle with or investigate the purely local affairs of my State.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 135, line 16, strike out "$25,000" and insert "$50,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph close in 10 minutes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, there are other amendments here, and I think we ought to have more time than that. Ten minutes have already been used in opposition to this work at it is.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, let us see who wants to talk.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Oh, let us go on a little while. Let us not be in too much of a hurry in limiting debate. I am not a long-winded fellow, anyway.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that my friend from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] has the wrong conception of this work altogether. His conclusions are wrongly drawn. In the first place, this $25,000 to be expended is not for the purpose of creating any division or permanent employee.

Mr. BARTLETT. I did not say it was. I said that the Secretary of Labor first asked for that.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Even so, I think that provision ought to be in this bill, and there will be an amendment offered for that purpose.

Mr. BARTLETT. There will be a point of order made against it.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The point of order may be sustained. That is one way of defeating these things.

Here are $25,000 appropriated for work of this nature. I hold in my hand a synopsis of the reports of the work that has been done in regard to mediation and conciliation, and, with few exceptions, the department has been successful in preventing strikes and lockouts and other industrial trouble. I wonder how much attention or time the gentlemen on the committee have given to the question of these industrial wars and troubles? I wonder if they understand and know the extent of the misery that has been created by these industrial wars which may be prevented by the expenditure of the pitiful sum of $50,000 without conflicting with any State rights or otherwise in regard to the matter? In fact, this department does not propose to have any power to enforce itself on anyone—does not intend to exercise that power anyway—and unless they had the right, unless it was work in interstate commerce, certainly we could make no law, as I understand that would interfere with State rights; but the most of these industrial disputes do affect interstate commerce. You can not have a great industrial war in this country that does not affect the people of the whole country, and it is an interstate question, and is of sufficient importance for this Government to exercise its influence and power to prevent it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Under this bill, with the money appropriated for this purpose, could they not send down a commission to investigate a strike in a cotton factory in South Carolina or in North Carolina?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. If they were called on, they could send a commission to mediate and secure information.

Mr. BARTLETT. Suppose there was a dispute, as there was some time ago, amongst the planters and their men. The corn planters or the agriculturists, the farmers, could not they do that, too?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Is not the Government doing that through the Census Bureau and other investigations which they are making to secure statistics?

Mr. BARTLETT. One violation of the law does not justify another.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Why attack this work when there is no opposition to other work of the same nature? For instance, if a great industrial war could be stopped, we will say, in the building industry in Chicago, when it was threatened that thirty or forty thousand men would be thrown out of employment and put onto the streets, that would affect other States, and it would obstruct the building industry in that locality, it would stop transportation of material coming from other States, and it is of such vast importance, and the saving is so great compared with the amount of money that we ask, and there is so little infringement on any State law, that I fail to understand how anyone who is so sincere, as I know the gentleman is in his interests in behalf of the working people, can raise any objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I have had some experience with these strikes and lockouts. I have exerted my efforts to prevent them, because I know what they mean. I know the dissension and the turmoil and the destitution finally that they create, and I know the great importance of exercising every influence possible to prevent them. I have made myself unpopular at times with the people I was representing when I was in the trade-union movements, because I always went to the furthest extreme to prevent industrial wars, to keep peace and harmony between the employee and the employer, and if there is anything that this Nation can do through any medium it has, through this bureau or any other, to establish and maintain peace in the industrial world, there is no greater work, no more important work, that can be done. Some years ago, when Senator Hanna was head of the Civic Federation, he said that he would rather be able to keep peace and fair conditions in the industrial world than to be President of the United States. They said he was playing politics. Any man who knows anything about the industrial world and the turmoil and dissensions and dissatisfaction there knows that it takes a bigger man to be able to keep peace, fair conditions, and prosperity in the industrial world than it would to be President of the United States. Therefore it is a work that should demand the best efforts of the best men in this country to give it support by the exercise of every influence to keep a greater degree of peace and harmony in the industries of the country and to prevent these industrial wars, of which you may say as has been said of other wars, that they are hell, almost, on earth. They bring such dissatisfaction and suffering to the industrial workers, the people working in the industries, that certainly we ought not to hesitate to give everything that can be utilized through this department for this purpose.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment offered by my colleague will prevail. I do not know how much they will use of the money. No one can tell in advance, because this money in the main is to be used only in case of trouble or threatened trouble. For years people everywhere have been trying to find some method of preventing strikes and lockouts or to settle them after they had begun. No one is in favor of compulsory arbitration, and no one is in favor of letting the thing run with violence or of overcoming it with violence, as a rule. Now, here is a proposition which was inserted in the law creating the Department of Labor authorizing the Secretary of Labor to act as a conciliator, and authorizing him to appoint commissioners of conciliation when labor troubles were threatened or were in existence, not with a view of compelling people to settle their troubles, but with a view of trying to bring them together, and really let them settle it themselves, because, I take it, in this world most men who quarrel with each other if you bring them face to face in a friendly spirit at least will get over the quarrel. You will find when you hate a man it is usually because you do not know him. This is something to bring the men together, and if the Secretary of Labor, through the appointment of commissioners of labor, can prevent one great strike, he will have accomplished something worth many times $50,000. If he can prevent a few smaller strikes, he will have accomplished many times the value of $50,000. Why not give him the opportunity? Why not let us see if the Secretary of Labor appointing commissioners of labor may not acquire the confidence of employer and employee, so as to prevent trouble? We know that the Erdman Act, which relates to labor troubles between railroads and employees, was passed many years ago, and it took many years before that act was ever actually applied, because it took a considerable time for anyone to acquire the confidence of both the railroad operators and the railway men's organizations, but when Judge Knapp and former Commissioner of Labor O'Neill did acquire the confidence of both sides, they settled threatened strikes which would have cost the people of this country many millions of dollars, even hundreds of millions of dollars, and they settled those threatened strikes at a nominal cost. Two years ago they settled without any cost at all the threatened strike on the Southern Pacific, which would have been exceedingly costly to the country. Why can not we seize the opportunity and give to the Secretary of Labor sufficient funds to try out this plan and see if we can find somebody who will prevent what we all dread when it comes, labor troubles of the acute sort.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I am in full sympathy with what the gentleman from Illinois has had to say with reference to the value of arbitration or mediation. We all recognize its value in the settlement of industrial disputes, and I, for one, would not be willing to support any proposition which would have the effect of lessening any good that the Secretary of Labor might be able to accomplish under its provisions. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to vote for any amount that is necessary and reasonable in order to carry out the provisions——

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The gentleman does not think this money will be spent unless it is necessary, does he?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; I do not.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. He will only expend this $50,000 in case of an emergency that might arise. If it is not necessary, it will not be used.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I was just coming to the point where I was about to say that under this appropriation the Secretary of Labor, whenever these industrial wars or disputes arise, selects some one or more persons to endeavor to bring the men together. They are employed temporarily, and as soon as the dispute is ended and conciliation had their services are dispensed with. Now, under the present law the Secretary of Labor has $25,000 for this purpose. The committee thought, when it came to this particular provision, not knowing how much he would need, not knowing whether he would need $25,000, and as the Secretary of Labor himself was not able to say whether he would need $25,000 or $50,000, although he estimated for $50,000, the committee thought it was wise to allow the same amount for the next fiscal year that he has had for the current year, and then if there should be a greater number of industrial disputes, so that a greater amount is necessary, why, I am quite sure the Secretary of Labor, by pursuing the proper course, can come to the Congress and get the additional amount that is necessary; but the committee thought it was unnecessary to allow it now, because it is purely a matter of speculation as to how much will be needed.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. But the committee thought under the circumstances, since no one could tell what was necessary, or what amount would be required during the next fiscal year, that $25,000 was ample, at least, to furnish him with sufficient funds to go through part of the year, at any rate, and it was for that reason that we reported $25,000, not with any view of crippling the Secretary of Labor or depriving him of proper facilities for the purpose of settling industrial disputes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Does the gentleman not know that the Secretary of Labor has been crippled on this account in doing work in the last year?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am not aware of that.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The gentleman stated what the Secretary of Labor said in the hearings, but does he know that he made the effort to get that increase in the urgent deficiency bill because he had been hampered and was not able to do that work in the efficient manner that it should be done, due to the fact that he had not sufficient funds with which to do it? The gentleman knows well that that is a fact.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I heard the Secretary of Labor on this particular bill, and I fail to remember anything he said with reference to not having sufficient funds. It is true he asked for $50,000, and supported the estimate for that amount, but I do not recall anything in the hearings on this bill in which he stated that he had been crippled during the past on account of lack of appropriations.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, does not the gentleman think it would be better to supply this money in advance? If the Secretary should use the $25,000 that the committee provides, and then some great strike should appear imminent and Congress was not in session, he would be absolutely helpless.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Congress can not afford to speculate on what may be necessary for the next year. We can only appropriate such money as we think is necessary for the ensuing fiscal year. I have just stated that $25,000 is the amount that the Secretary of Labor has had during the current year, and, as I remember the hearings, he has not been able, for certain reasons, to spend $5,000 of that except for certain expenses of Federal employees.

Mr. FOWLER and Mr. J. I. NOLAN rose.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to cut gentlemen off who wish to talk, but we have already had 25 minutes of debate on this amendment.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. KEATING. I have another amendment, and I would like to speak to it.

Mr. MANN. I have an amendment I would like to have five minutes on.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from California [Mr. J. I. NOLAN] is recognized.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, we had considerable discussion on this subject during the time the urgent deficiency bill was pending before the House. I do not know whether the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] heard the discussion at that time or not, or read the testimony of the Secretary of Labor in his appearance before that committee. But the Secretary of Labor made the statement there—and I have not had time to look through this hearing and to find out if he made the statement to this committee—that if he had the necessary funds and had the authority in the disbursement of those funds at the time the Colorado and Michigan strikes were about to take place he thought he could have selected men—and he named the men he thought would have been the available ones to send into Colorado and Michigan—and would have been in a position to stop a great deal of trouble. Now, that is one statement that the Secretary made.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman if that complaint was not due to the fact that up to that time he had only $5,000 appropriated and he could not use that $5,000 except in employment of Federal employees?

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that there are a number of instances in this country where the Secretary of Labor, if he had had the money, could have offered his services as conciliator to settle the trouble with the shopmen on the Harriman system of railroads, which took in the Union Pacific, Southern Pacific, and the Illinois Central. That strike has been going on for two or three years, and in a conversation I had with the Secretary recently he told me as soon as the new appropriation was available he intended to try to settle that trouble. Now, a few of the difficulties that the Secretary of Labor has settled, where it interfered with interstate commerce and where the Erdman Act would not apply, were the Baltimore & Ohio shopmen strike, the Chicago & Alton shopmen strike, and the New York, New Haven & Hartford shopmen strike, and I believe one other railroad where the clerks were interested. So far as the objections of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] are concerned, as to the interference with State rights, I will say there was the Indianapolis street car strike, where the Secretary of Labor sent his men in and they settled it, and where the difficulty threatened for a time to be very serious. A great many people were injured in clashes between the police and the public. But the Secretary of Labor succeeded in settling that dispute. He settled the dispute of the Erie Forge Co., at Erie, Pa. He did not go into Pennsylvania seeking to interfere with the State authorities, but he went there and offered his services and they were accepted, and he settled that strike. At present he has his men up in Lancaster, Pa., and Depew, N. Y., at the works of the Gould Coupler Co. trying to settle the difficulties there. He is simply offering his services, and if he can perform a great public duty to the people of the different States I believe this money will be well spent. We are spending at the present time through our Industrial Commission, holding sessions now at the Shoreham Hotel, a goodly sum of money for the purpose of investigating the best method of bringing employer and employee together, so that they may avoid industrial disturbances. They are investigating trade agreements, they are investigating in general the troubles between employer and employee, and this department is a great help in solving industrial disputes.

Now, I think the Secretary of Labor can perform a great public function if he can go into the different States of this Union where the municipal or State authorities may not be able to settle these troubles, and send honest, trained men to offer their services to bring about a settlement of industrial disputes. If he can do that, he is not interfering with the rights of the States or of the municipalities. He is merely offering his services for the purpose of bringing about industrial peace.

We are spending lots of money to solve this question of industrial troubles between employer and employee, and I do not know any department of the Government where money can be expended to better advantage. I believe the sum carried in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] is a reasonable sum—$50,000 for one year. It ought to be available. The Secretary of Labor ought to have that opportunity of settling these disputes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert with my remarks a statement of the number of cases that have been settled.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the statement he describes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The following is the statement referred to:

MEDIATIONS.

New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad clerks: This dispute was between the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co. and its clerks (members of the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks). After several conferences between the two had failed to bring about a satisfactory adjustment, they made a joint request, May 24, 1913, for mediation by the Secretary of Labor. Mr. G. W. W. Hanger was detailed as commissioner of conciliation. The controversy was on different interpretations of a prior agreement as to rules governing wages, seniority rights, and other conditions of employment made in January, 1913. The dispute was satisfactorily adjusted on June 2, 1913.

Erie Forge Co.: A joint request for mediation was made to the department on the 17th of June, 1913, to adjust a dispute caused by friction between wage earners and foremen. No contractual arrangement existed with the employer under which friction might be abated and grievances adjusted. An agreement guarding against such contingencies in the future was the principal characteristic of the settlement secured. The Secretary of Labor appointed the Assistant Secretary as commissioner of conciliation, and on June 20, 1913, cordial relations were restored.

Reading Railroad car workers: A strike or lockout in the shops of the Philadelphia & Reading and the Lehigh Valley Railroads had been in progress since the fall of 1912. At the request of the department of labor and industry of Pennsylvania, this department offered its good offices, naming Mr. G. W. W. Hanger as commissioner of conciliation. A satisfactory agreement was signed at Reading, Pa., July 12, 1913.

Reading Hardware Co.: A request for mediation was made to the department on June 17, 1913, by the wage earners and acquiesced in by the employers. The controversy was over a reduction in wages. Mr. G. W. W. Hanger was appointed commissioner of conciliation and to cooperate with the department of labor and industry of Pennsylvania. The strike was brought to an end by mutual agreement on July 17—one month after the request for mediation.

Baltimore & Ohio Railroad shops: This request for mediation was made by representatives of the wage earners and acquiesced in by the employers. The request came to the department on July 21, 1913. The dispute was over a question of objectionable working conditions. The Secretary appointed Mr. John A. Moffitt as commissioner of conciliation. A satisfactory settlement was made, whereby an impending strike was averted.

Western Maryland Railroad shops: A strike was pending in one shop on the Western Maryland Railroad. An understanding was reached by the officers of the wage earners' organizations that the striking wage earners should return to work and their grievances would be immediately considered for adjustment. Upon their return to work, however, some of them (so they averred) were refused reemployment. Mediation was requested by representatives of the wage earners' organizations concerned. Communication between the department and the president of the railroad having thereupon been opened, the dispute was adjusted by mutual arrangement between the parties.

Chicago & Alton Railroad shops: This was a dispute in the machine shops of the Chicago & Alton Railroad. There was a strike impending when a request for mediation was made by the wage earners concerned, October 28, 1913. The Secretary of Labor appointed Mr. James Hogan as commissioner of conciliation. His overtures being accepted by the railroad, the disputed points involved in the controversy—37 in all—were adjusted in December, 1913, by mutual concessions and agreement.

Indianapolis street-car strike: Mediation by the Secretary of Labor having been requested by the wage-earning side of the dispute which preceded that strike, Mr. Ethelbert Stewart was detailed, October 27, 1913, to act as commissioner of conciliation. The employers involved in the dispute refused to consider proposals for conciliation, taking the position that there was nothing to mediate, because no labor dispute existed. After the strike had begun it was settled by the arbitration method previously declined. The agreement was secured largely through intercessions by the department, both at Indianapolis and with eastern capitalists interested in the street-car property.

Indianapolis teamsters' strike: This request came from the wage earners, and the department's offer of mediation was at first rejected by the employers, but the solicitor for the department, who was appointed commissioner of conciliation, December 3, 1913, secured conferences with the employers involved, whereupon numerous individual settlements were effected.

Louisville & Nashville Railroad shopmen: A request for mediation was made to the department on January 31, 1914, by the shopmen to adjust a dispute in the matter of wages. On February 9, 1914, the Secretary appointed Mr. A. L. Faulkner commissioner of conciliation. Their grievances were satisfactorily adjusted to all parties concerned on March 6, 1914.

Sawmill workers, Raymond, Wash.: A request for mediation by the Department of Labor was made by representatives of the wage earners' organizations concerned under date of February 21, 1914. On March 4, 1914, Mr. W. T. Boyce, of the Immigration Service at San Francisco, was detailed as commissioner of conciliation for the department. The controversy was on discrimination against union men. No contractual arrangement existed with the employers under which friction might be abated and grievances adjusted. An agreement guarding against such contingencies in future was the principal characteristic of the settlement secured March 13, 1914.

Garment workers, Philadelphia, Pa.: This was a dispute between the garment workers and their employers in Philadelphia, Pa. On December 8, 1913, Mr. Ethelbert Stewart was appointed commissioner of conciliation for the department. He was assisted by Mr. John Price Jackson, of the Pennsylvania department of labor and industry. An amicable settlement was effected December 22, 1913.

Longshoremen, Port Arthur, Tex.: Request for mediation by the Department of Labor was made by the representatives of the wage earners concerned on March 17, 1914. Mr. Joseph S. Myers, of the Immigration Service at El Paso, Tex., was detailed as commissioner of conciliation for the department. The dispute was satisfactorily adjusted on March 28, 1914.

New York Central and subsidiary lines: On February 4, 1914, a request was made by representatives of the shopmen for mediation by the Department of Labor. Mr. John A. Moffitt was detailed as commissioner of conciliation by the Secretary, and on March 21, 1914, he reported the differences on the Michigan Central as having been satisfactorily adjusted. In the meantime a strike was impending in the shops of the Big Four lines between the machinists and the employers. This dispute was brought about by the introduction of piecework in the shops at Mount Carmel, Ill. These differences are still pending, Mr. Moffitt in the meanwhile endeavoring to bring about an adjustment.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I believe that every member of the committee is duly impressed with the importance of conciliation. Nobody desires to handicap the Secretary of Labor in carrying out the law. All men rejoice in the fact that industrial wars can be and ought, under this law, to be prevented. But it has never been the policy of the Congress to appropriate indefinitely and without information, upon a mere suggestion like that of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU], that if the amount is not needed it will not be expended.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not the form of the desired appropriation does not protect the Government against improper use of the fund?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; I hope that is so.

But, Mr. Chairman, we try, in making these appropriations, to make them upon the requirements of the Government as best we can determine those requirements from the evidence.

Now, let me call the attention of the committee to the fact that the Secretary of Labor had $25,000 this year. He has not expended all of that money, nor even a very considerable part of it. We are providing $25,000 for the ensuing fiscal year. Congress will convene in December. If there should be anything that would indicate that the Secretary of Labor needed more than $25,000, Congress can provide it.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The $25,000 that the gentleman spoke of as being available for this fiscal year includes the amount appropriated in the urgent deficiency bill, does it not?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. A further question: Is it not a fact that the $5,000 that was appropriated before that could be used only for expenses and could not be used to employ anyone as a conciliator?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is true.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. And is it not true that the $20,000 additional has been available only since very recently?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Since the urgent deficiency bill was passed. In other words, the Secretary of Labor had only $5,000 from October, 1913, until last week. We are now proposing to give him $25,000, available the 1st of July. If it is not sufficient on the 1st of December, we can give him more. There is not any question but that this committee will give Mr. Secretary Wilson all the money that he needs to enforce this law. [Applause.] But we do not believe in appropriating money unless we have some reason to know that it is needed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says it can be appropriated in December. We met last December, as the gentleman will remember, and is it not a fact that the urgent deficiency bill became a law only in this present month of April—four months after we had met in December?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; but the next session of Congress will be a short session, and all appropriation bills, including the urgent deficiency bill, will be disposed of before the 4th of March.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will pardon me for reminding him that at the last short session that was not the case.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHREVE] be allowed to address the committee for three minutes on the pending question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHREVE] be allowed to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. J. I. NOLAN] mentioned the fact of the settlement of a strike in Erie, Pa. Now, inasmuch as Erie, Pa., is my home city, I have some knowledge of the settlement of that strike in the works of the Erie Forge Co. I am well acquainted with the owners of the Erie Forge plant and I know many of the men in their employ, and I am glad to say that that strike was settled to the entire satisfaction of the owners of the company and to the entire satisfaction of the men whom they employed.

It is my opinion that money can not be expended to better advantage than to assist in just such work as was accomplished in my city. I believe if we could prevent and stop some of the industrial troubles we are having it would be money spent to better advantage than any other place in this bill. [Applause.] I am heartily in favor of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 47, noes 18.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On line 17, page 135, after the word "necessary," add the following: "One of said commissioners shall be stationed in Washington and perform duties under the immediate jurisdiction of the Secretary of Labor, and his compensation shall not exceed $3,000 per year."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that. I will reserve it if the gentleman wants to speak on it.

Mr. KEATING. I am perfectly willing that the gentleman shall make a point of order. I should like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado is recognized.

Mr. KEATING. I contend, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment is in order under the organic act creating the Department of Labor. Section 8 of that act authorizes the Secretary of Labor "to act as mediator and to appoint commissioners of conciliation in labor disputes whenever in his judgment the interests of industrial peace may require it to be done." The committee have undertaken to limit that power. They have appropriated $50,000 to the Department of Labor for the purpose of defraying the expenses of commissioners of conciliation. Those commissioners are to be named by the Secretary of Labor. They are to be paid $10 a day for the time they are actually employed in industrial disputes. The committee might have gone on and said that all those commissioners should be employed outside of the District of Columbia. I contend that the committee might have provided that they should be employed in the District of Columbia. I contend we have a right to say that one of them shall remain in the District of Columbia, that he shall be employed all the time, and that his salary shall not exceed $3,000 a year. There is nothing in the organic act to forbid the employment of a commissioner who shall devote all his time to this work. In fact, in my judgment, the organic act authorizes such employment.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's mistake is that he says there is nothing in the organic act which prohibits it. He must show that there is something in the organic act which authorizes it, because he proposes to create an office. I have here section 8, under which this appropriation is made, which I will send to the Chair, and the Chair can read it. There is nothing in it authorizing the appointment of a permanent officer.

Mr. BARTLETT. The whole provision contemplates the temporary employment of these commissioners of conciliation from time to time. The very words "from time to time" negative the idea that they shall be permanent. You can not have any permanent organization under a statute like that, which provides that the commissioner himself shall act, and from time to time as occasion arises he shall select commissioners of conciliation. Now, the amendment proposes to change that, and says he shall not appoint them from time to time, but that there shall be permanently established in the office here in the District of Columbia one commissioner. The act provides not for one, but for such as the commissioner may select. The amendment is a clear violation of the rule. There is no law that justifies it, and it can not be twisted to mean that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from Colorado to the particular wording of this statute:

SEC. 8. That the Secretary of Labor shall have power to act as mediator and to appoint commissioners of conciliation in labor disputes whenever, in his judgment, the interests of industrial peace may require it to be done.

The Chair thinks that from a careful reading of that statute it can not be construed to mean that a permanent commissioner of conciliation is authorized. The gentleman's amendment undertakes to make a permanent office, whereas the act leaves it in the judgment of the Commissioner of Labor to act when the occasion arises. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

Mr. KEATING. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I desire to offer it in my own right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 135, line 13, after the word "conciliation," strike out the words "at not exceeding $10 per day while actually employed in any case of labor dispute" and insert in lieu thereof the following:
"And for their services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. MANN. I prefer to have the gentleman make it. What is the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. If the gentleman wants to know, I reserved the point of order in order to have time to look it up.

Mr. MANN. I do not ask the gentleman to reserve it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Very well, if you will not let me reserve the point of order, go ahead with your amendment. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MANN. If I thought it was subject to a point of order or that there was any doubt about it, I would be perfectly willing to discuss it with the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I do not want to discuss it. If the gentleman will not give me time to look it up, I will withdraw it.

Mr. MANN. I want to be heard on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized.

Mr. MANN. A labor trouble comes up, and do you think you can walk out on the street, take the first man you meet, pay him $10 a day, and have him settle it? Not at all. You have got to have somebody trained, somebody who has acquired the confidence of capital and labor, and you can not get them in the main for $10 a day for two or three weeks or two or three months of a year.

This amendment would authorize the Secretary of Labor to have some one in the department, as he ought to have, who is trained up to this business and has the authority over this division of the Government, who keeps in touch with the troubles which may arise, who can be paid a yearly salary, and who can have men under him with whom he is in touch to act in particular cases. That will make the bureau of value. That will enable us to prevent strikes, enable us to settle troubles, enable the Secretary of Labor to acquire the same confidence of capital and labor which Judge Knapp and Commissioner Neeley acquired in railroad matters, only they would spread it out to industrial disputes all along the line. A provision saying that the Secretary of Labor himself, with no one under him to look after it in case of a threatened labor dispute, shall walk out into the streets and pick up some one to work for $10 a day for a week or two weeks is absurd.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. How much were men paid under the Erdman Act?

Mr. MANN. I do not remember.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The gentleman was chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce for years and did not think enough of it to look it up?

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Chairman, I never apologize for not knowing things. The trouble with me is that I know too many. [Laughter.] I do not think they were restricted, however, to $10 a day. I think Mr. Low and his conferees who acted over here for the railroads were paid a liberal sum. I do not know, but I think they ought to have been paid a liberal sum, because if it had not been for the amendment to the Erdman Act and the appointment of these conciliators under the act, and the acceptance by both the railroads and the railway men's organizations of the final result of that conciliation, we would have had a railroad strike in this country that would have cost not hundreds of millions, but billions of dollars; and then you gag over paying a man $3,000 a year to prevent such loss of property and loss of life.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will be supported by a majority of the Members of the House and will prevail. If it is passed, it will put the Secretary of Labor in a position to do this work of conciliation, arbitration, and mediation much more efficiently, and especially as this law now has been construed to mean that all the employees must be temporary, and I suppose the same construction would be put on it by some as they have put on other statutes, that they can not be employed in the District of Columbia, thereby impairing the efficiency of the law.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the Secretary of Labor himself has stated that he did not think that these men ought to be paid over $10 a day?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I do not think so, either.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. But this amendment is for an unlimited amount.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. No; this does not fix any price; but if it were necessary to pay the right man $100 a day, it ought to be paid. If it is necessary to get the most efficient man, if he is the only man that can settle a dispute that would probably involve an industrial war, that would mean a loss of millions of dollars and suffering and distress to thousands of working men, women, and children, we ought not to hesitate and consider the amount of money it would be necessary to expend in that manner. I think the Secretary is right, and it would not be necessary to pay over $10 a day. But why has the committee put restrictions on the Department of Labor? Why is it that the committee is putting these restrictions in this bill against the Department of Labor that it does not put in the bill against other departments? Why is it that it has less confidence of the committee than any other department? There is one restriction after another that is put in here that does not apply to other departments. The Department of Labor has been attacked for doing the same thing that other departments have done without censure. Why is it you take the position against the Labor Department and do not take it against other departments? The question will be answered by the echo, "why," because you can not answer it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman says that the committee has taken a stand against the Department of Labor?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. You put restrictions in here that will cripple the Bureau of Statistics, and you might as well have appropriated nothing.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman says we have placed restrictions here that we have not against other departments. Will he state what they are?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I do not care to discuss that now any more than to say that you have put restrictions in here that make it impossible for the Bureau of Labor Statistics to do the work required of it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. But we are speaking of this provision. We place this $10 provision in here because the Secretary of Labor himself said he thought that was a proper price.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. But the gentleman seems to fear the Secretary of Labor is going to impose on the Government by a wrong expenditure of this $50,000.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Nobody has thought that.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. This $50,000 that you do not hesitate to give other work of this kind.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. We simply followed his advice.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. No; you did not, or you would have given him $50,000. This committee has opposed him on every move that he has made. The committee opposed him for this fiscal year and in the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, and the committee is opposing him now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] has indulged in some reflections on members of the committee, which, I am sure, if he knew the attitude of the members he would withdraw, because I am sure the gentleman does not mean to say that members of the Committee on Appropriations are opposed to the Labor Department. Speaking for myself, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I have always been the friend and the consistent friend of labor. I was its friend in the State legislature at home, and I have been its friend in every measure that has come on the floor of Congress, and it does not lie——

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Not now. It does not lie with the gentleman to come here and make a blanket charge against members of the Committee on Appropriations and say that they are opposed to labor or to the Labor Department.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Has not the committee and has not the gentleman opposed these appropriations that have been necessary for this work?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have not.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Is the gentleman in favor of it now?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am in favor of every appropriation that is necessary for the Secretary of Labor and the Labor Department to carry out and perform the duties of that department.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. He asked for $50,000 for this year. Did the gentleman favor that?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I voted for $25,000, Mr. Chairman, and stood for $25,000 for the board of conciliation for the reason stated; and I stated in my remarks a few moments ago that the committee had allowed $25,000 in view of the fact that the department——

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I decline to yield until I can make a statement.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The gentleman does not want to make a wrong statement

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. In view of the fact that the Department of Labor had had $25,000 for the current year. The appropriation of $25,000 carried in this bill takes effect July 1, and, as the gentleman from South Carolina said, if the Department of Labor needs more money all they have to do is to come here to Congress on December 1, or when Congress meets in December, and secure an additional appropriation, and there is no man on the floor of this House who does not know that Congress would gladly give that department any amount of money needed, whether $50,000 or $100,000, to carry out this work of conciliation.

I want to say to the gentleman that I do not yield to him or to anybody else in my advocacy of the right of the Department of Labor to have sufficient money to carry on the splendid work of that department, and my record not only here but elsewhere shows that I have acted always consistently along that line. I think the gentleman does himself an injustice. I know that he does every member of the Committee on Appropriations an injustice when he undertakes to get up here and by charges undertakes to place everyone in the category of being opposed to the Labor Department.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt in the world that the leader of the minority, the author of this amendment, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], is a friend of labor. I have no doubt that my friend from Illinois, Mr. BUCHANAN, is a friend of labor. Indeed, the firm of MANN and BUCHANAN are as good friends of labor as I have observed in this House in my brief experience here. However, Mr. Chairman, I also think that the gentleman in charge of this bill, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON], is a friend of labor. I think the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] is a friend of labor. I think the Democratic Party is a friend of labor, both organized and unorganized. Now, Mr. Chairman, with all the accomplishments of the leader of the Republican minority and the other gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN], who seems to desire a schism on this side of the aisle in his own party, I doubt the right or prerogative of either of those gentlemen to hurl the bolts of labor. Is it possible that labor has no friends in this House in the organized Democracy? Is it possible that this party, supposedly in charge of the Government, acting through its committees, considering the great supply bills, is incompetent and incapable of responding to the just demands of labor and that the bolts to be hurled by this Hercules of labor at his own party should arise every time an appropriation bill comes up that mentions the word "labor"?

Take the particular item we have under discussion. The Secretary of Labor, a Democratic Secretary of Labor—if any man presumably is authorized to hurl the bolts of labor it is he—makes no complaint at the $10 a day; on the contrary he says it is sufficient, but along comes Ajax and Hercules and say that Wilson, the Secretary of Labor, is not authorized to hurl the lightning, but we, the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. BUCHANAN, and the gentleman from Illinois Mr. MANN, the leader of the Republican Party, we alone are authorized to cut off the heads of gentlemen if they do not give us an appropriation. Mr. Chairman, I know economy is in disrepute, I know that plank in our platform and the pledge of the Democratic Party to keep its pledges honestly is in dispute, and we might as well admit it now as after it is proved upon us later. I know the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] of the firm of MANN and BUCHANAN wants the Democratic Party to violate its pledges, wants the Democratic Party to commit any kind of folly that it will commit, but I do not believe that members of the Democratic Party here are ready to say that their committee, acting for the organized party, acting for organized labor and unorganized, and all the interests of this country are incapable of handling an appropriation bill and have got to turn it over to the firm of MANN and BUCHANAN, to one or both of them. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I am not "a friend of labor." Mr. Chairman, I rather despise that designation. I am not advocating this amendment as "a friend of labor," but I am advocating this amendment because I believe if it be adopted it will enable the Secretary of Labor to assist in bringing about industrial peace in this country.

The discussion that has gone on here has led us far afield. As a matter of fact the object of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois is not to increase the salary of these commissioners of conciliation. I am sure the gentleman had no such thought in his mind.

The sole purpose of his amendment, as was the sole purpose of my amendment, which I offered and which was ruled out on a point of order a few moments ago, was to enable the Secretary of Labor to appoint one commissioner of conciliation who will remain in Washington to take charge of this work. At the present time the Secretary of Labor is a sort of chief clerk of this division of conciliation. He has no one to look after the routine work for him, and he came to this Committee on Appropriations and asked that they so arrange this appropriation that he can have one man who would be here in Washington, a permanent commissioner of conciliation, and the Committee on Appropriations, for some reason, refused to grant what I conceive, and what I think Members of this House will conceive, to be a perfectly reasonable request. Now, I do not charge the gentlemen who are on the Committee on Appropriations with hostility to the cause of organized labor. As I said before, Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to pose here or elsewhere as "a friend of organized labor." I deem it my duty as a Representative of the people of my district to advance those measures which make for industrial peace, and when I do that I do not speak for organized labor, I speak for every right-thinking man and woman in this country. And I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois will prevail, and I hope it will prevail not because I want these salaries increased but in order that the Secretary of Labor may feel at liberty to name a commissioner of conciliation who will be resident in the city of Washington and take charge of this most important work.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] seemed to think I had made statements that I would regret. The statements I made, so far as I understood them, are nothing more than matters of fact. I do not often regret, when I think it is necessary, mentioning facts. I do not know whether the gentleman from Tennessee has been in accord with his committee or not, but I do know that this Appropriation Committee has withheld its consent from appropriations that were of vital importance to the Department of Labor and its bureaus. I do know that they opposed me when I made the effort to increase this amount that they now claim credit for from $5,000 to $20,000, as I remember, for conciliatory work, and before that they had only given $5,000, when the Secretary of Labor had asked for $50,000. And they say now that they have been liberal and considerate. Now, it is with much regret that I have not been able to get the support of this committee and the Democratic side of this House as a whole. I was elected on the Democratic ticket, and I am a Democrat. I do not waste my time here telling about my friendship to labor, but I try to exercise my influence, to the best of my judgment, to secure for labor what I think will be for its benefit. As I stated, I regret that it has been necessary to have this support of my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN], the minority leader, and the Progressives, but I want to assure you that it is appreciated, and I want to assure you that the labor people of this country will appreciate it; and the fact that it has been necessary to have that support will be to the everlasting discredit of the Democratic Party when it comes to be known over this country. Now, if you want to continue this you may deceive yourselves, you may make yourselves believe you are doing just the proper thing, but you are not going to deceive the labor people of this country. The Republican Party worked that for a number of years, and they can no longer be deceived. They know who their friends are, and it is not necessary to put it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in order for them to find it out, because they are watching the public men to-day, and they know whether or not they are making that effort they should make for the purpose of getting them what they are in justice entitled to.

I do not know what position organized labor is taking on this particular question. I do not know whether organized labor has given this department the attention that I and others have given it. I do not know whether organized labor appreciates the great importance of this Department of Labor or not; but let me say to you that the enemies of labor—the system—in this country are going to put every obstruction in its way possible in order to prevent it doing its work in an efficient and proper manner. If organized labor shall neglect its duty, because of indifference, in exercising its influence to have the Government and officials do their duty in regard to this, it is not going to stop me from making the effort on my part.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman. What is before the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. And the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. How much time does the gentleman need?

Mr. MANN. Not over five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in seven minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I always like to hear the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] talk. He has a sonorous voice, a very good command of English, a very bright mind, and he is always entertaining to me whether I agree with him or not. I would be willing to have him lambaste me by the hour, if I could not hear him in any other way. But he seeks to raise a partisan issue upon this proposition. Now, the truth is the amendment which I offer will accomplish the same purpose as that of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING]. When the gentleman from Colorado offered his amendment, somewhat to my surprise, the gentleman in charge of the bill made a point of order against it. And while they were discussing the point of order I prepared the amendment which I offered, thinking that if the point of order was to be sustained, as it looked likely it would be when the point of order was made, I would offer an amendment which would meet the question. I did not offer it in the first place. I preferred to have the amendment come from the other side of the House, so that some gentleman from the back country, some place, would not raise up and say it presented a partisan issue because the leader of the minority had offered it. Of course, that is not a very strong argument in many places. It may be strong at some place in Texas. I do not know about that. But the amendment having been prepared and offered on its merits, it ought to be disposed of. It is not a partisan proposition. Why, the gentleman from Texas would think that I have been sitting here in the House voting against the Committee on Appropriations all the time. I dare say that on the consideration of this bill I have voted, when amendments were offered, with the Committee on Appropriations five times, while the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] has voted with them once.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I will say to him that he is more prompt and regular in his attendance in the House as leader of his party than I am. I have voted with the committee, however, several times.

Mr. MANN. I will say it was due in part to the fact that when I was here the gentleman was absent and not attending to his business. But I have voted with them unless there was some good reason why I should not do so.

Mr. DIES. Of course I can not attend to my business as effectually as my friend from Illinois can, but I am always——

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman does attend to his business more effectually than I do.

Mr. DIES. I have not as much business to attend to as the gentleman from Illinois, but I submit to the committee that I am here or hereabouts when the sessions of Congress are in progress.

Mr. MANN. I miss the mellifluous tones of the gentleman when he is absent, and that is the reason I know he is not here.

But here is a question presented to the House. Dispose of it on its merits, it makes no difference what the source is. There is no partisanship involved in it. Will you give the Secretary of Labor, the Democratic Secretary of Labor, in whom you have confidence and in whom we have confidence, a fair opportunity to provide commissioners of conciliation and the office of commissioners of conciliation, which may accomplish good to the country worth millions of dollars, or will you refuse?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the members of the committee who are so greatly concerned about labor that I have been the friend of those who toil all my life, and I repudiate the suggestion that because we are not willing to appropriate all the money that may be asked for we are not friendly to labor.

In the final analysis labor pays all the bills. The Committee on Appropriations recognize the fact that in the end the men who wear overalls and who carry their dinners in tin buckets and who go down into the mines and into the shops and fields and factories are the people upon whom the burdens finally rest, and in undertaking to protect the Treasury we think we are protecting laboring men.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 48, noes 31.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the following employees now being paid from a general appropriation: One at $2,280; 3 at $1,600 each; 2 at $1,400 each; and 2 at $1,200 each; in all, $12,280.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that none of these places or the salaries provided in lines 1, 2, and 3, page 126, are provided for by law, and that, therefore, they are subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I hope my friend will not insist upon the point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman admits that it is subject to a point of order, does he not? There is no law or statute fixing the places or the salaries.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. There is a law fixing all the salaries therein enumerated, except $2,280.

Mr. BARTLETT. What law is that?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. There are plenty of $1,600, $1,400, and $1,200 clerks. No; I was wrong, Mr. Chairman, about that. They are not here as clerks. But, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. BARTLETT. Of course; but I am going to make it at the end.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I want to make a statement to the committee.

This appropriation has been carried for a number of years at $64,000. I never knew until the urgent deficiency bill came up a few weeks ago, and I do not believe that any other member of the Committee on Appropriations knew, that any part of this money was used for clerical services in the District of Columbia. We appropriated it for field work, but it was brought to the attention of the committee in the hearings on this bill that the particular people appropriated for in this paragraph are engaged exclusively in work in Washington.

The committee, in order to take care of that force, has brought it forward in this bill. In other words, Mr. Chairman, we have given the Bureau of Labor Statistics the same force that they now have, aggregating $102,160. We provide, in addition to that, a clerical force to the amount of $12,280. This force was there heretofore, but was paid out of a lump-sum appropriation.

Here is a very good place to say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] that we are trying to take care of the Labor Bureau. When we found that these clerks were employed, that their services were needed there, we brought that forward in this bill. And yet we appropriate in the following paragraph the $64,000 out of which heretofore they have been paid. In other words, while we increased the force in Washington, we have not diminished the appropriation for the field work.

I hope that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] will let that force be provided for.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes, Mr. Chairman; but "the gentleman from Georgia" understands that if this unlawful and unauthorized paragraph is permitted to stand we will be subjected again to a vote for an amendment which may increase this number of clerks by a large number. I do not care, Mr. Chairman, to say anything further on the subject.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BARTLETT. Certainly.

Mr. DIES. Do I understand the gentleman to say that he is afraid——

Mr. BARTLETT. No; I said I understand that this paragraph, if permitted to stand, will perhaps subject us——

Mr. DIES. Not afraid; but if you have the authorization, some gentleman—probably the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] or some other gentleman—will offer an amendment to increase the amount?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; it will add to the number of unauthorized clerks in this provision. In other words, if you permit to remain in the bill a paragraph unauthorized by law, then that paragraph is subject to amendment, and they can tack on to it other offices not authorized by law. The only way to protect the Treasury from things of that kind is to strike out the unauthorized paragraph.

Mr. MANN. I would like to be heard on the point of order, Mr. Chairman, unless the Chair is prepared to overrule the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not prepared to overrule the point of order, because the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] admitted that the paragraph was subject to a point of order.

Mr. MANN. I do not think the gentleman from South Carolina is fully informed as to that. Let us see what the provision is. It provides:

For the following employees now being paid from a general appropriation—

And then it names them. The bill itself shows that they are transferred from a lump-sum appropriation. I understood the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] to say that as a matter of fact they are clerks.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. They are provided for as clerks. They are simply provided for at the salary they are now receiving from the lump-sum appropriation.

Mr. MANN. What are they? Are they clerks?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. They are not so designated in the law.

Mr. MANN. The statute under which the Department of Labor was created contains this provision:

SEC. 2. That there shall be in said department an Assistant Secretary of Labor, to be appointed by the President, who shall receive a salary of $5,000 a year. He shall perform such duties as shall be prescribed by the Secretary or required by law. There shall also be one chief clerk and a disbursing clerk and such other clerical assistants, inspectors, and special agents as may from time to time be provided for by Congress.

Now I do not know, as a matter of fact, whether these following employees are clerical assistants, inspectors, or special agents. But I do not know what they would be or could be unless they came within one of these three classes. When the Department of Labor was created that language was inserted in the law for the express purpose of meeting cases where you desired to increase the number of employees in the department, and the Chair ruled a while ago on the same matter, practically, with reference to almost the same language of the law in creating the Department of Commerce. That general provision in the law is put there for the purpose of permitting Congress by an appropriation act to provide for those places. In some cases, as I stated once before here to-day, Congress has made the mistake of providing specifically the number of places. That mistake was made when the Bureau of Labor Statistics was originally created. The law specifically provided the number of clerks and everything else in that department. But it is now transferred to the Department of Labor, and under this law creating the Department of Labor Congress is authorized by the appropriation act to provide for these places. These employees are either special agents, clerical assistants, or experts of that kind, covered by that language, because those were the only ones authorized to be paid out of this lump-sum appropriation in the current law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] desire to be heard?

Mr. BARTLETT. No; I do not. There is no authority except this act to which the gentleman has called attention, which simply provides that there shall be one chief clerk, for whom we have provided, as well as the other officers; and the mere fact that it says "and such other clerical assistants, inspectors, and special agents" does not cover these employees, because nowhere in this paragraph does the language indicate that these employees are to be clerical assistants, inspectors, or special agents.

The CHAIRMAN. What does the gentleman from Georgia say to the language in section 2, which reads as follows:

There shall also be one chief clerk and one disbursing clerk—

Mr. BARTLETT. We have provided for them.

The CHAIRMAN. Also—

And such other clerical assistants.

Now, suppose the language in this appropriation bill had been, "the following clerical assistants now being paid from the general appropriation"?

Mr. BARTLETT. It does not say that.

The CHAIRMAN. But is there any difference between the meaning of "clerical assistants" and "employees" as the word is used in this paragraph? Do they not both mean the same thing?

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not think they do. They might be employed to do something else. They might not be clerks at all. There is no provision of law authorizing these salaries or fixing them. There is no provision of law authorizing an employee at $1,780, or any employee at all.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, may I be heard?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. There is such a provision in the lump-sum appropriation that has been in effect since the Department of Labor was created. And this only transfers from the lump-sum pay roll to the permanent pay roll, so that they may be employed in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BARTLETT. If the gentleman will permit me, that is the very point.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. That has been the law ever since the Labor Department has been in existence.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is the very thing that can not be done. Under a number of rulings you can not transfer a man from the lump-sum appropriation and put him on the statutory roll without some authorization for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair remembers very distinctly the discussion with reference to this provision of the bill when the creation of the Department of Labor was under consideration. The matter was then discussed as to the propriety of making the statute broad enough so that Congress might appropriate for all the necessary employees of that department. The difference in the language is that the statute provides for "clerical assistants," and the appropriation bill provides for "the following employees." The Chair can not imagine the purpose to which "the following employees" could be put unless it be for clerical assistants, inspectors, or special agents, and he believes that the word "employees" in this paragraph is equivalent to "clerical assistants," and overrules the point of order.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask unanimous consent that this paragraph and the next one be considered together.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that this paragraph and the next one be considered together.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No, Mr. Chairman; I do not think we ought to do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina objects.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I have an amendment that I want to offer. I think, if the gentleman from South Carolina wanted to be fair, he would let these two paragraphs be considered together, because if I can get what I want in the next paragraph I do not want to offer an amendment to this one. I do not know why the gentleman should object. I had no idea that any such objection would be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 136, strike out all after the colon following the word "appropriation," in line 2, and insert the following: "1 at $2,760, 1 at $2,520, 3 at $2,280 each, 1 at $1,800; 6 at $1,600 each, 7 at $1,400 each, and 2 at $1,200 each; in all, $37,720."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. May I make a statement before the vote is taken?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I think I have the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois that it is customary to recognize the gentleman from South Carolina. He was on his feet after the gentleman's amendment was read. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina that all debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, this amendment becomes necessary for the efficient operation of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, due to the provision that the committee has put in the following paragraph, which, in line 8, provides for field service outside of the District of Columbia. In other words, if this amendment which I have offered is not approved and this provision that the committee has put in the next paragraph remains, it practically makes it impossible for the Bureau of Labor Statistics to do the work which it has been doing ever since it has been in existence, because it becomes necessary for those doing field work to often come within the District of Columbia to either supervise or assist in compiling the reports of the research work that they have made. In other words, this field work is often only temporary work done in certain parts of the year, and an investigator goes out and gets information and comes into the office in the District of Columbia for the purpose of compiling or assisting to compile; and, as I stated, if this amendment that I have now offered is not passed and the provision in the next paragraph is left as it is, it practically puts the Bureau of Labor Statistics in a position where it will be unable to do the work it has been doing, and it is important that the work should be done.

I fail to comprehend why the gentleman, who is in charge of this bill, and this committee seem to take the attitude they do in regard to the Labor Department, and those who are making an effort to secure what we believe is necessary for the operation of this department. The gentleman in charge of the bill the other day gave his consent to some one else to pass over a paragraph and consider two paragraphs together. To-day he objects to my doing that. In other parts of the bill, on page 122, in the Bureau of Census, it provides that certain money can be used in the District of Columbia, and he does not put a provision in there providing that it shall all be done outside of the District of Columbia, but provides whether it be done in the District of Columbia or otherwise—work of the same nature, work under the same sort of an appropriation. They put a provision in this bill that it should be done in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, but when it comes to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, they say that not one dollar can be expended in the District of Columbia, which makes it practically impossible for them to do the work they have to do.

I hope that this amendment will meet with the approval of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, so far as this particular bureau is concerned, I want to make ample provision for it. When I found out that these eight people were employed in the bureau as clerks and were being paid out of a lump-sum appropriation I favored providing for them, as is done in this bill. After the bill was made up and reported to the House it was called to my attention that they had 11 other clerks who sometimes work in the office and sometimes out. I thought then and I think now that $102,000 that is appropriated on page 135 and with the additional $12,280 appropriated on page 136 they have sufficient clerical force in that office to do the work, and we have appropriated $64,000 to do the field work.

I do not know whether they are right to bring people in here to compile reports or not. The head of one of the bureaus that we have yet to consider testified before our committee that it was not wise to employ experts in the field to gather statistics and then have those same experts come here and act in a clerical capacity in compiling them.

The two bureaus are in the same department; I do not know who is right. We are told in one case that experts who gather information in the field work ought not to be brought to Washington and used as clerks, and yet in another bureau in the same department we are told that we are crippling that department if we do not make provision for that very thing.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Why did you leave that provision out of the Census Bureau as to performing work in the District of Columbia?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. In the Census Bureau the force is a force of trained experts which they send into the field.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The Chief of the Department of Labor did not say that it was not wise to bring them in to do the work.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I hope these bureaus will be able to decide on a policy. The head of the department ought not to have Congress believe that one of his bureaus is handicapped if we refuse to let experts come in and act as clerks and in the other bureau that it is unwise to do it. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois) there were—ayes 32, noes 34.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina and Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point that no quorum is present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and seven Members present—a quorum. The members will pass through the tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 54, noes 40.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. And I make the point of order that the point is dilatory.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order is not dilatory, considering the count just made. Probably some gentlemen left the Hall or they would have voted one way or the other.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. There were several members that did not vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and seven members present, a quorum, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For per diem, in lieu of subsistence, of special agents and employees while traveling on duty away from their homes and outside of the District of Columbia, at a rate not to exceed $3 per day, and for their transportation, for experts and temporary assistance for field service outside of the District of Columbia, to be paid at the rate of not exceeding $8 per day, and for traveling expenses of officers and employees, and for the purchase of reports and materials for the reports and bulletins of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, and for subvention to "International Association for Labor Legislation," and necessary expenses connected with representation of the United States Government therein, $64,090.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I want to raise the point of order on the words "field service outside the District of Columbia," as new legislation and not authorized.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I do not care to waste time, Mr. Chairman. It is not subject to a point of order, of course.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Can the gentleman cite any law?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Under the law all lump-sum appropriations are to be expended outside of Washington unless specifically appropriated.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I contend that those words are new legislation, something that has not been inserted in appropriation bills before. It is not current law and not permanent law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question. This question was up to-day when the Chair was temporarily absent and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] occupied the chair. I would like to ask whether the question was passed upon at that time?

Mr. MANN. Only in a formal way. The Chair overruled a point of order where a point of order was made on an item providing for service in the District of Columbia or elsewhere. I do not think it is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is under the impression that the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The gentleman from South Carolina says that there is a statute prohibiting the employment out of a lump sum in the District of Columbia. I do not think there is any such statute.

Mr. MANN. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Even if there be no such statute, and even if Congress has the authority, which I think it has, to appropriate for services in the District of Columbia and out of the District of Columbia, certainly it would not be subject to a point of order to appropriate for either one.

Now, if, instead of making the point of order, the gentleman will offer an amendment to insert in that item ahead of "For field service" the words "service in the District of Columbia and," why, if he carries his amendment and the House is with him, that will authorize the appropriation in and out of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I have an amendment here, but I think it is legislation——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw his point of order?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Illinois any precedent to sustain his point of order? Has he examined the precedents himself?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, when they raise points of order against any amendment I offer here I am always required to furnish the statute to show that it is in accordance with the law, and so forth, and I do not think I should be called upon, with my limited knowledge of the law——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has the two propositions mixed up. One is that the proponent of an amendment authorizing a salary should show the law authorizes it, whereas it is language contained in the bill authorizing the appropriation. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting, after the word "service," in line 8, the words "in the District of Columbia and."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 136, line 8, after the word "service," insert the words "in the District of Columbia and."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Let me make a suggestion to the gentleman that he offer his amendment to come in after the word "for," in line 8, and read, "service in the District of Columbia and for," so it will read: "for service in the District of Columbia and for field service outside of the District of Columbia."

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment in that respect.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the modified amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 136, line 8, after the word "for," insert the words "service in the District of Columbia and for."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, we have an agreement that debate shall be limited to 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Nobody seemed to want any time.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I supposed I would close the debate. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to be heard on it.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Does the gentleman want to discuss it?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. If the gentleman wants to be heard, I will take up a few minutes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I understood the gentleman did not want to be heard.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, this provision is necessary for the efficient operation of this bureau. The same words we are asking to be put in here are in other bureaus. You will find in this bill, on page 122, and it would be well for the Chair to compare page 122, lines 13, 14, and 15, with lines 8 and 9, page 136, which we are considering at this time, and which is in the Bureau of the Census. The work of the Bureau of the Census is about the same as the work that this Bureau of Labor Statistics is doing. In fact, there are certain kinds of work in which they cooperate together, and if it is good to have that language in one place in the bill in respect to the Bureau of the Census, I do not see why anybody could have any objection to having the same provision in the Bureau of Labor Statistics, without it is somebody who seems to mistrust anything that has the name of labor about it and of anyone doing work in the Labor Department. Labor from the beginning of the world has been looked at as something beneath, something that you should consider with contempt and fear that they are going to do something that is not right. There is no justification in opposition to this amendment. If it is proper to have the same words in one place it is proper to have them in another.

Now, it does not matter to me what their construction is, how they speak or debate against it, there is absolutely no justification for the provision in one place without having the same provision in the other, and I have full confidence in those who are in charge of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, and I do not believe they will misuse any part of this fund. In fact, I know they are giving the very best service, and that the employees are the most efficient and doing more work and better work than any bureau in the Government.

If it is due to that reason, I say, that there is a mistrust of labor, of those who are working for the cause of labor, they need not fear about this, because they certainly will have there an administration that will be watchful in regard to the matter, and if they are found to be misusing this fund or abusing it, they can be discharged and other men put in their position.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I do not suppose that anything I can say will prevent the adoption of any amendment and that the pending amendment will be agreed to. But I want to call attention to one thing. We provided in this bill for $12,280 for clerical help in this bureau that we have not in current appropriation. We provided, in addition to that, a lump-sum appropriation of $64,000 to be used in the field. These gentlemen, by their little byplay, with which they think they can fool the laboring men of this country, have voted into this bill $23,000 worth of clerks here in Washington. And what else do they propose? That the $64,000 for field service shall have the limitation taken out, so that that sum can be spent here in Washington. That is what comes of men legislating and putting important provisions on the appropriation bill when they do not know anything about it. How many of you knew that you were increasing this appropriation for clerical help above what the Secretary of Labor wants? How many of you know that you are providing here in the District of Columbia, in addition to $102,000 on page 135, $35,000 and $64,000? Oh, it is all right. This is done in the name of labor. I have heard of crimes that were committed in the name of liberty. Laboring men do not get this $200,000, but men on the pay rolls of the Government, many of whom are receiving good salaries, are getting it.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield? I want to know if he would withdraw his objection if this reduction be made?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the committee is responsible for any amendment it puts on the bill. The members of the Committee on Appropriations desire honestly and fairly to provide clerical assistance for all the departments of the Government. We desire to provide all the money that is necessary to carry on the governmental activities with which they are charged. If the Committee of the Whole sees fit to add to this appropriation $23,000 in the city of Washington and then make it possible to spend every dollar of the $64,000 lump-sum appropriation in Washington, that is the business of the Committee of the Whole. The Committee on Appropriations having honestly discharged its duty, will be quite content.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois and Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 44, noes 52.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois and Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina took their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 46, noes 51.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bureau of Immigration: Commissioner General, $5,000; Assistant Commissioner General, who shall also act as chief clerk and actuary, $3,500; private secretary, $1,800; chief statistician, $2,000; clerks—3 of class 4, 4 of class 3, 6 of class 2, 8 of class 1, 8 at $1,000 each, 6 at $900 each; 2 messengers; assistant messenger; in all, $57,900.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 137, line 11, after the word "three," strike out "six" and insert "seven"; after the word "two" strike out "eight" and insert "nine"; after the word "one" strike out "eight" and insert "nine."

On page 137, line 12, after the word "each," strike out the word "six" and insert "seven."

After the word "messengers" insert "two."

Strike out the word "messenger" and insert "messengers."

On page 137, line 17, strike out "$57,900" and insert "$63,120."

This will make the provisions read, following the $2,000 on line 10, as follows:

"Clerks—7 of class 4, 4 of class 3, 7 of class 2, 9 of class 1, 9 at $1,000 each, 7 at $900 each; 2 messengers; 2 assistant messengers; in all, $63,120."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. How much time do you want?

Mr. RAKER. I would like about 10 minutes. This is the only time I have taken on a matter of this kind. There are five different amendments, and I want to call the attention of the committee to them. I have put them all in one, so as to save time.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Will 5 minutes satisfy the gentleman?

Mr. RAKER. Oh, I would like to take 10 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto close in 6 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto close in 6 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] objects. The gentleman from California is recognized.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the net increase proposed by this amendment is one clerk at $1,400, one at $1,200, one at $1,000, one at $900, and an assistant messenger at $700.

The memoranda and the statements bearing on this proposed increase are found on pages 786 to 793 of the committee hearings.

Increase in business of immigration appeals up to the end of February: Total number of appeals, fiscal year 1913, was 7,103; total number July 1, 1913, to February 28, 1914, is 6,094; pro rata increase of 45 per cent. Increase in business of departmental work, of warrants, of arrests, and deportations: Total number of warrants, fiscal year 1913, 3,461; total number from July 1, 1913, to February 28, 1914, 3,210.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Are not these figures a clear indication of the change of policy on the part of the Department of Labor in the present administration, of excluding almost everybody? Are not these figures a proof of that changed policy?

Mr. RAKER. I am glad the gentleman has asked that question. I will read the percentage, and then answer that question. The pro rata increase upon this work is 39 per cent.

Now, there has been no increase in the clerical force since 1911. The work to be done, the work that is required under this increase is urgent, and the necessity of it is shown by the statements contained in the hearings held by the committee. It first applies to cases of insanity, persons who illegally enter the United States and are insane at the time or become insane. The next applies to those violating the law after entering the United States, and the next applies to prostitutes and those receiving the earnings of prostitutes after landing in the United States. Those are the ones that the Commissioner General of Immigration has been deporting under the law, enforcing the law in that regard; and it shows that these men who are doing the work have given eight days and three hours per man over and above the allotted time, thus demonstrating that they are doing all that they can and all that they really ought to do. The department officials in the hearings here show that it is absolutely necessary to bring about the proper enforcement of the law on this particular subject.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. We all agree that those classes should be excluded. But will the gentleman read into the RECORD the increase in the number of exclusions under the vague and indefinite heading "Liable to become a public charge"?

Mr. RAKER. I want to read just a few figures from page 789. "Prostitutes and females coming for any immoral purpose," 330 last year, and during the six months from July 1 to December 31, 1913, 171. The department asks that they may have a sufficient amount of money to continue their effective work and to prevent this class of people from illegally coming into this country and remaining here. The number excluded who were "supported by proceeds of prostitution" was 100 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for the six months from July 1 to December 31, 1913, the number was 74.

They ought not to remain here surely. You ought to provide ample means and assistance to the Department of Labor and the Bureau of Immigration to exclude such people from this country who come here for that purpose.

The department is giving its best efforts to this work, and the record is replete and complete, showing the necessity for the work of exclusion. The increase in the number of exclusions and the increased work they are doing require an increased force.

Let me read a little further. At any rate that answers the question of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MURRAY].

BUREAU OF IMMIGRATION.

STATEMENT OF MR. ROGER O'DONNELL, SPECIAL IMMIGRANT INSPECTOR.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. O'Donnell, you are asking for an increase in this bureau of something over $5,000?

Mr. O'DONNELL. Yes, sir; for four additional clerks and one additional assistant messenger.

Mr. BYRNS. Will you please explain why it is necessary to have that increase?

ADDITIONAL CLERKS.

Mr. O'DONNELL. The Bureau of Immigration has had no increase in its force since 1911, when we received an increase of eight clerks. The present estimate contemplates an increase of one clerk each of class 2, class 1, $1,000, and $900. Now, that can be explained by the increase in our work. We have up to this time been borrowing help as we needed it from the Division of Information, which is provided for separately in this schedule, and we have reached the limit that we can attain in that regard without defeating altogether the purpose for which that division was created and exists. Now, we do not keep office statistics. We have no time and no force to keep statistics of office work—that is, of the number of letters written, and matters of that kind—but I have some figures here which will serve to show the committee what the immediate present pressing increase has been. One of the functions of this bureau is to issue warrants of arrest and deportation looking to the removal from the United States of aliens who are here in violation of law. The total number of warrant cases for the last fiscal year was 3,461. The number for the first six months of this fiscal year is 2,359. Now, at that ratio of increase it amounts to 28 per cent over the work of that kind in the last fiscal year.

Mr. BYRNS. What is the cause for such a heavy increase?

Mr. O'DONNELL. Well, we attribute it to a more efficient enforcement of the law. There has been a greater activity in respect of the State institutions reporting public-charge cases, and also agitation in connection with the white-slave proposition, and we have gone after the so-called white slaves and white slavers so far as the limit of our field appropriation would allow, with the intention of ridding the country of that class of gentry; and in doing that we have, of course, increased the work here in the department to a corresponding extent, as indicated by the figures I have just given.

Another feature which we keep statistics on—not for the purpose of appearing with them before this committee, but for the purpose of our general immigration statistics—is in respect of appeal cases which are handled in our bureau. Now, these appeal cases, coming from every port of entry in the United States, aggregated during the last fiscal year 7,103. For the first six months of this fiscal year the number was 5,533, or an increase of 36 per cent. Those are the two large branches of the work of the bureau. You might call them segregated branches of the work, as contradistinguished from the ordinary office practice of writing letters and granting authorizations, etc. That increase of 28 per cent in the warrant cases and the increase of 36 per cent in the appeals represents increased efficiency in the enforcement of the immigration laws, and our force here in the bureau has just about reached its limit, and we therefore ask the committee to give us this comparatively small additional force.

Mr. BORLAND. During what period is that percentage of increase?

Mr. O'DONNELL. That is during the last six months or the first half of the present fiscal year.

Mr. BORLAND. An increase of 36 per cent in the last six months?

Mr. O'DONNELL. Of course, you understand, a pro rata increase of 36 per cent over the work for the last fiscal year.

Mr. BORLAND. In the warrants issued and in the appeal cases?

Mr. O'DONNELL. Yes. Now, the appeal cases have naturally increased because there has been a stiffening in the inspection system at the ports, and as the system becomes more efficient there a larger number are debarred and a larger number appeal, and every one of those appeals has to be handled here and considered and disposed of by the Secretary.

Mr. BORLAND. What are the grounds on which these warrants are generally issued?

Mr. O'DONNELL. Well, they are for aliens who are found in the United States, to be public charges from causes existing prior to landing, for example, insanity; or they are issued for the arrest and deportation of aliens who have not become public charges, but who are found upon evidence developed subsequent to their landing to have entered by deception and fraud—by deceiving the officers who examined them.

Mr. BORLAND. Suppose a man after he comes here violates some criminal law of the United States or of a State, that is not a ground for his deportation?

Mr. O'DONNELL. That is not a ground for his deportation under existing law.

Mr. BORLAND. Are these white-slave deportations founded upon causes supposed to have existed at the time of his entry as an immigrant or on charges that have arisen since?

Mr. O'DONNELL. On causes that have arisen since. The act of March 26, 1910, took off the time limitation with respect to deporting these people.

Mr. BORLAND. You refer to the white slavers?

Mr. O'DONNELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BORLAND. And did they take off the time limitation as to the time when the offense was committed or when deportation may take place?

Mr. O'DONNELL. Well, a woman found practicing prostitution, an alien woman, is subject to deportation at the present time irrespective of how long she may have been in the United States or when or where she began practicing prostitution.

Mr. BORLAND. Is that the law at the present time?

Mr. O'DONNELL. That is the law at the present time.

Mr. BORLAND. Would the same be true of a man?

Mr. O'DONNELL. To the procurer, the man who is found receiving, sharing in, or deriving any benefit from the earnings of a prostitute, the same rule would apply.

Mr. BORLAND. That makes your department, then, the enforcing agency of a Federal criminal statute, does it?

Mr. O'DONNELL. The Supreme Court of the United States has repeatedly held that this law affecting deportation is not a criminal statute; that expulsion is not a punishment for crime.

Mr. BORLAND. You know, of course that we give the Department of Justice a special fund for the prosecution of white-slave cases.

Mr. O'DONNELL. That has to do with interstate traffic under the Mann Act of June 25, 1910. This may be said to be international traffic while the other is interstate traffic.

Secretary WILSON. This has only to do with aliens.

Mr. BORLAND. Do you mean to say that any alien woman found practicing prostitution in the United States, even though she began after she became a resident of the United States, is subject to deportation because she is an alien?

Mr. O'DONNELL. Because she is an alien and a prostitute.

Mr. BORLAND. And your department handles those cases?

Mr. O'DONNELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BORLAND. And any man found engaging in the white-slave traffic or having any connection with it is subject to deportation if he be an alien, even though he was not a white slaver when he entered the United States?

Mr. O'DONNELL. That is correct, sir. That is the existing law.

Mr. BORLAND. Why are you not acting in the nature of an agency enforcing a criminal statute?

Mr. O'DONNELL. Because the Supreme Court has said deportation is not punishment for crime, and that arrest and deportation under the immigration law is not a criminal proceeding.

Mr. BORLAND. What opportunity for trial do the people have if it is not a crime?

Mr. O'DONNELL. The requirements of due process of law are observed in every one of these cases. There is a warrant of arrest issued; they are given an opportunity to submit a defense, and after the hearing, in which they have figured, has been reviewed in the department, a warrant is issued for deportation or the warrant of arrest is canceled.

Mr. BORLAND. That is simply an ex parte investigation before your immigration officer is it not?

Mr. O'DONNELL. Well, it is not entirely ex parte because there is an opportunity of defense afforded. An attorney is allowed to appear and the right of cross-examination is afforded.

Mr. BORLAND. But it is not a trial in any sense? It is an investigation before your immigration officer?

Mr. O'DONNELL. It may be likened to a hearing in an equity case before an examiner.

Mr. BORLAND. How large a percentage of this increase is due to that cause? Can you say from your figures?

Mr. O'DONNELL. I said 28 per cent had been the increase in warrant cases in the last six months; I can not tell you what proportion of that percentage is due more particularly to development connected with the white-slave traffic.

Mr. BORLAND. Your figures do not show that?

Mr. O'DONNELL. I have not segregated them.

Mr. BORLAND. Do the records in your office show?

Mr. O'DONNELL. I could get that information and put it in the record.

Mr. BORLAND. I would like to have it put in. I would like to know how many deportations have taken place on the ground of becoming public charges or where insanity has developed.

Mr. O'DONNELL. I will be very glad to get that data for last year and for the last six months.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. O'Donnell has only enumerated two of the excludable classes.

Mr. BORLAND. What other classes can you mention?

Mr. O'DONNELL. Contract laborers, persons who are imported and brought into the United States under contract to perform labor or services.

Mr. BORLAND. Has there been an increase in that class of cases?

Mr. O'DONNELL. I am not able to subdivide this percentage.

Mr. BORLAND. These cases arise on complaint or information of one of your inspectors?

Mr. O'DONNELL. They arise in a great many ways. In contract-labor cases they usually arise through information from an informant, perhaps the imported alien himself; in the cases of public charges they are reported to us by the State, county, and municipal authorities; in the cases of these prostitutes and procurers or persons in that class, they are reported by the police authorities or, in some cases, by associations—welfare associations. And whenever information comes to us we are required, or deem it our duty under the law, to investigate it and take whatever action the law requires. But we do not go out hunting up cases, because we have not the money to do it.

Mr. BORLAND. Do your immigration officers engage in hunting those cases down?

Mr. O'DONNELL. Our immigration officers are not inquisitors and they do not go out hunting cases.

Secretary WILSON. When cases are brought to our attention the immigration inspectors make an investigation to determine whether or not there is any foundation for the complaint; they do not go out of their way to hunt up such cases.

Mr. KINKEAD. Where is your appropriation carried for inspectors?

Mr. O'DONNELL. In the sundry civil bill.

Mr. KINKEAD. How many immigration inspectors have you?

Mr. O'DONNELL. I should say between 500 and 600.

Mr. KINKEAD. They are stationed——

Mr. O'DONNELL (interposing). All over the United States.

Mr. KINKEAD. But principally at the ports?

Mr. O'DONNELL. Well, of course, the larger number of our employees are stationed at Ellis Island, that being the largest port of entry for immigrants; but we have a force all over the United States.

Mr. KINKEAD. Do you mean you have inspectors at the inland towns?

Mr. O'DONNELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. KINKEAD. What purpose do they serve there?

Mr. O'DONNELL. They are arresting and deporting people under this warrant procedure, and they are conducting investigations in thousands of cases each year where persons are destined to those places. They make investigations as to Chinese and other aliens.

Mr. KINKEAD. You find there is always work for these inspectors, do you?

Mr. O'DONNELL. Oh, yes, sir.

Mr. KINKEAD. For instance, in a town in southern Illinois?

Mr. O'DONNELL. We have no men in small places like that.

Secretary WILSON. We have some inspectors in St. Louis, and they cover a large territory. We have the country divided into districts, and we have inspectors in each of those districts. The inspector in that district covers the entire territory within the district in question. For instance, if immigrants arrive at the port of New York and are destined to St. Louis or places within that district, the inspector at St. Louis is communicated with, and information is secured for the use of inspectors at New York. In addition to that, we gather information relative to these warrant cases within an entire district.

Mr. KINKEAD. Is the district of the inspector at St. Louis confined to the State of Missouri?

Secretary WILSON. No.

Mr. KINKEAD. He would take in some of the surrounding States?
Secretary WILSON. That district would take in some of the surrounding States.
Mr. O'DONNELL. That is an arbitrary division.
Secretary WILSON. Made by the Secretary for convenience in handling the work.
Mr. O'DONNELL. They are administrative districts, you may say.
Mr. KINKEAD. So that in the interior, eliminating the seaboard States, you probably have 10 men?
Mr. O'DONNELL. Oh, more than that. We have 10 men at Chicago alone.
Mr. KINKEAD. Ten men in Chicago?
Mr. O'DONNELL. Yes; I should say we have more than 10. In the interior, away from the seaboard, we probably have, roughly speaking, 50 inspectors.
Mr. BORLAND. How are these inspectors paid; a regular salary?
Mr. O'DONNELL. Yes, sir; they are paid from this lump-sum appropriation made by Congress in the sundry civil act.
Mr. BORLAND. Are there any fees connected with it at all?
Mr. O'DONNELL. No, sir.
Mr. BORLAND. Are they civil-service employees?
Mr. O'DONNELL. Yes, sir.
Mr. BORLAND. How do the salaries range?
Mr. O'DONNELL. Well, the entrance salary is $1,380, and then they range from that upward in divisions of $120—$1,380, $1,500, $1,620, $1,740, $1,860, $1,980, and $2,100—depending upon the character of the work. The highest salary received by an ordinary inspector—I say an ordinary inspector because I refer to a man without administrative duties—is $1,860.
Mr. BORLAND. Then you have a certain number of chief inspectors who get more than that?
Mr. O'DONNELL. We have inspectors in charge of districts and offices that are paid salaries in the discretion of the Secretary.
Mr KINKEAD. Are there some inspectors designated as chief inspectors?
Mr. O'DONNELL. There is a supervising inspector, for example, at El Paso, Tex.
Secretary WILSON. They are called inspectors in charge.
Mr. O'DONNELL. Yes; inspectors in charge. We have an inspector in charge at Chicago, an inspector in charge at St. Louis, and an inspector in charge at Cleveland; but they are all inspectors, simply being designated to be in charge of the district.
Mr. KINKEAD. Where are the other chief inspectors located?
Mr. O'DONNELL. Well, there is one in every district. Denver, Colo., is the headquarters of a district; Portland, Oreg.; Helena, Mont.; Jacksonville, Fla.; Minneapolis, Minn.; and Norfolk, Va. Then there are inspectors in charge on the Canadian border, what we call substations; for example, Buffalo, which looks after immigration matters in a radius around Buffalo; and Niagara Falls, Winnipeg, Port Huron, and Detroit. I have not named all the places, but if you want all of them I can put them in the record.
Mr. KINKEAD. Yes; I wish you would set that forth in the record.
Mr. O'DONNELL. Very well; I will put in the list.

Mr. BORLAND. What is the function of the Division of Information?
Mr. O'DONNELL. Its function, as set out by section 40 of the act of 1907, is to promote the beneficial distribution of admitted aliens.
Mr. BORLAND. I see you are not proposing to extend that work.
Mr. O'DONNELL. No, sir; we do not find it necessary at this time to ask for any increase.
Mr. BYRNS. How much annual leave do the clerks and employes in your bureau take?
Mr. O'DONNELL. The average annual leave last year was 27 days 1 hour 7½ minutes, say 27 days, roughly.
Mr. BYRNS. How much sick leave?
Mr. O'DONNELL. An average of 3 days and 4 hours.
Mr. BYRNS. Do your clerks work overtime?
Mr. O'DONNELL. Yes, sir.
Mr. BYRNS. Do you keep a record of it?
Mr. O'DONNELL. Yes, sir; the average overtime was—on the basis of 7 hours per diem, of course—8 days and 3 hours per man.
Mr. BYRNS. During the calendar year?
Mr. O'DONNELL. During the calendar year 1913; yes, sir. During that year there were 19½ days taken without pay in the entire bureau.

ASSISTANT MESSENGER.

Mr. BYRNS. What is the necessity for another assistant messenger?
Mr. O'DONNELL. The necessity of it lies in the fact that we have not enough messengers at the present time to avoid the necessity of taking clerks off their desks and sending them about the building with papers. It is about the poorest kind of an investment to get along with too few messengers, because the clerks are paid more and it does not get the work of the bureau out to have them stop and carry papers about because of the lack of messengers.
Mr. BYRNS. You are provided with two messengers and one assistant?
Mr. O'DONNELL. Yes, sir.
Mr. BYRNS. Which makes three?
Mr. O'DONNELL. Yes, sir; counting the one in the Division of Information that makes four, but the one in the Division of Information is not available for use in the bureau; but taking it on the basis of three, there is one who attends to the work of the head of the bureau.
Mr. BYRNS. Why is not this messengers available for the use of the bureau?
Mr. O'DONNELL. Because he has all he can do in that division. His work in tying up and sending out packages in connection with their work—it would be very technical if I were to try to describe it—takes his entire time. So in the bureau proper we have three messengers, one of whom devotes his time, or most of his time, to the head of the bureau; there is one messenger who attends to the mail, handles the incoming and outgoing mail—that is, the physical dispatching of the mail.
Mr. BYRNS. Does that take all of his time?
Mr. O'DONNELL. That takes practically all of his time, but he has an opportunity to relieve between times. So that leaves one man who is available for the general running-around work of the bureau—that is, to make the regular rounds and take papers about. That man is often on the fifth floor, or some other floor, when he is wanted on the eighth floor or on the seventh floor, and the result is that clerks have to be taken off of their work and put at the work of carrying papers, and the business stagnates. There is no more un-ful employee than a messenger. If, however, the committee does not see fit to give us an assistant messenger, a messenger boy, I suppose, would fill the requirements. That just occurs to me, and I suggest it to you for what it is worth.

Mr. BYRNS. Are all of your clerks up to a fair standard of efficiency?

Mr. O'DONNELL. I may say they are above a fair standard of efficiency; we have none below.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Not at all. We are all against the admission of certain classes of immigrants.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California may have 5 minutes more.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] moves that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto close in one minute. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I suggest the absence of a quorum. This is too important a matter to be rushed through.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MURRAY] makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and nine Members present; a quorum. The question is on the motion made by the gentleman from South Carolina that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be concluded in one minute.

Mr. MANN. I move to amend by making it six minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois to limit the debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto to six minutes.

The question being taken on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN), there were—ayes 33, noes 63.

Mr. MANN. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. MANN and Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina.

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 39, noes 57.

Accordingly the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina to close the debate on this paragraph and the amendments thereto in one minute.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I think I am entitled to that one minute. I want to call attention to the fact that this particular bureau in 1908 had $41,000 in clerical force. We have carried in this bill $57,900. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], acting, no doubt, in good faith, absolutely does not know the clerical needs of this department, and I hope the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from California rise?

Mr. RAKER. I rise to present a request for unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Children's Bureau: Chief, $5,000; assistant chief, $2,000; statistical expert, $2,000; private secretary to chief of bureau, $1,500; clerks—2 of class 4, 2 of class 3, 1 of class 2, 1 of class 1, 1, $1,000; special agents—1, $1,400; 1, $1,200; copyist; messenger; in all, $25,640.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood that the gentleman from Massachusetts wished to offer a substantial amendment to the bill.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. I do, Mr. Chairman. I move to increase the amount "$25,640" to "$50,640," in line 4, on page 138.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, let that amendment be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MURRAY] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 138, line 4, strike out "$25,640" and insert "$50,640."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment, or, if the gentleman desires to make a statement, I will reserve the point of order.

[Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, there is a great deal of misinformation about this appropriation. We have not cut it one single penny. We have provided in this bill exactly what the law creating the Children's Bureau said should be appropriated. Sometimes a bureau is created by law, and it is left to Congress to provide from time to time the force to operate it; but in this particular case the law creating the Children's Bureau stated the force that Congress should provide to carry the law into effect. This bureau has been organized less than two years. It was organized in August, 1912.

We have provided in this bill the amount called for by the organic act. The estimates that came to the committee asked for about $165,000.

Mr. HOBSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. HOBSON. Do I understand that any increase at this time or in the future will be subject to a point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I think it would.

Mr. HOBSON. The chairman interprets the law, then, that this bureau was never intended to expand.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The committee believed that the act of Congress was intended as instruction to the committee, because the act itself says for whom we shall appropriate and at what salary.

Mr. HOBSON. Does the gentleman base his objections to an increase on the law, or on the merits of the case?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. On the law. On the merits of the case I will speak if the gentleman will permit me.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment that I wish to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. There is one amendment pending now and a point of order pending.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Will the gentleman from South Carolina yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. GALLAGHER. I would like to ask if the amount granted by the committee is not an amount that will really cripple the work of the department?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I can not answer that question.

Mr. GALLAGHER. What is the gentleman's opinion about it on the evidence that he had before his committee?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I did not happen to hear the director of the Children's Bureau. I have read her testimony, and I do not remember that she said that the Children's Bureau would be crippled.

Mr. GALLAGHER. She stated that she wanted a lot more money, and you are denying her the money necessary.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I am willing to discuss that question and explain it.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman from South Carolina yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Is the language of the bill creating this bureau different from the language of the Post Office bill creating the Rural Free Delivery system?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. And other branches of the Postal Service like it. For instance, it is in my mind that the initial appropriation for the Rural Delivery Service was very small.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It was a lump-sum appropriation and did not state that certain people should be employed at certain salaries.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, was the point of order made or reserved?

The CHAIRMAN. It was reserved. Does the gentleman from South Carolina make his point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I have explained that.

The CHAIRMAN. May the Chair call the gentleman's attention to this fact: This appropriation carries a total of $25,640, and the gentleman from Massachusetts does not propose to increase any item, but simply proposes to increase the total. What would be the difference if you had $125,000 or $25,000? The Chair can see no logic in an amendment of that kind and can not find any precedent authorizing an amendment of that kind. The Chair believes it to be good practice to have the total amount agree with the items, and he is going to sustain the point of order.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Before the Chair does that I do not want any quibble about this thing. If the gentleman from South Carolina is right as to the fundamental principle, I would like to offer an amendment increasing the items.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman when he offers his amendment, but he is passing on the question now before him.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. May I substitute an amendment for the one pending?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is passing on the question before him. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment to increase the total to $50,640; he offers no amendment to increase the items in the paragraph. The Chair sustains the point of order. Now, if the gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment which increases the various items, then an amendment increasing the total will be in order.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. We can save time, Mr. Chairman, by getting an anticipatory ruling on the point of order made by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must offer his amendment before the point of order can be made and ruled upon.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I have been informed that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] has an amendment which meets the situation.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 137, line 25, after the figures "$2,400" insert "industrial expert, $2,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve a point of order.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to take but little time of the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania will pardon me, many members of the committee are impatient and want me to make the point of order. I want to state my feelings——

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is the point of order.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MURDOCK. Does not the point of order come too late?

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, the gentleman from South Carolina reserved the point of order when the point of order was offered.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina has made the point of order against the amendment. What is the ground of the point of order made by the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the ground upon which the point of order is made is that the law creating the Children's Bureau provides:

That there shall be in said bureau, until otherwise provided for by law, an assistant chief, to be appointed by the Secretary of Labor, who shall receive an annual compensation of $2,400; 1 private secretary to the chief of the bureau, who shall receive an annual compensation of $1,500; 1 statistical expert, at $2,000; 2 clerks of class 4; 2 clerks of class 3; 1 clerk of class 2; 1 clerk of class 1; 1 clerk at $1,000; 1 copyist, at $900; 1 special agent, at $400; 1 special agent, at $1,400; 1 speceial agent, at $1,200; and 1 messenger, at $840.

And those are the people provided for in the bill.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. The statistical expert is not provided for, is he?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, we have provided for every person mentioned in the item.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order at some time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois on the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] claims that there can be no increase over the number of employees enumerated in the act creating the Children's Bureau, and he has just enumerated those places, but let us see what the situation is. This act of April 9, 1912, provided for certain places. Those are carried in this bill. The gentleman from South Carolina contends that those are all that are authorized by the act, but the act reads:

There shall be in said bureau, until otherwise provided for by law—

It does not even read "until otherwise provided by law," but it reads "until otherwise provided for by law."

Mr. Chairman, it would be to accuse the Congress of imbecility to say that when it creates a bureau and provides, as it must, for temporary employees in that bureau it intends that they can never be changed except by a legislative act of Congress. This provision was inserted in the law creating the Children's Bureau for the purpose of making provision for these employees the first year. The intention was to provide temporary employees until otherwise provided for by law. Here comes along the act creating the Department of Labor the very next year, and the Children's Bureau is in that department, and it reads:

There shall also be one chief clerk and disbursing clerk and such other clerical assistants, inspectors, and special agents as may from time to time be provided for by Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman permit the Chair to interrupt him?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Undoubtedly that statute authorizes Congress to appropriate for any clerical assistants, inspectors, and agents it may deem proper to appropriate for.

Mr. MANN. I think so.

The CHAIRMAN. But this act undertook to designate the number and kind of employees this bureau should have.

Mr. MANN. I think the Chair is in error about that, if the Chair will pardon me. Section 2 of the Children's Bureau act was intended only to provide the force which should start out in the bureau. That is the way the language reads:

Until otherwise provided for by law.

The Chair is familiar with the fact. We constantly provide: "Until otherwise provided by law."

That is a common expression, but the expression "until otherwise provided for by law" can not be found anywhere in any statute except as it refers to an appropriation act. The provision "otherwise provided for by law" means the money with which to provide the office. That is the method which Congress has of providing for a place, by making an appropriation for it. If it had been intended in section 2 of this act that there could be no other employees provided until another legislative act was passed, it would have read: "Until otherwise provided by law."

That is the provision which is usual and common in reference to legislative acts.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman's contention to be that the word "for" in the phrase, "until otherwise provided for by law," would change the meaning of this law from the construction that would be placed upon it if it read "until otherwise provided by law"?

Mr. MANN. I think very likely if it read "otherwise provided by law," in that place it would have meant this act, but to make it clear they inserted the word "for." That language has been in a good many statutes in recent years creating bureaus of the Government for the express purpose of authorizing the Congress to make appropriations which would not be subject to the point of order. Take the situation here. Here is an act where it is contended on one side by the gentleman from South Carolina that the bureau can have only so many clerks—one statistical expert, one messenger, one copyist—unless you have legislation without regard to appropriations, and we all know, as a matter of practice—and these bills are drawn with respect to the practice in the House—it would be impossible for Congress each year by a legislative act to provide for the number of employees which Congress desires to have in the Children's Bureau; and if you say that when they legislate and fix temporarily the number of employees that means for all time, I say you would accuse Congress of absolute imbecility. Nobody would have put such language in the law except for the purpose of providing for a temporary force pending appropriations by acts of Congress, and to guard the matter carefully they used the language which has been construed many times in referring to appropriation acts. So far as I am personally concerned I am absolutely clear. I think it was the intention in reference to the Children's Bureau to leave to Congress the right to increase the number of employees by increasing the appropriations for them in the annual appropriation acts.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has very clearly stated the rules under which my amendment is in order. I want to add that it is certainly inconceivable that Congress in the organic act creating the Children's Bureau would forever preclude the right to increase the force as necessities might demand. The Children's Bureau is absolutely crippled by the appropriation made in this act, the sum provided being so small in comparison with the work before this bureau that it is absolutely pitiful. The officials of the bureau came before the committee and showed that by reasonable computation the proper conduct of the bureau will require $165,000, and showed how it could be used. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this question is too important to be completely ruled out by a point of order without full and fair consideration of its merits. The establishment of this Children's Bureau two years ago was the first recognition on the part of the Federal Government that the children of the Nation are worthy of attention. That, in spite of the fact that one of the reasons that caused the Pilgrim Fathers to adventure to America, was the desire to protect their little ones from grinding toil.

This reason, quoted from the memorial drawn up by these founders of a new civilization, is as follows:

That many of our children, through the extreme necessity that was upon them, although of the best disposition and graciously inclined, and willing to bear their part of their parents' burdens, were oftentimes so oppressed with their heavy labors that, although their spirits were free and willing, yet their bodies bowed under the weight of the same and became decrepit in their very youth, and the vigor of their strength was consumed in the very bud.

Yet it was 292 years after that time that the Nation they made possible officially discovered children and recognized them as national assets, worthy of care and protection.

Even then the Children's Bureau was not established without meeting the bitter opposition of the powers that thrive at the expense of humanity. Successfully brought into being, it has met and still meets with determined opposition, and it has been handicapped in many ways. In spite of every obstacle, however, it has done a great work, and it deserves the support of every patriotic legislator and citizen. Any attempt to impair its efficiency and mar its work by insufficient funds merits the condemantion of every American who has regard for the welfare of the Nation in the future.

Why should this bureau be so severely crippled by an appropriation of $25,000 when it is admitted that the efficient conduct of its work requires $165,000? This Congress is not wont to be so parsimonious in matters of property. Why become so economical in matters of human life? This body has already appropriated $600,000 for dealing with hog cholera. It has appropriated $400,000 to eradicate the tick among southern cattle. It has provided $375,000 for the study of the cotton-boll weevil. This very bill carries $293,000 for the work of the Bureau of Standards.

All these concern the things of money and materials. But for the study of the things of human life, the protection of childhood, this small sum is deemed sufficient. It is less than 1 cent for every 12 children in this country under the age of 15 years. By this method of figuring a hog or a cow or a bale of cotton is more valuable than a child.

Mr. Chairman, the most priceless asset of this Nation is not its cattle nor swine nor cotton crop. It is the army of children, 30,000,000 strong, under the age of 15 years, who live in this land of ours. With them rests the future of the Republic. Their health will determine that of future generations. Their character will determine that of the American citizenship to come. Their education and their morality will set the mark for the future. The work done for the children of to-day is work done for the men and women of to-morrow.

I maintain that those who oppose granting this all-important bureau ample funds either do it through ignorance of the vital importance of its work or they are the defenders of those who profit from the exploitation of childhood in America. I submit that no quibble over the technical construction of a rule will furnish an excuse for those who would cripple this bureau when they face the aroused public conscience of this Nation.

I desire to include in my remarks copies of letters received by me from various organizations of Pennsylvania. They are as follows:

CIVIC CLUB OF ALLEGHENY COUNTY,
Pittsburgh, Pa., April 10, 1914.

Hon. M. CLYDE KELLY,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We are informed that the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives have refused the appropriation of $165,000 asked for by the chief of the Federal Children's Bureau. The present appropriation of $25,000 is utterly insufficient to meet the needs of this fast-growing department.

Will you not use your influence to have this bill amended to provide for the increase?

Yours, very truly,

H. M. DERNUTE, Secretary.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., April 7, 1914.

Hon. M. CLYDE KELLY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Please urge amendment of appropriations bill so that Children's Bureau may get $165,000 asked for by chief; $25,000 recommended by Appropriations Committee utterly insufficient to carry on the work.

PENNSYLVANIA CHILD LABOR ASSOCIATION.

THE VOLUNTEERS OF AMERICA,
RELIEF AND INDUSTRIAL DEPARTMENT,
Pittsburgh, Pa., April 13, 1914.

Hon. M. CLYDE KELLY,
Representative in Congress, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR HONORED SIR: I am writing you these few lines as a request, trusting that you will be favorable toward the appropriation that the Children's Bureau is trying to get for this coming year of $165,000 for the labor in the bureau, which, I am sure, is worthy of consideration. You will no doubt agree with me that the child's welfare of this Nation is worthy of the Government's support; and the Nation is built up by the children who will be the citizens of the future.

I am sure that if the Government can appropriate over $7,000,000 for the Bureau of Plants and Animal Industry, the children, who are of more value than animals and plants, are worthy of the respect, for we note what the Master said when He was on the earth, "Suffer the little children to come unto Me," and if He should take such interest in the welfare of the child, I am sure it is the duty of all Christians to be equally interested that the children will have the proper attention and that the Government will think it worthy to assume its responsibility for the welfare of the children.

Believe me to remain,

Yours, very sincerely,

JOHN D. NATZELL, Secretary.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak to the point of order, simply to add this, that it is not reasonable to conclude that this body when it created an offspring would not conform to the universal laws of life. There is not a single living thing in the universe that is not subject to the law of change, and the assumption of this body, after it has existed all these generations and has created similar bureaus, and has never yet created anything that would be fixed and set and crystallized forever, that it should now at this stage of its own existence create an anomaly in the living organisms of the universe. And the only rational conclusion is that this bureau is like all other bureaus, that it has an object in its creation, and that in the fulfillment of that object it must be subject to this law of development and evolution, and with any liberal construction such as has been put upon it, making the point of order is not reasonable.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. I have an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order is before the House.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the Chair hear me a moment on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I am in sympathy with those who desire to increase the office force of this bureau. I think the office force of the bureau ought to be increased. I wish this amendment were in order. The question before the Chair is not, however, the question of what our sympathies and inclinations might prompt us to do, but what we may properly do under the rules of the House. A number of laws have been referred to this afternoon containing somewhat similar language with regard to the office forces of bureaus of the Government. A decision in one case necessitates a like decision in all the cases, and therefore it is quite important that the decision be a correct one. I want to call the Chair's attention to these words at the beginning of section 3 of the act establishing the Children's Bureau:

There shall be in the said bureau and until otherwise provided for by law the following officials:

That is in section 3 of the act creating the Children's Bureau.

From a reading of the section the Chair will see that it names the places and officials provided for in this act. It says, "until otherwise provided for by law." Now, how do we provide bureaus by law? How do we increase the designated forces of the Government by law? By a provision in an appropriation bill? Certainly not. The committee that reported this bill has no authority to make a law; it has no authority to change a law; it has no authority to modify a law; it has authority only to carry out a law and appropriate under one.

Now, the personnel of this bureau can be increased. Any gentleman can introduce a bill to increase the personnel. That bill can be reported by the proper committee and brought in here and passed, and then it becomes a law; but until that is done the force here named is the force of this bureau.

Mr. HOBSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] asked me to yield a moment to him, and I will yield to him first.

Mr. MADDEN. I was just going to ask the gentleman from Wyoming whether, as a matter of fact, a mere appropriation of the money was not a provision of the law itself, not permanent law, but current law, and, while it lasts, just as effective as any permanent law that may be enacted?

Mr. MONDELL. It is effective in taking money out of the Treasury to make it available for use. But one of the fundamental propositions governing an appropriation committee is that they can not legislate; they can not change law. Now, here is a law fixed and established. It is not a question of whether the law is as I would have it or as the gentleman from Illinois would have it. It is a question of the jurisdiction of this committee. As a member of this committee, if there were no other considerations, I should like to see the jurisdiction of the committee enlarged to such an extent that we could bring in, from time to time, increases in the personnel of these bureaus. But that was not what was contemplated. If the intent had been that we should have authority to increase the personnel, name and fix the salaries, the provision would have been altogether different. Congress certainly would not have said, "as provided for by law."

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman let me interject a word here? I commend the committee and gentlemen of the committee for living within its sphere of jurisdiction. Now, they come into a body that has a broader jurisdiction, and I ask the committee to cooperate with the committee having broader jurisdiction to enlarge the bill by appropriating the money needed in this bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, well, Mr. Chairman, that is not the question before us at all. It is not a question of what I might want to do but of what, under the rules, we have a right to do.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HOBSON. The gentleman was outlining the method by which he thought this expansion could properly be made, and he pointed out that he thought it would be necessary to bring in a bill and have it passed—a legislative bill. I wish to ask him whether he thinks if, in the following year or at some subsequent date, additional expansion should be found to be necessary for this bureau to carry out the object for which it was created, that method would meet the case of needed expansion every year? Does he believe that there ought to be a legislative act of that character passed every time expansion is needed? In other words, does he think we ought to have a bureau of the Government whose organic law would have to be reenacted every time we wished to make an increase in the force therein?

Mr. MONDELL. Whether or not that is as it should be is not the way I understand the question. I understand that to be the situation, and it is a situation that I am not responsible for, and I do not know that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] is responsible for it. Congress did fix the personnel for this bureau, and named the positions and fixed the salaries, and said that such was the personnel of the bureau until that personnel should be modified by law. I contend that the Committee on Appropriations can not change the law.

The gentleman from Alabama knows, however, that this committee has jurisdiction to very largely increase the activities of this bureau without changing this particular item. For instance, section 1 of the bill defines the jurisdiction of the bureau, and an amendment carrying a lump sum can be offered by anyone to carry out any one of those various purposes—to investigate questions of infant mortality, the birth rate, orphanage, juvenile courts, dangerous occupations, accidents, and diseases of children. A separate item can be offered, making a lump-sum appropriation to carry out any or all of these purposes, and that would be in order; and if the House adopted such an amendment the sum thus appropriated could be used to pay the necessary investigators, inspectors, and other officers under those items.

What I am contending is that this particular provision in regard to the personnel is fixed and established in the law. Congress said that should be the permanent local office personnel until the law should be changed. This committee has no authority to change the law.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] says we should join with the Members of the House to do this desirable thing. But what if the committee itself, on its own motion, should propose an increase or a decrease that the House did not approve of? The House could very well say this committee was attempting to do something which it had no authority to do.

There is no difficulty about providing for this bureau. Amendments are in order of any amount to do work of all kinds in the fields within the jurisdiction of the bureau, but this fixed personnel can not be changed by an amendment to an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair desires to ask unanimous consent to extend his reasons in the RECORD, because this is quite a delicate point, and the Chair has not had an opportunity to thrash it out thoroughly. The Chair is going to sustain the point of order.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, may I be recognized to offer an amendment?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I most respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Committee?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I desire to make a brief statement for the benefit of the Chair, so that when he extends his remarks he may answer the proposition, if he can.

The law creating the Children's Bureau fixes a certain number of employees. The law creating the Bureau of Statistics, which was placed in the Department of Labor, creates absolutely the number of employees in that bureau; and yet unless you sustain the items in this bill under the act creating the Department of Labor, every one of the items in this bill in reference to the Bureau of Statistics is subject to a point of order.

The point of order was raised on one of them, at the top of page 136, a while ago, and after argument the Chair overruled the point of order, although every argument that can be made in favor of sustaining the point of order here is true in reference to sustaining the point of order on that item.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman that the same language is not used in the two paragraphs. One of them specifically authorizes, whereas the other one only authorizes such as are provided by law.

Mr. MANN. In the act creating the Department of Labor, which is now called the Bureau of Statistics, Congress specifically provided every place. It did not even leave in the limitation, as I recall it, "until otherwise provided for by law." So that the case in reference to the language on the top of page 136, in favor of sustaining the point of order, is stronger than it is on this. I think the Chair was right before and is in error now.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. J. I. NOLAN) there were—ayes 64, noes 42.

Accordingly the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. HOBSON and Mr. GOOD rose.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. GOOD. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Iowa is a member of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], a member of the committee, offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 138, insert as a new paragraph, at the end of line 4, the following:

"To carry into effect the provisions of the act approved April 9, 1912, providing for the investigation of questions of infant mortality and dangerous occupations, $50,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I make a point of order against that amendment.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, clearly the amendment is not subject to a point of order. I have followed the words of the statute creating the Children's Bureau. I have followed the provision carried in this bill for a number of years with regard to the Bureau of Standards. Every item that we have carried in the appropriations for the work done by the Bureau of Standards would be subject to a point of order if the provisions of this amendment are subject to a point of order. The law creating the Children's Bureau provides that it shall especially investigate—and I quote the words of that statute—

And shall especially investigate the questions of infant mortality—

And further on—

Dangerous occupations.

Those are the exact words of the statute, and no amendment could be offered, and no provision could be brought before the House by the committee that would be in order if this provision is not in order. It is to carry into effect those things that were specially provided for, the things that were particularly in the mind of Congress when the bureau was created, namely, to investigate the question of infant mortality and of dangerous occupations.

I would refer the Chair to those provisions of the bill that we have just passed, provisions against which points of order have been made in the past, with regard to the Bureau of Standards. In every one of those provisions we have carried language that is similar to the language I have incorporated in this amendment, except with regard to the date of the organic act creating the Bureau of Standards. We have provided by this very appropriation bill a new appropriation with regard to the standard for measuring public utilities, for the investigation of standards and methods of measurement of public utilities, and we put it in the exact words of the statute creating the bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Iowa permit the Chair to interrupt him?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The language of the act of April 9, 1912, creating this bureau, to which the gentleman refers in his amendment, created at the same time a certain number of employees to carry that provision into effect.

Mr. GOOD. So did the act creating the Bureau of Standards.

The CHAIRMAN. If the act had contemplated that that appropriation might be increased, it would have said so in so many words.

Mr. GOOD. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the act creating the Bureau of Standards provided for the personnel of that bureau; but, in addition to those provisions, we appropriate every year for specific work that is provided for by the law creating the bureau. Certainly such a ruling would curtail very materially the great departments of this Government in carrying out the wishes of Congress if we simply said we should not increase appropriations for any purpose beyond the personnel that is provided for in the organic act creating the bureau of the department.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The law provides that certain things should be done as the gentleman says, and it also provides the force to do it.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the amendment just offered is clearly in order; as clearly in order as the amendment offered a few moments ago was not in order. Section 2 of this law outlines the jurisdiction of this bureau, and it is clearly within the jurisdiction of this committee to bring in a lump-sum appropriation for the purpose of enabling the bureau to perform the services within its jurisdiction. The amendment which was offered to section 2 proposed to change the office personnel, which had been fixed by law and which in the terms of the statute could only be changed by law. Of course we could not do that by amendment to an appropriation bill; but we could appropriate a million dollars for any one of the purposes named in section 1 of the act—to investigate infant mortality, to investigate the birth rate, questions of orphanage, juvenile courts, dangerous occupations, diseases of children, legislation affecting children, and so forth. This could all be combined in one lump-sum appropriation, or they could be separated into as many lump-sum appropriations as there are classes of work provided for. It is within the jurisdiction of this committee to appropriate for these purposes, and having appropriated for them, the bureau could use this fund for the employment of the necessary investigators, the necessary agents to carry out the will of Congress. The thing we can not do in regard to this bureau by an item in this bill is to change the office personnel. We can increase it indirectly through a lump-sum appropriation to any desired or desirable extent.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, whether the Chair ruled correctly or not, I bow to the Chair's decision, because I know that the Chair is doing honestly and earnestly what he thinks is right, and it is no easy job to be a chairman. [Applause.] Whether the former amendment was in order or not, it seems to me that this amendment is. Some gentlemen assume that section 3 of the act provides that there shall only be certain employees in the Children's Bureau. That is not what the act says. If section 3 of the act said there shall only be employed certain persons, you might make all the lump-sum appropriations you pleased, but they could not spend any of it except through those employees. But there is a section of the act, in addition to the last two, which do not count, which authorizes the bureau to investigate and report to the department upon all matters pertaining to the welfare of children, child life, and enumerating certain classes of cases. There is an authorization. Suppose section 3 had not been in the bill, no one would doubt but that amendment would be in order under the language of section 2. There is not a department of the Government that does not have a lump-sum appropriation of some kind. Now, suppose section 3 had not been in the act, then any amendment or any proposition for an appropriation to do any of this investigating work would be in order under the rule. The addition of section 3 that there shall be employed certain officials of that department is not an inhibition against having other people in the department if an appropriation could be made under the general section of the bill. This provision as to employees is only a provision that there shall be in the said bureau until otherwise provided for by law certain employees, but that does not take away the authority to make certain appropriations to carry on the investigations provided for in the preceding section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is under the impression from the precedents cited to him by the parliamentary clerk that the amendment is in order.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, in sections 1 and 2 it is provided that there shall be created a bureau which shall have a director appointed by the President, and the said bureau shall investigate certain things. Section 3 provides what officials and force the bureau shall have.

The CHAIRMAN. And this proposed amendment does not specify any additional force, but it specifies a bulk appropriation with which the department can do as it pleases in the direction for which it was created.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I suppose under the law, then, the director could put in a dozen more clerks?

The CHAIRMAN. He could spend it as he might see proper.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. In other words, having been refused by the committee to increase the force, she can have a lump-sum appropriation and do indirectly what she could not do directly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, this is an important amendment. Of course, it is unfortunate to find some who oppose legislation of this sort. The work the Children's Bureau is doing under the able direction of the present director is one of the most important there is. It has to do with the very vitals of mankind. It has to do with the improvement of our children in their health, in their education, in their morals. It is strange that anyone should withhold consent from an appropriation for as much as can be utilized for this kind of work. That ought to be the only limit for work of this kind—how much can be properly utilized to do the work of this bureau. We gave almost unanimous consent for the expenditure of $600,000 to examine into diseases of animals, but we do not take the same interest in human kind, and I sometimes wonder why, whether it is because you can not sell a human being for $10 or $20 as you can a hog. I wonder whether or not if children were valued at so many dollars we would have this opposition and obstruction to work being done in the Bureau of Children and in the Bureau of Labor Statistics. I regret to hold the suspicion that that might be true, but when we see delays in work of this kind, when we see and hear in this country of ours, of which we boast so much, about our patriotism, but find that we are far behind the old countries that we sometimes charge with being under the control of aristocrats, I begin to wonder whither we are drifting, and whether if men like Jefferson and Lincoln were alive they would not question whether this is the same Government that existed when they were on earth.

Money appropriated for work of this kind is certainly the most important to human kind there can be, because it tends to improve the condition of the young, the condition of those that are coming after us, the citizens of the future generations. This amendment is certainly worthy of favorable consideration.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I have been doing the best I could to get this bill finished in Committee of the Whole to-night.

Mr. MANN. Is there anything that is controversial after we get through with this item?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. But I see now, Mr. Chairman, it is impossible for me to accomplish what I had in mind. I move that the committee do now rise.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 15, 1914.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we pray Thee to look upon us with great sympathy and pity. We find ourselves in the midst of a sphere of influence and responsibility calling upon all the forces of our nature to meet divinely imposed obligations. We pray Thee to draw near to us, because in the common ground of our contact with God do we find the one basis upon which we can deliver the forces of our lives and of our Nation upon the great issues that are confronting us. We pray that Thou wilt bless all in authority in this Nation. Give to them wisdom in counsel; give to them the spirit of brotherhood; give to them courage in their convictions. May this Nation, as it has in the past, stand for the great principles of freedom of thought and conscience and of submission to the divine will. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HARBOR TONNAGE AND CONSTRUCTION OF LOCKS (S. DOC. NO. 465).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 9th instant, referred to the Department of Commerce by the Secretary of the Treasury, detailed statements for the fiscal year 1913 of the incoming and outgoing tonnage in the foreign trade for each customs district of the United States, showing also the country of departure and destination and the nationality of vessels, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals and ordered to be printed.

GOVERNMENT OF PORTO RICO.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication addressed to the President of the Senate, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., April 13, 1914.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

DEAR SIR: I have just received from the Porto Rican House of Delegates a copy of a memorial addressed to you, with the request that I transmit this document to you.

I have the honor to comply with this request of the house of delegates, and I beg that you will permit me to hope that you will devote a brief portion of your valuable time to the perusal of this memorial, which refers to the problem of citizenship for the people of Porto Rico.

I feel sure that the house of delegates expresses the true sentiment and ideas of the majority of the people of Porto Rico.

Very respectfully, yours,

L. M. RIVERA.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The memorial will be printed in the RECORD and, together with the communication, will be referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

The memorial is as follows:

HOUSE OF DELEGATES OF PORTO RICO,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

I hereby certify that the following memorial was introduced by the speaker, José de Diego, and unanimously approved by the House of Delegates of Porto Rico at its session of March 12 of the current year.

In witness whereof I issue, sign, and seal this certificate in San Juan, Porto Rico, on the 27th day of March, 1914.

[SEAL.] JOSÉ MUÑOZ RIVERA,
Secretary of the House of Delegates of Porto Rico.

MEMORIAL OF THE HOUSE OF DELEGATES OF PORTO RICO TO THE PRESIDENT AND TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES CONCERNING CITIZENSHIP.

A bill declaring Porto Ricans collectively citizens of the United States is now before Congress.

The House of Delegates of Porto Rico, in the face of a problem that so essentially affects the life, the personality, and the destiny of the people it represents, can not under any circumstances waive the duty of studying this great problem and, with the profoundest respect, begs to address to the President and to the Congress of the United States the present clearly reasoned statement, the fruit of a careful and impartial analysis of the question in its several aspects, as also of an exact knowledge of the sentiments and wishes of the vast majority of Porto Ricans.

But before entering upon a discussion of the merits of this question we desire to clearly state that nothing that may be said on the matter should be construed as disparaging or mortifying with regard to the noble title of American citizenship; but that, while rendering just and sincere homage to your citizenship, we firmly and loyally maintain our opposition to being declared, in defiance of our express wish or without our express consent, citizens of any country whatsoever other than our own beloved soil that God has given us as an inalienable gift and incoercible right.

First of all, we claim that the granting of American citizenship to Porto Ricans answers no purpose whatever that may serve public necessity or afford general convenience.

The privileges of citizenship can only be referred to two orders of ideas—one internal, the other external to the country of its origin; or, in other terms, in municipal and in international law.

We already possess our own sufficient citizenship of Porto Rico, which is indisputable and ostensible to the world, inasmuch as our citizenship is derived by natural law from our birth and by written law from an act of the Congress of the United States.

Section 7 of the organic act of Porto Rico, approved by the President of the United States on April 12, 1900, provides "that all inhabitants continuing to reside therein who were Spanish subjects on the 11th day of April, 1899, and then resided in Porto Rico, and their children born subsequent thereto, shall be deemed and held to be citizens of Porto Rico, and as such entitled to the protection of the United States."

It has been stated and repeated on various occasions, without any basis whatever, that we Porto Ricans are a people without a fatherland and without citizenship, of a personality ignored by the law of nations. We have our fatherland, which is our island; we have our citizenship, which is that of Porto Rico; we have personality, which is that of our people; and none can ignore them without causing the island to disappear from the map or without denying that the Congress of the United States that established our citizenship and our personality may be, as it is, one of the most powerful and surpassingly great entities in the political concert of the universe.

We are citizens of Porto Rico, and as such entitled to the protection of the United States. It is thus written in our organic act, and in accordance with the precepts of that act the diplomatic and consular corps of the United States, ever since the administration of President McKinley, keep a register in foreign countries of citizens of Porto Rico and give Porto Ricans the protection to which they are entitled throughout the world.

American citizenship in foreign countries accords no other privilege than that of the enjoyment of the protection afforded by the Government of the United States in the extraterritoriality of consular and diplomatic law. As citizens of Porto Rico we enjoy that protection and with it the only privilege derived from American citizenship in international relationship.

In the other order of ideas, which refer to the privileges of citizenship within the State itself, such privileges are summed up and condensed in the individual rights guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States, and the Bill of Rights of your Constitution is applicable to Porto Rico, as has been decided by your Supreme Court in various opinions it has handed down, and especially so in the case of Downs v. Bidwell (182 U. S., 244), in which Judge Brown thus expressed the opinion of the court:

"My position * * * is simply that the Constitution does not apply to territories acquired by treaty until Congress has so declared * * * except so far as concerns the natural rights of their inhabitants to life, liberty, and property * * *."

And prior to the expression of any opinion whatever by the Supreme Court of the United States the people of Porto Rico, providing for its own liberty, had already, on February 27, 1902, promulgated "An act to define the rights of the people," which absolutely guarantees the right of conscience and the exercise of religious worship, the privilege against arbitrary search and imprisonment, the freedom of speech, both spoken and written, and the right of peaceable assembly, with powers to apply to the Government for redress of grievances by petition or remonstrance.

We therefore possess through the extension of your constitutional law the rights of life, liberty, and property, which are all the essential rights of humanity; we also have guaranteed by our own law the primary rights of the people, and if you still deem your law and our law insufficient, you may add to or amplify them or determine for us all rights and liberties you please in a new organic act without affecting our citizenship, inasmuch as liberty and rights are gifts that may be granted and accepted to infinity, like the light of heaven that never ceases to shine and illuminate the world.

And we have demonstrated that there is not the remotest necessity of declaring the people of Porto Rico citizens of the United States in order that they may enjoy, as they do enjoy as citizens of Porto Rico, all the privileges of American citizenship within and without the limits of our inextinguishably adored soil.

It has also been repeated, through ignorance of the facts and a confusion of ideas, that although the granting of American citizenship to Porto Ricans solves no practical problem, it yet satisfies a spiritual longing that responds to a general sentiment.

When one speaks thus a distinction should be made as to whether that longing and that sentiment live in the hearts of Americans or in the hearts of Porto Ricans. It seems that in matters of heart, in dealing with something like citizenship that may alter the life and the destiny of our people, it is to us to whom the sentiment should be attributed and it should be we who manifest it. But if we are to speak with entire loyalty, we must say that the sentiment concerning American citizenship for Porto Rico is neither felt by Porto Ricans nor by Americans.

It is not in you who might have declared Porto Ricans citizens of the United States in the law that you promulgated for us in the year 1900, you, nevertheless, constituted us citizens of Porto Rico; it is not in you who besought in Congress by presidential messages to confer on us your citizenship, abstained from so doing during 13 years with firm perseverance.

This does not imply a complaint, but is rather praise, for we consider your abstaining from so doing not an offense but a mark of respect for the wishes of the people of Porto Rico and to your own democratic Constitution, which does not permit the government of a people to be transformed in its fundamental basis of citizenship without the consent of the governed.

The sentiment of American citizenship for Porto Rico is neither in you nor in us. You have known for many years that the people of our island is profoundly displeased; that it is in constant protest against the absurd form of government that you imposed on us without our consent; and, through erroneous information or inexact appreciation, you have probably interpreted our displeasure and our protest as due to the fact that you have not granted us American citizenship, when in reality, of the few good things contained in our present organic act, the best is Porto Rican citizenship, which you consecrated before the world by means of a law of your Congress.

The general dissatisfaction in our country, the tide of bitterness that has swept over our souls, and its overflow in constant protest has had its birth and its growth in the régime you decreed for us in the year 1900—a government without representation in its highest spheres, where the legislative and executive powers are amalgamated, where the people do not freely and sovereignly impose their own taxes, where Porto Ricans are kept from directing the administrative departments, where we are subject to an oligarchy of six men who, through presidential nomination, form the majority in the upper house of our legislature and who are at the same time at the head of the executive departments; who legislate and execute the laws, grant franchise of a public nature, and do all those things that constitute the principal attributes of government, while they lack a knowledge of our local laws, of our customs, our temperament, our collective life, our mode of feeling, of thought, and of speech.

We know that the ideas and men who now sit triumphant in the Capitol and at the White House are not responsible for this form of autocratic government against which the great Democratic Party protested in its convention at Kansas City in the year 1900, with these energetic words:

"We declare again that all governments instituted among men derive their just powers from the consent of the governed; that any government not based upon the consent of the governed is a tyranny; and that to impose upon any people a government of force is to substitute the methods of imperialism for those of a republic. We hold that the Constitution follows the flag and denounce the doctrine that an Executive or Congress, deriving their existence and their power from the Constitution, can exercise lawful authority beyond it or in violation of it. We assert that no nation can long endure half republic and half empire, and we warn the American people that imperialism abroad will lead quickly and inevitably to despotism at home. Believing in these fundamental principles, we denounce the Porto Rican law, enacted by a Republican Congress against the protest and opposition of the Democratic minority, as a bold and open violation of the Nation's organic law and a flagrant breach of the national good faith. It imposes upon the people of Porto Rico a government without their consent and taxation without representation. It dishonors the American people by repudiating a solemn pledge made in their behalf by the Commanding General of our Army, which the Porto Ricans welcomed to a peaceful and unresisted occupation of their land."

The same facts, the same reasons, that provoked your protest against the absurd constitutional system in force in Porto Rico; the same facts, the same reasons, but embittered to us by the woe of their experience, have aroused and stimulated our protest, which has its origin in the depth of our régime, without being connected with citizenship, for the citizenship of Porto Rico is neither a source of disparagement, nor sorrow, nor injury to us, but it is a humble and filial pleasure to us to be citizens of our own little and beautiful fatherland.

Another aspect of the question of the declaration of citizenship for Porto Ricans, collectively, is offered from the standpoint of insular revenue.

In virtue of section 4 of the present organic act in force in Porto Rico and the proclamation of the President of the United States of December 25, 1901, all duties and taxes collected in Porto Rico, including excise taxes and customs duties, are paid into the insular treasury.

Apart from the excise taxes and customs dues, the most important taxes collected in Porto Rico are those imposed, at the rate of 1 per cent, on the value of real and personal property. The total revenue paid into our treasury during the fiscal year 1912–13 amounted to $6,650,224.10, and in the same year all personal and real property was assessed at $179,272,023, so that the taxes on this amount of property, at the rate of 1 per cent, could only have produced the sum of approximately $1,800,000, and the balance paid into the treasury, amounting to upward of $4,800,000 was the proceeds principally accruing from excise taxes and customs dues.

At the present date and under the economical crisis that the country is traversing, the value of property having considerably decreased, especially such property as is related with the sugar-cane industry, the income from taxes on property will during coming years inevitably diminish.

With these data we formulate a question of high and complicated transcendency.

If the citizens of Porto Rico are collectively declared citizens of the United States, and are provided by Congress with a constitution, the island being under the flag of your Republic, will not our island, in fact and in law, be converted into an incorporated organized Territory of the United States? With the status of Territory, could we retain in our treasury the income from excise taxes and customs dues? Would not such revenues, like those of all other Territories, have to be paid into the Federal Treasury? Could Congress, within the impassible limits established by the Constitution of the United States, prevent Federal revenues collected in Porto Rico from being turned in to the United States Treasury and permit them to remain in the treasury of Porto Rico?

These are all questions that it is very difficult to answer satisfactorily on the spur of the moment, but after a careful study of this complex problem we are of the opinion that we should very probably lose with our excise taxes and customs dues, the two most abundant sources of Government revenue.

Should this occur our Government would only be able to rely on taxes collected on property and other small imposts that would hardly amount to more than a million dollars to cover a budget that even, with the greatest economy, could never be less than about $4,000,000. This situation could only be solved in the rigorous terms of a terrible dilemma for our country; we should either have to impose taxes at the rate of 4 or 5 per cent on the value of property or we should have to destroy or enormously decrease the service of institutions, public health, and other important branches of our progress; either descend into the exploitation of property or sink our people into the abyss of want and ignorance.

The supposition, the doubt, the mere possibility that this gravest of situations might arise should suspend the action of Congress in deciding to transform the citizens of Porto Rico, now capable of modestly developing their resources and their civilization, into citizens of the United States without their consent and with this glorious title find themselves overwhelmed by economical or moral disaster.

When we say moral disaster we merely refer to the case in which the people of Porto Rico should have to detain or retard their progress, due to the scarcity of government resources to carry them on, but another higher and more delicate problem, likewise of a moral character, is offered to your contemplation as a body of select men born and bred in the superiority of a national environment so pure and clear as that of your democratic Republic.

There are things and ideas in the life of nations, inapprehensible and fugitive, that escape the artificial action of laws when those laws are not the outcome of the remote and tardy action of time, of history, and the fitness of all social elements.

You can surely, by a law of your Congress, decree that all Porto Rican citizens shall be citizens of the United States; you possess political power to do so, but have you peradventure the natural, real, gentilitious, creative power of instantly converting a Porto Rican into an American, not precisely an American born in your country, but a real American citizen, intimately and essentially amalgamated with you in your origin, in your historic evolution, in your language, in your struggles, in your destinies, in all that vast psychology determining your national spirit?

We, Porto Ricans, Spanish-Americans, of Latin soul, imaginative, high-strung, ardorous by reason of the sun of our climate and by the blood in our veins, separated from you by over 400 years and by more than 400 leagues, with a different historic process, diverse language, different customs—could we rapidly, under the sudden impulse of a law, even though ourselves desiring it with an intense and firm will, could we convert ourselves into American citizens, in that spiritual sense that the notion of citizenship requires, and feel, think, wish, and speak as you do, and have with you that solidary of life, of memory, of hope, of ideals, in your long, concurrent, and continuous efforts toward the national and international aims of your great and glorious Republic?

We possess all these qualities to make us good citizens of our country. You yourselves recognize it and proclaim it from the high places of your Congress.

In all sincerity we say to you that we revere your noble citizenship, a citizenship that involves the divine attribute, the grandeur of being the first fatherland to found liberty in America; but we likewise say to you with equal sincerity that we are satisfied with our own well-beloved Porto Rican citizenship and proud to have been born and to be brethren in our mother island.

And so great is our love for our own citizenship, our own fatherland, that, in conclusion, we must make use of a hyperbole to express the earnestness of our sentiment. We, like all Porto Ricans, are believers in the existence of God and of a perpetual superhuman life; but were there a citizenship of heaven, with a right to eternal happiness, and it were offered us in exchange for our own, we would vacillate to accept it and should under no circumstances accept it until after death.

JOSÉ DE DIEGO,
Speaker of the House of Delegates of Porto Rico.

Mr. ASHURST. I have received and now present a number of telegrams from various citizens of Arizona, protesting against the elimination of the item of $50,000 in the Agricultural appropriation bill for the purpose of carrying into effect the McLean migratory bird law. The telegrams relate to one subject, and I ask that they be incorporated in the RECORD and then referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

There being no objection, the telegrams were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PHOENIX, ARIZ., April 14, 1914.

HON. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Washington, D. C.:

The McLean law, for enforcement of which no appropriation has been made by Congress, is, in my opinion, a measure essential to preservation of migratory birds, especially in Western States. Any influence you can exert to have the $50,000 enforcement appropriation restored will be sincerely appreciated.

PHOENIX, ARIZ., April 14, 1914.

HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The action of the Senate committee in cutting out the appropriation to enforce the McLean law is a calamity. We look to you to save the situation for the agricultural interests of this State. One hundred thousand dollars must be appropriated to enforce the Federal migratory-bird law, in order that we may not lose the effects of the good work already accomplished. Is there anything to be done here to insure desired results? Please advise.

FRANK W. ROGERS,
State Game Warden.

PHOENIX, ARIZ., April 14, 1914.

HENRY F. ASHURST,
Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Am in full sympathy with the beneficent provisions of the McLean law. I believe $100,000 should be appropriated for its enforcement.

MULFORD WINSOR.

PHOENIX, ARIZ., April 14, 1914.

HENRY F. ASHURST,
Senate, Washington, D. C.:

I fully indorse the State game warden's message to you of this date. Appropriation to enforce the McLean law should not only be restored, but it should be made $100,000.

GEORGE PURDY BULLARD,
Attorney General.

PHOENIX, ARIZ., April 14, 1914.

HENRY F. ASHURST,
Senate, Washington, D. C.:

I am in full accord with the spirit of State Game Warden Rogers's night letter to you of this date. I think that $100,000 should be appropriated to enforce the McLean law, which I believe to be of great benefit.

REESE M. LING,
Democratic National Committeeman.

PHOENIX, ARIZ., April 14, 1914.

HENRY F. ASHURST,
Senate, Washington, D. C.:

I believe the appropriation should be restored for enforcing the McLean migratory-bird law.

H. A. DAVIS, State Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan presented a petition of the State legislative board of the Order of Railway Conductors, of Bay City, Mich., and a petition of Local Order No. 286, Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, of Saginaw, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Clayton and Mason, in the State of Michigan, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating beverages, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of Printing Pressmen's Local Union No. 2, of Detroit, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation to make lawful certain agreements between employees and laborers, and persons engaged in agriculture or horticulture, and to limit the issuing of injunctions in certain cases, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LOCATION OF RESERVE BANKS.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I present a memorial from the Menominee Commercial Club. It is very brief, and I ask that it be read for the information of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and it will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

MENOMINEE COMMERCIAL CLUB,
Menominee, Mich., April 10, 1914.

Whereas the reserve bank organization committee has seen fit to place the upper peninsula of Michigan in the Minneapolis district; and
Whereas the upper peninsula of Michigan has very little direct business relations with Minneapolis; and
Whereas the mail and express service is direct with Chicago and indirect with Minneapolis: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Commercial Club of Menominee, Mich., strongly protests against the placing of the upper peninsula of Michigan in the Minneapolis district, as it is not in conformity with the law which states "the districts shall be apportioned with due regard to the convenience and customary course of business"; and be it further

Resolved, That the Commercial Club of Menominee, Mich., petitions the Federal Reserve Board to attach the upper peninsula of Michigan to the seventh district with Chicago as the center.

LOREN S. PRESCOTT, President.
GEORGE P. CHAMBERS, Secretary.

By order of the board of directors.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I merely desire to say that all the banks of the upper peninsula of Michigan, which constitutes that part of our State lying north of the Strait of Mackinaw, have protested against being assigned to the Minneapolis district. The argument made is substantially such as the Commercial Club of Menominee has made in this memorial. I do not presume it is necessary to present the individual protests of these banks at this time, but I desire to give emphasis to their very strong objection to the plan which has been evolved.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I desire to request the reading of the following protest from the Omaha and South Omaha Clearing House on the subject of the location of the reserve bank for the tenth district and the establishment of the bounds thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

OMAHA CLEARING HOUSE ASSOCIATION,
Omaha, Nebr.

The national banks of Omaha and South Omaha have served the national banks of Nebraska and Wyoming as reserve agents in an acceptable manner for many years. Their preference for Omaha as a Federal reserve city is expressed by their votes filed with the organization committee, and in our own and their behalf as so recorded, we respectfully protest against the inclusion of those States in the Kansas City district, for the following reasons:

It is against the wishes of the people of the two States;

It is contrary to the long-established channels of trade and commerce;

It is a serious interference with the business interests of those States; and

It is in direct opposition to the language and intent of the Federal reserve act.

The language of the Federal reserve act is as follows:

"The districts shall be apportioned with due regard to the convenience and customary course of business."

In the States named the flow of exchange and the trend of trade and commerce are to the east, not to the south, and these facts were clearly shown at the hearing before the organization committee at Lincoln.

At that hearing the committee frequently stated it did not desire to have testimony offered other than that bearing on the flow of exchange, the trend of trade and commerce, and the common point at which the business of the territory centered. The chairman of the committee asserted repeatedly that the law was mandatory by which the committee was controlled, and the committee simply desired to obtain as accurate information as possible on the points referred to.

The arrangement as made will deprive the business interests of those States of the service and benefits the currency law was intended to give them.

We submit that in the apportionment of our territory neither the expressed views of the committee nor the plain provisions of the law were complied with.

We therefore most earnestly ask for a review of the decision of the organization committee by the Federal Reserve Board, and unless after that review Omaha be made a reserve city we respectfully request that in order to conform to the requirements of the Federal reserve act the States of Nebraska and Wyoming be transferred from the Kansas City district to that of Chicago, where our business naturally goes and where our interests will be effectively served.

OMAHA CLEARING HOUSE ASSOCIATION,
J. C. FRENCH, President.

Attest:

WILLIAM B. HUGHES, Secretary.

I hereby certify that at a meeting of the Omaha Clearing House Association, held on Wednesday, April 8, 1914, at which all members were present, the above protest was unanimously adopted.

WILLIAM B. HUGHES,
Secretary Omaha Clearing House Association.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PANAMA CANAL TOLLS.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I received a letter some time ago from Hon. Timothy E. Howard, a very distinguished lawyer of Indiana, who served as judge of the supreme court for years and for a long time has been professor of law in the great Catholic University of Notre Dame. The letter was of such interest that I asked his permission to have it inserted in the RECORD, and I now have his consent. With the permission of the Senate I will read the letter myself, as it is written in longhand and I am more familiar with his handwriting than the reading clerk.

SOUTH BEND, IND., March 17, 1914.

Hon. JOHN W. KERN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I want you to know that all Indiana people are not in favor of the Panama tolls. I myself have no particular love for the English Government, though I acknowledge very much of great and good in the English people. But that Government has been our enemy from the beginning—trying to crush us in the Revolution, flouting our nationality in 1812, and covertly planning our disunion in 1861. The plea of "Anglo-Saxonism" has not an iota of sincerity. They know we are not Anglo-Saxons, but simply Caucasians—more Irish, indeed, than English, as our history and the character of the American people shows. Still I am heartily in favor of the repeal of the ill-advised toll provision of the Panama act. It is sufficient that our honor as a Nation requires it. We should respect our solemn treaties, as we should expect other nations to do with us. For my part I am ashamed that we should have attempted by an act of Congress to violate our sacred pledge. Treaties should be amended or abrogated only by mutual act of those who made them, not by the selfish, inconsiderate, or unfriendly act of one of the parties. But, more than this, even though our sacred word of honor were not in question, yet the toll exemption in favor of coast vessels is utterly indefensible. It is but a species of that ocean subsidy which Americans, particularly Democrats, detest as an inequitable favoritism—the building up of another monopoly. Of course I am grieved, and have at all times been, that an inconsiderate indorsement of the toll favoritism should have been made at Baltimore. I say inconsiderate, for the people have not considered that matter. The delegates had received no instructions for such action, and it was but foisted upon them by the interests while the minds of the delegates were intent upon the important measures for which the people had in fact commissioned them. Here it is a question of honor, of national welfare, and of the spirit of true democracy; let us act right now, whatever mistakes have been made. I am therefore most heartily in favor of your proposed action.

Sincerely, yours, T. E. HOWARD.

While I am on my feet, Mr. President, I wish to say that some of us, particularly from the Central West, have observed recently with some interest the columns of interviews from our section published in the Washington Post indicating a great outburst of popular sentiment against the administration's action on the tolls question. As to whether it was a spontaneous outburst of public sentiment or whether it was in a degree manufactured by some one, some light has been thrown on this mooted question by a letter which I received a few days ago from the editor of a Democratic paper in Indiana, which, with the permission of the Senate, I will read:

ELKHART PROGRESSIVE DEMOCRAT,
Elkhart, Ind., April 10, 1914.

Hon. JOHN W. KERN,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am inclosing a telegram received by me, or rather delivered to me to-day, from the Cincinnati Enquirer. You are a "reformed" newspaper man yourself and will appreciate the tricks of the newspaper game. I am with the administration on all his official acts up to date, and our newspaper, the Elkhart Morning Progressive Democrat, is giving him and his friends in Congress its hearty support. John R. McLean, with his newspapers, is trying to take an undue advantage in serving big business. You will note he does not call for interviews with leading manufacturers on the question of free tolls, but invites garbled and misleading statements. I hope this telegram will be of use to you when the fight comes up in the Senate. You may be sure the same query went out to hundreds of newspaper men all over the State, and all over several States, for that matter.

As a Wilson-Bryan adherent and as a friend of yours, I desire to enter a protest against the tactics being employed by the Shipping Trust to defeat the will of the people.

Assuring you, etc., I remain,
Yours, truly, W. C. B. HARRISON.

The telegram inclosed is as follows:

[Telegram.]

CINCINNATI, OHIO, April 10, 1914.

SOME RELIABLE NEWSPAPER MAN,
Elkhart, Ind.:

Please file early Friday evening 300 words showing unfavorable sentiment your section toward President Wilson's stand on Panama Canal tolls. Interview big business men and get them to say something hot.

ENQUIRER.

It is probably not necessary to say in this presence that the Cincinnati Enquirer is owned and controlled by Mr. John R. McLean, who also owns and controls the Washington Post, a gentleman whom I have known for many years and for whom I have a warm personal regard. I think, however, it is due the Senate and due the public that they should know something of the methods through which these interviews are procured and out of which this great so-called public sentiment is manufactured.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, as supplementing the remarks of the Senator from Indiana, I want to suggest that when the Middle West reads the evidence given yesterday by Prof. Johnson, in which he so cordially accepts the suggestion as to the imposition of tolls upon canals connecting the Great Lakes, there will be a protest here, and there will be no question about its being spontaneous.

Mr. OWEN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,000 for an assistant superintendent, office of Superintendent State, War, and Navy Department Building, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to the Loyal Creek Indians and freedmen named in articles 3 and 4 of the treaty with the Loyal Creek Nation of Indians of June 14, 1866, the sum of $600,000 etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRYAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7967) to amend the act approved June 25, 1910, authorizing a postal savings system, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

THE ECONOMIC VALUE OF MAN.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I send to the desk an article on "The economic value of man," prepared by Dr. Chauncey Rea Burr, of Portland, Me., who was formerly an assistant surgeon in the United States Navy. The Senate has from time to time authorized the printing of documents relating to the subject of workmen's compensation. The particular phase of the matter with which Dr. Burr deals has not been covered by any of those publications. Dr. Burr has gone into the matter in great detail, his article being, I think, of very great value upon the subject of fixing schedules of compensation in these various workmen's compensation laws, and it is of particular value to the Senate and to the House just now, in view of the fact that there are pending bills with reference to compensation of employees for injuries received upon railroads and also with reference to the compensation of Government employees. I desire to have the article printed as a public document, and I ask that it may be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That action will be taken, in the absence of objection.

THE TOLLS QUESTION.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I present an editorial by Secretary of State Bryan printed in the Commoner upon the tolls question. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

In the April number of the Commoner, which goes to press to-day, the leading editorial, signed by Secretary of State William J. Bryan, is on "The tolls question," and is as follows:

"THE TOLLS QUESTION.

"The House of Representatives responded to the President's appeal and passed the Sims bill repealing the free-tolls measure. As the details of the vote will be found on another page, it is sufficient for the present purpose to say that the vote on the repeal bill stood 247 for, 162 against, giving to the President's recommendations a majority of 85. An analysis of the vote reveals the fact that 220 Democrats voted for the repeal and only 52 against, showing that the President's position was sustained among the Democrats by a vote of more than 4 to 1. The Republican vote on the proposition stood 93 against and 23 for, or a little more than 4 to 1 against the President. The Progressive vote stood 17 against the repeal and 3 for, or a little over 5 to 1 against the President. As there are 432 votes in the House, the President secured a clear majority of the entire House in favor of the stand he has taken.

"The fight was a bitter one, and a number of the Democratic leaders spoke, worked, and voted against the repeal of the tolls measure. As the opponents of repeal have dragged into the discussion much that can not fairly be regarded as legitimate argument, the Commoner begs to call the attention of its readers to the facts in the case.

"GAG RULE.

"First, as to the charge of 'gag rule.' The Committee on Rules reported a rule allowing 20 hours for debate; none of the friends of free tolls asked for more time than that before the rule was reported, but during the discussion of the rule the charge was made that the President's supporters were attempting to cut off debate and force the measure through under a gag rule.

"What are the facts? When the subject first came up the opponents of the repeal measure asked for 8 hours, and it was granted them. They then asked that the time be extended to 15 hours, and this was granted. Later they asked that the time be made 20 hours, and this was granted. The charge that the time was unduly limited can not fairly come from the friends of free tolls, for when the free-tolls measure was under consideration in 1912 the debate on it occupied less than 3 hours. It will be seen, therefore, that seven times as much time was given for the discussion of the repeal measure as was given for the discussion of the original measure giving free tolls to coastwise vessels. When it is remembered that four-fifths of the Democrats favored the repeal, while a majority of the Democrats opposed the free-tolls measure, it will be seen that the friends of the repeal measure were exceedingly liberal in the allowance of time, as compared with the friends of the original free-tolls measure. In the face of these facts one must be very biased in his opinion to accuse the President's friends of an attempt to adopt a gag rule or to unduly limit debate.

"THE PLATFORM PLEDGE.

"In the discussion of the repeal measure it was impossible to confine its opponents to a discussion of the merits of the question. They stoutly contended that they were standing upon the platform adopted at Baltimore and assumed to themselves a superior sort of virtue, because of the sanctity with which they invested this particular plank of the platform. The readers of the Commoner have long since learned to regard a platform pledge as binding and they are entitled to know the grounds upon which the Democrats of Congress acted in repealing a measure indorsed by the platform.

"There are three facts to be considered, facts which the friends of free tolls have refused to discuss. First, that there was another plank in the platform, or rather another clause, which was practically a part of the same plank which contained the free-tolls declaration. This clause had to do with the encouragement of the merchant marine, and reads:

"'We believe in fostering, by constitutional regulation of commerce, the growth of a merchant marine which shall develop and strengthen the commercial ties which bind us to our sister Republics of the south, but without imposing additional burdens upon the people and without bounties or subsidies from the Public Treasury.'

"The merchant marine includes all the ships belonging to American citizens, and it will be seen that the Democratic Party expressed a deep interest in the upbuilding of the merchant marine, and yet, notwithstanding the importance of the subject and the anxious concern felt by the party for the rehabilitation of the merchant marine, it specifically declared against bounties and subsidies as a means of aiding the merchant marine. The action of the free-tolls Democrats in ignoring this plank is incomprehensible, because its language is clear and specific and it reiterates a doctrine for which the Democratic Party has stood from time immemorial. This opposition to bounties and subsidies, whether granted openly and directly or whether granted secretly and indirectly as they are through a protective tariff, is a fundamental article of Democratic faith.

"But while the friends of free tolls are able to overlook the plank above quoted, with its clear and ringing declaration against subsidies and bounties, they regard as sacred the following lines in which the party indorsed free tolls:

"'We favor the exemption from toll of American ships engaged in coastwise trade passing through the canal.'

"Why do these few words stand out so brightly before the advocates of free tolls? And why are they unable to see or remember the words condemning bounties and subsidies? What opiate does the little plank contain that it can make those who accept it oblivious of the larger plank? By what rule of construction can the small plank be made binding and the large one be ignored?

"The secret of the strange power exerted by the little plank is to be found in the fact that it carefully conceals the means by which it is to be carried out. Had the word 'subsidy' or 'bounty' been inserted in this plank it could not have secured the indorsement of the convention, because the contradiction between this plank and the larger plank would have been immediately apparent. If the same care had been used in the drawing of this plank that was used in the drawing of the plank on the merchant marine it would have read as follows:

"'We favor the exemption from toll of American ships engaged in coastwise trade passing through the canal, but without imposing additional burdens upon the people and without bounties or subsidies from the Public Treasury.'

"Second. But even if the platform had not contained within itself a complete refutation of the position taken by the advocates of free tolls, the President would have been justified in the position that he took by the changed conditions which confronted him. A platform is a pledge and is as binding upon an official as the command of a military officer is upon a subordinate—the statement can not be made stronger. But the subordinate officer is sometimes compelled to act upon his judgment where a change of which the commanding officer is not aware has taken place in conditions. It is not only the right of the subordinate to judge the situation for himself where conditions have changed since the order was given, but it is his duty to do so. It is true that he risks his position if he miscalculates the condition and disobeys when he should obey, but he takes a similar risk if he is not willing to assume responsibility for a change of plan where conditions compel the change. If the disobedience of the subordinate officer is due to cowardice or to the substitution of a selfish for a patriotic interest he is condemned; but he is likewise to be condemned if, either from cowardice or because of a selfish interest, he permits the interest of his country to be jeopardized rather than live up to the responsibilities which his position imposes upon him. In the case under consideration, the President takes the responsibility for an official act which he regards as necessary to his country's welfare, and the people must decide whether or not he is justified; and those who refuse to act with him also assume responsibility, and they, too, must abide the judgment of the public.

"Such a change has taken place since the Baltimore platform was adopted. Had the Democrats in convention assembled been confronted by the condition which now exists, and had they known what those now know who voted for repeal, no such plank would ever have been placed in the platform. The convention's attention was not even brought to the fact that a majority of the Democrats in the House had voted against the free-tolls measure, and that it had, in fact, been passed by a combination of a minority of the Democrats and a majority of the Republicans. The platform plank which is now being worshiped as if it were the only plank in the platform was in reality a rebuke to the Democrats in Congress, when the convention had reason to suppose that it was indorsing the action of a majority of the Democrats when it indorsed the action of Congress. It was more than that; it was, in fact, though not upon its face, an indorsement of the doctrine of subsidy which the party had taken pains to denounce in the same platform.

"Third. Moreover, this plank of the platform deals with an international question and must be accepted with the understanding that we act jointly with other nations in international affairs. Even if the plank had not been contradicted by another plank in the platform; even if it had not concealed a subsidy policy repugnant to Democratic principle and history; even if it had not rebuked the Democrats in Congress; even if conditions had not changed, still dealing with an international question it should be taken as the expression of a wish rather than as the expression of a determination, for no nation can afford to purchase a small advantage in the face of a universal protest. If a nation desires to array itself against the world, it should be sure that the thing which it is to gain is worth what it costs.

"The President, knowing that every commercial nation except our own construes the treaty as a pledge of equal treatment, would have been recreant to his trust had he failed to point out to the American people that our diplomatic relations would be seriously disturbed by the carrying out of the free-tolls policy.

"THE 'SURRENDER TO ENGLAND.'

"The friends of free tolls gave conclusive proof that they were conscious of the weakness of their position when, in opposing the repeal of free tolls, they attempted to appeal to prejudice rather than to reason. They charged with a vehemence that increased as the case grew more desperate that the President was 'surrendering to England.'

"What has Great Britain done to justify the accusation that she is trying to dictate to this country? She has simply called attention to the terms of the treaty and asked for arbitration of the question of construction, in case this Government differs from the British Government in the construction to be placed upon the language. The very men who are so insistent upon construing the treaty to permit free tolls delayed for months the ratification of the treaty with Great Britain because of their opposition to any arbitration of the subject. In other words, they construed the treaty to permit discrimination and then objected to allowing any international court to express an opinion upon the subject. If, as a matter of fact, the treaty grants the rights which Great Britain claimed, is it a 'surrender to Great Britain' for our Nation to repeal a law that raised that question? The repeal of the law can not be construed to be a construction of the treaty. It is simply a refusal on the part of the United States to raise that question in that way. In the controversy over the Welland Canal Canada withdrew a discrimination which she had made in favor of Canadian ships 'in order that no cause for friction with the United States authorities in regard to the matter should exist.'

"Why can not the United States withdraw a discrimination for the same reason? When the treaty involved was before the Senate for ratification an attempt was made to so amend it as to permit a discrimination in favor of coastwise vessels, but it was voted down by a decided majority. With this record to support them, is it strange that foreign nations question our right to make an exception in favor of American vessels?

"Before passing from this branch of the subject it is worth while to remember that this is not the first time Democratic legislation in behalf of the people has been denounced as a 'surrender to England.' Every time our party has attempted to reduce the tariff we have been confronted with the charge that the lowering of the tariff would benefit England and that we were surrendering our markets to foreign manufacturers. This sham issue was raised by the beneficiaries of protection; they claimed to possess a superior patriotism, but every well-informed citizen knew that their real reason was not patriotic but selfish. They were growing fat through the taxation of the American people, and they attempted to appeal to prejudice merely to divert attention from the real issue. It is a fact, the significance of which will not be overlooked, that those who are using this 'surrender to England' slogan now are using it to secure the same sort of advantage that the protectionists secured. This time the benefit is to go into the pockets of the owners of vessels engaged in the coastwise trade, and knowing that they can not defend their position with Democratic arguments, the advocates of free tolls attempt to create a prejudice against the nation which entered into a treaty with us, and which happens, also, because of its large shipping interests, to be the country most interested in preventing discrimination. The 'surrender to England' argument is being used now just as it has been used in the past and for the benefit of the same selfish interests, but now that the people have secured tariff reduction they can no longer be frightened by this subterfuge.

"SUBSIDY OR NO SUBSIDY.

"When we come to consider the repeal measure upon its merits there are just two questions to be decided:

"First, is it desirable for the Democratic Party to abandon its historic position and become the advocate of subsidies and bounties; and, second, if it is desirable, what is the Democratic Party willing to sacrifice in international prestige and in world influence in order to secure the advantage which these subsidies promise to a few people?

"No party can afford to adopt a principle without considering how far the principle extends or what its adoption involves. In the past the Democratic Party has been able to consistently oppose every form of governmental favor, because it has stood for equal rights to all and special privilege to none. It has not only opposed the bounty when given directly, but it has with equal earnestness opposed the bounty given indirectly through a protective tariff. It has denounced as unconstitutional the voting of the people's money into the pockets of the few who can secure the ear of the legislator. Having grounded itself upon a principle, it could follow that principle wherever it applied, and by its steadfastness to that principle it has converted a nation. Suppose it now turns its back upon that principle and embarks upon the subsidizing of a few vessels, where can it draw the line? Will not the precedent once established make it difficult for the party to oppose each new application of the principle which will be demanded? If we are to give bounties to coastwise vessels for one reason, we will be asked to give bounties to some other corporations for reasons equally as good, and the party's power to protect the Public Treasury will be paralyzed.

"It must be remembered, too, that our coastwise vessels are largely controlled by a monopoly. The Alexander report on this subject, published this year, says:

"'With the exception of the Pacific coast trade proper, it was shown that the line traffic is handled by comparatively few companies, and that these are largely controlled by railroads and shipping consolidations. Thus, in the entire Atlantic and Gulf coastwise trade (exclusive of all inland waterway and purely local carriers), 28 lines, representing 235 steamers of 549,821 gross tons, furnish the line service. Of this number of lines 10 are railroad owned and represent 128 steamers of 340,084 gross tons, or 54.5 per cent of the total number of steamers in the trade and 61.9 per cent of the tonnage. Seven lines, operating 71 steamers of 175,971 gross tons in the coastwise trade, belong to the Eastern Steamship Corporation and the Atlantic, Gulf & West Indies Steamship Lines, and represent in the aggregate nearly 30 per cent of the total number of steamers and 32 per cent of the tonnage. Combining the two interests, it appears that the railroads and two Atlantic coast shipping consolidations control nearly 85 per cent of the steamers and nearly 94 per cent of the gross tonnage engaged in the entire Atlantic and Gulf coastwise trade. Attention may be called again to the fact that very few of the routes between any two ports on the entire Atlantic and Gulf coasts are served by more than one line (pp. 369–370, 382, 383).'

"The law prohibits the use of the canal by vessels when owned by railroads with which the vessels would compete, but the report shows how these vessel owners have dealt with the public in the past.

"The advocates of free tolls argue that the subsidies voted to ships in the coastwise trade will come back to the public through decreased freight rates on the transcontinental lines. This is the same old protectionist argument. This reduction is improbable, because the water rate is so much below the freight rate that the reduction of $1.25 a ton subtracted from the water rate will not compel a reduction as a matter of fact in the transcontinental rates. But even if it could be shown that free tolls would reduce transcontinental rates, it should be remembered that these rates, if excessive, can be reduced by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Why should we disturb our foreign relations in order to do at the Isthmus what we can do directly by regulation?

"When the student of this subject understands that the Republican Party is the friend of bounties and that the Democratic Party is the inveterate foe of bounties, he will understand why four-fifths of the Republicans in Congress voted against the repeal of the bounties, while four-fifths of the Democrats in Congress joined the President in favoring the repeal of the law granting bounties.

"THE PRESIDENT'S APPEAL.

"The President's right to expect the support of Congress when he deals with foreign nations is so strongly presented in Congressman PALMER'S speech—which appears on another page—that the subject need not be elaborated here. The Chief Executive speaks for the Nation in international affairs, and it is only fair to assume that he speaks advisedly when he declares that intercourse with other nations is seriously embarrassed by the free-tolls law, which he seeks to repeal. The Democrats and Republicans who responded to his appeal will find it easy to defend their course—the burden of proof will be on those of either party who rejected his advice.

"THE UNITED STATES AS A WORLD POWER.

"Even if the Democratic Party were willing to be guilty of apostacy to its principles; even if it were convinced that the Republicans had been right in favoring subsidies and the Democratic Party wrong in opposing them, how much would it be willing to pay in national prestige and in world influence for the privilege of following at the tail end of the Republican procession on this subject? We occupy to-day a proud position among the nations; we are the foremost advocate of peace and arbitration; we are becoming more and more a moral factor throughout the world. Can we afford to surrender this position? Can we afford to belittle the great enterprise which has reached its consummation at the Isthmus?

"If our Nation desires to be measured by intellectual and ethical standards, how unworthy to brag of our strength and to threaten to use that strength! 'We are ready to fight' does not arouse the enthusiasm now that it did a few centuries ago. Brute force is not the level upon which this Nation settles its controversies to-day; the question is not what we can do, but what we ought to do.

"The path of history is strewn with the wreck of nations that boasted that they were all-powerful; they went down under Jehovah's inexorable law, and the 'God who ruled over Babylon is the God who is ruling yet.' This question must be decided on moral principles and not by the counting of our regiments and battleships. What shall it profit a nation if it conquers the whole world and loses its faith in the doctrine that 'righteousness exalteth a nation!'"

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On April 14, 1914:

S. 474 An act to authorize the issuance of unqualified patents to public lands in certain cases.

On April 15, 1914:

S. 3843. An act for the relief of Bellevadorah Steele.

CARIBOU NATIONAL FOREST RESERVE.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (S. 1739) to reserve certain lands and incorporate the same and make them a part of the Caribou National Forest Reserve returned from the House of Representatives in compliance with the request of the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. I move to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. I move that the bill be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. BRYAN. I ask unanimous consent that the consideration of the calendar be taken up where we left off on yesterday and that we consider the bills from that point on to the end, so far as the time will permit.

The VICE PRESIDENT Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

DEPOSIT OF POSTAL FUNDS.

The bill (H. R. 7967) to amend the act approved June 25, 1910, authorizing a postal savings system was announced as first in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] to the amendment reported by the committee, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The amendment proposed by Mr. GALLINGER to the amendment reported by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads is, on page 1, line 9, after the word "exceed," to strike out the sum "$2,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$1,000."

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I hope the amendment to the committee amendment will not prevail. Since the bill was under consideration on yesterday I have taken occasion to examine the hearings before the House Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and I have also refreshed my mind as to the hearings before the Senate committee. The House of Representatives were of the opinion that there ought to be no limit to postal savings deposits. That seemed an unsafe proposition to the Senate committee; but there does not seem to be any opposition from the banks, so far as I have been able to ascertain, to allowing the limit to be as high as $2,000.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I ask the Senator from Florida a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Can the Senator inform us what the condition of the postal savings account in the department is in comparison with what it was six months ago?

Mr. BRYAN. I can not do so, Mr. President. I have only the report, which is brought down to June 30, 1913. I can, however, give the Senator from Michigan an idea of the growth of the system.

On June 30, 1911, at the end of the first six months of operation under the law, there were 11,918 depositors, with $677,000 to their credit; on December 30, 1911, there were 162,000 depositors, with $10,000,000 to their credit—I am speaking only in round numbers—on June 30, 1912, there were 243,000 depositors, with $20,000,000 to their credit; on December 31, 1912, there were 302,000 depositors, with $28,000,000 to their credit; and on June 30, 1913, which is the latest date covered, there were 331,000 depositors, with $33,818,000 to their credit.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The reason I ask the question, Mr. President, is that I have learned that quite recently—during the last month, perhaps—there has been a great falling off, or, in other words, large withdrawals from the postal savings deposits.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I have an indistinct recollection that the Third Assistant Postmaster General said at the time he was before the committee that there were $40,000,000 of deposits to the credit of depositors at that time.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is my understanding; but I am informed that that $40,000,000 now has been greatly reduced; that for some reason or other there have been withdrawals from the postal savings banks of a large amount of this money. I am wondering if the Senator from Florida can tell us whether or not that is the fact.

Mr. BRYAN. No; I have not been informed as to that. How recently has the Senator heard that that was the fact?

Mr. TOWNSEND. That came to my knowledge this morning. I have not had time to submit a resolution, but I thought I should like to have one submitted to the Senate asking for information in reference to the amount of postal savings deposits.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as I suggested on yesterday, I am not going to make any factious opposition to the bill as reported by the committee of the Senate. The Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] suggests that no protest has come from any of the banks against the Senate provision that the amount shall be enlarged from $500 to $2,000. That may be so. I find that the protests which came to me from some of the banks in my own State were aimed at the House bill, which provided that the amount deposited might be unlimited. I am still of the opinion, however, Mr. President, that the $2,000 limit is too high. This bill, I assume, will go to conference, and there it can be adjusted as between the unlimited amount and the amount fixed in the bill. For myself, I will be very glad to have the amount reduced from $2,000 to $1,000; but if the conferees, in their wisdom, should think that too low, under the rules of conference committees they can enlarge it.

I am apprehensive, Mr. President, in view of the bill coming from the House in the shape it did, that there is a purpose in the minds of some people to organize postal savings banks on a basis that will threaten the very existence, perhaps, of our savings banks in New England and in other parts of the country. We have nurtured those banks and done everything possible to make them a means of conserving the small earnings of people in our mills, in our workshops, and on our farms; so that to-day the $82,000,000, as I remember, in the savings banks of New Hampshire represent the thrift and the savings of almost one-half of her population, men, women, and children, the average deposit being a little over $400.

Senators will appreciate the fact that those of us who believe in that form of banking and in those methods of conserving the earnings of the poor people of our communities naturally look with some degree of alarm upon any movement that tends to put the Government in the banking business to an extent that may threaten the prosperity, if not the very existence, of our savings-bank system.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRYAN. I will call to the attention of the Senator a statement made to me by the Third Assistant Postmaster General, who said that 62 per cent in number of the postal savings-bank deposits are by foreigners, and that 75 per cent of the amount deposited belongs to foreigners; in other words, the department takes the position that this system so far, instead of being a detriment to the banks, has been an advantage; that it has brought out of hiding money which would not have been placed in the banks themselves, and by this method, the Government being responsible for the deposits, it is able to place in the banks of the different localities money which otherwise would be kept in hiding. It is their opinion that if the amount is increased it will bring more money out of hiding.

I do not think there is any disposition upon the part of the Post Office Department to insist that the amount of deposits be unlimited. I think they have come to realize that the Senate committee acted wisely in refusing to allow unlimited deposits.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have no knowledge as to the proportion of the depositors who are foreigners, but I apprehend that what the Senator says is substantially correct. There is no doubt that certain immigrants coming from southern Europe who are not acquainted with the system of banking in this country but are acquainted with the postal savings system in their own country prefer that system to our savings-bank system. But what I wanted to emphasize was the fact that if the Government goes into this matter on a large scale, not only will that money be deposited to a greater extent in the postal savings banks, but in the event of one of the senseless scares that get possession of the public mind occasionally, resulting in the so-called runs on banks which nine times out of ten are without any foundation in fact, our people may be led to withdraw their deposits from the savings banks and invest them to a large extent in the postal savings banks on the ground that the Government being back of them they are absolutely safe.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator yield just for a moment?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like to ask the Senator in this connection, as he is thoroughly conversant with the savings-bank situation, if he knows what the average deposit of the individual depositor is in the savings banks of his own State, for instance?

Mr. GALLINGER. The average deposit, taking the six New England States, is $411.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Then this proposed legislation might perhaps result in inducing the average depositor to withdraw his entire deposit from the savings bank and deposit it in the postal savings banks.

Mr. GALLINGER. Undoubtedly it would operate in that way if there was a so-called run on any particular savings bank or the savings banks in general.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if, under the law as it stands, the same result might not follow and if it is not true that practically none of the deposits have been withdrawn from the savings banks?

Mr. GALLINGER. That is very likely true; but I am supposing something that may happen. I think we have a right to look a little into the future in matters of this kind and ask ourselves the question whether, in the event of some disturbance in our financial system and a growing feeling that our banks are not perhaps as safe as they ought to be, this very thing may not, and very likely will not, happen if we go into this matter wholesale, as it were? That does not apply to its full extent to the bill as the Senate committee has reported it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me further, we had in view avoiding any danger to the savings banks by providing that on deposits in excess of a thousand dollars there should be no interest paid. That was done to guard against that contingency.

Mr. GALLINGER. I feel that we are under obligations to the committee for that safeguard.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. As to runs upon the banks, we thought that the savings banks were practically all protected by the provisions under which they operate that no immediate demand can be made for the savings held by them and requiring 30 or 60 days' notice—in many cases 60 days—so that we did not suppose a little temporary excitement would possibly affect them. I merely want to say to the Senator that we thought about the subject, and tried to shape the bill in such a manner as to guard against money being kept in hiding and to bring it where it could be used without interfering with those institutions that conduct in a proper manner a savings-bank business.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as I said a moment ago, I personally, representing certain interests in a general way, feel under obligations to the committee for having placed in the bill the safeguards that they have. I will conclude now by saying that the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] having made the suggestion that he trusts the amendment I offered will not prevail, I take it for granted that the Senator's view in that matter will be indorsed by the Senate. The only added suggestion I wish to make is this, and I desire to address myself to the members of the committee.

When the bill goes to conference, as it doubtless will, or very likely will, the contested point will be as between an unlimited privilege of deposit and the limit of $2,000, so that the amount named in the pending bill as amended by the Senate committee may be greatly enlarged in conference. I desire to appeal to the Senator from Florida, and to my good friend the Senator from Georgia, if the bill passes in the form in which it is reported and is now under consideration, that they will exert a very strong effort to have the bill agreed to as it is passed by the Senate.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I feel like assuring the Senator that the Senate committee were firmly of the opinion that the amount should not be unlimited. We kept the bill in the committee for between two and three months. In view of the apparent position of Senators and of the Senate, I do not feel that we would be justified in yielding upon that point.

While I am on my feet I desire to state, for the information of the Senator from Michigan as to the amount on deposit and as to whether the amount has been reduced, that I am informed by the department that on January 31 there was $40,037,884 on deposit, and on February 28, which is the latest date covered by the official figures, there was $41,500,000 on deposit, so undoubtedly the rumor that reached the Senator is unfounded.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, I observe in the report of the committee that a good deal of stress is laid upon the position with reference to the bill of our citizens of foreign birth. The report says:

> The unanimous complaint of postmasters from the inception of the service has been that the present statutory limitations have made it impossible to accept vast sums of money that have been tendered to them, and it is shown by the files of the Post Office Department that depositors, especially those of foreign birth, frequently refuse to make deposits if the amounts tendered by them can not be accepted.

Then the report goes on to say:

> The experience of the service has shown that foreign-born citizens frequently accumulate several hundred dollars before they attempt to open an account, and it is a source of great disappointment to them when the Government will safeguard only a portion of their earnings.

I merely wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that I do not think our foreign-born citizens have any reason for complaint, because their native countries do not allow deposits as large as those permitted by the present law. In France the maximum deposit that can be made in the postal savings banks is $300, and in Italy I think it is $250, or about that. It seems to me, therefore, that our foreign-born citizens have no just ground for complaint against the law as it stands.

Mr. BRANDEGEE and Mr. CUMMINS addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut is recognized.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I have been called from the floor for the last five minutes, and I do not know what this matter is. I will ask what the calendar number is?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar number is 269.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Are we proceeding under Rule VIII now?

The VICE PRESIDENT. We are. By unanimous consent, we began at this point.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I do not wish to cut off any Senator who desires to discuss the matter under the five-minute rule, if the Senate wants to proceed without a vote this morning; but in the end, after what has been said about it, if anybody wants to say anything further, I shall object to final disposition of the matter this morning. I have had a great many communications and protests against this measure from home, and I am not prepared at this minute to discuss the matter. Therefore I shall object to any action being taken to-day.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I supported the postal savings-bank bill with great cordiality, because I thought it was a very useful measure for certain defined purposes, those being to draw into the channels of business, through Government action, money which otherwise would not reach those channels of business; money held by people who were unfamiliar with savings banks, or who had a distrust of them, and who therefore hoarded their money instead of placing it in such a way that it could be used when they did not themselves require it.

I am sure, however, that it was not the intention of Congress at that time to create the postal savings banks with a view of putting the Government into the savings-bank business and making it a competitor with the private organizations which have grown up all over this country, which certainly in many cases are not stock companies at all, but are run exclusively in the interest of the depositors, and which have worked with extraordinary success and with the very minimum of loss.

In my own State we have over $800,000,000 in the savings banks. The limit of deposit, including interest, is $1,600. I think the average deposit is about $382. I am speaking from memory. To do anything to disturb that great mass of capital which is now wisely invested, and which is promoting industry and business, is a very serious matter.

The postal savings bank was prevented from entering into competition with ordinary savings banks in two ways—by the low rate of interest, and by the limitation on the deposit. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] has just pointed out that the limitation on deposits abroad, where postal savings banks have been long in existence, is $300 in the case of France and $250 in the case of Italy. Our limitation is already beyond those. Now it is proposed, even under the wisely modified bill of the Senate committee, to raise the limitation to $2,000. That is much larger than the limitation placed on savings banks deposits in my own State to-day. The tendency of this legislation is to put the Government into the savings bank business in competition with the existing banks. The first limitation, which was designed to prevent that, is being removed by extending the limit of deposit. The next step will be to raise the interest rate.

The Senate committee has put in a very wise amendment, that after the first $1,000 there shall be no interest paid; but we have no assurance, of course, as to what the House will insist on or what the final form of the bill will be. I think we are entering on a field which was never contemplated by the original framers of the bill or by Congress when it passed the bill. I do not think Congress ever had the idea that by creating the postal savings banks it was going to set up rivals to the existing banks. I think the purpose was to supplement them.

Mr. GALLINGER. That was disclaimed during the debate.

Mr. LODGE. As the Senator from New Hampshire reminds me, that was specifically disclaimed during the debate. The purpose was to supplement the existing banks, to make a place for money which was not in the savings banks, and would not, either through ignorance or prejudice or fear, go to the savings banks, but would be intrusted to the Government.

Mr. President, I suppose it is very old-fashioned, but I am against putting the Government into business all the time, and I think we have gone far enough in the case of the postal savings banks. We have begun to build railroads, and now it is proposed that we shall go into the mining business. I think we should be extremely careful about this bill. It is a departure from the purpose of the Postal Savings Bank System, which was to supplement and not to destroy the existing system of savings banks, which has been long tested and which has worked extremely well.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. BRYAN. I desire to ask the Senator what is the rate of interest paid on savings deposits in New England.

Mr. LODGE. From 3 to 4 per cent. I think it is 3 per cent in Massachusetts at this time.

Mr. BRYAN. Of course, under this law it is 2 per cent on a thousand dollars.

Mr. LODGE. I understand that. I have already said that the limitation on interest was not removed.

Mr. BRYAN. Let me say to the Senator that under the law as it stands now 30 per cent of the deposits can be taken away from the locality. Under section 9 of the present law, and also under the Federal reserve act, all money deposited by the postal savings committee will be deposited in a member bank. Upon yesterday we agreed to offer an amendment, first, to allow the money to be deposited in banks, whether National or State, and whether members of a Federal reserve bank or not, and also to strike out of section 9 the permission now given to take 30 per cent of the money away from where it originated, so as to require all except the reserve of 5 per cent to remain in the locality.

It seems to us that so amended, instead of working an injury to the banks, this bill will be a benefit to them, because the interest is less. The depositors can not get interest upon the full amount deposited if the amount exceeds $1,000, and if money is withdrawn from a bank in a given locality and is placed with the postal savings bank it is immediately replaced in the bank from which the depositor withdrew it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think the amendments to which the Senator from Florida has just alluded are very wise. I am not particularly disturbed about changing the locality of the savings. I think we have made sufficient arrangements in the bank bill for violently moving money from one part of the country to another, and I think it is well in this bill to guard against that. I think the amendment of which the Senator spoke is a very wise one, but that is not the point that is troubling me. I think we ought to keep the postal savings bank within the lines for which it was intended, and not put the Government any further into the savings-bank business. Moreover, I think it is a good plan not to begin to amend these laws until we have tried them out a little more thoroughly than we have in this case.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, this law has been tested, and the system is an expense to the Government. It is being run at a loss. This is simply an amendment designed to make it self-sustaining.

It seems to me the postal savings bank, like any other bank, must have some money upon which interest is not paid. The other banks will get the money cheaper than they do now at 3 per cent. I do not see how they will be injured at all. The banks are able to use the confidence the Government has in them when there is a lack of confidence on the part of the people toward them.

This bill does not let the Government go into the banking business. The Government makes no loans to individuals. The Government loans no money. The Government simply takes money that it thinks is hidden on account of fear of banks, on account of fear of loaning to individuals, that is out of circulation, and loans it to the banks, under the amendment offered here, at less interest than the banks pay on it now. The Government loans it at 2½ per cent. The banks usually pay 3 per cent. I am unable to understand how this can do anything else except benefit the banks, and through benefiting the banks benefit the public that borrows money from the banks.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I never said that this was putting the Government into the banking business. It is in that business already. I said it was putting it into the savings-bank business, which is a totally different thing.

Mr. SWANSON. The savings-bank business, as I understand, involves loaning money and buying securities. This system simply involves depositing in existing banks the money received.

Mr. LODGE. It all goes into the same channel eventually.

Mr. SWANSON. It goes into the same bank channel; so I do not see why it interferes with the existing banks.

Mr. LODGE. It all goes into business, and that is the good feature of it; but I repeat that the purpose of the postal savings-bank law was not to put the Government into the savings-bank business, but to enable us to get into the channels of business, through the Government postal savings bank, money which otherwise would be hoarded. That was the purpose of the law.

Mr. SWANSON. Does the Senator think the Government ought to continue to operate the Postal Savings Bank System at a great loss each year?

Mr. LODGE. The expenses of the Government do not seem to be very troublesome to anybody at the present time.

Mr. SWANSON. It ought to be self-sustaining, as far as possible.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator from Virginia states that during the last year, by borrowing money through the savings bank, the Government has lost. Does the Senator believe we can recoup that loss by borrowing more money?

Mr. SWANSON. Very easily. We accept a thousand dollars and pay interest on it. Under this amendment we can get $2,000 and loan $1,000 of it, on which no interest is paid.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes; but we have just been informed by other Senators discussing this question that that provision will keep down the deposits and that we will not get deposits above a thousand dollars unless we pay interest on them.

Mr. SWANSON. In some cases you will. Universally, you will not; but nobody can conduct a deposit business and loan money for about the same rate of interest he pays for it unless there is some money obtained upon which there is no interest paid. This was intended for the purpose of enabling the Government to make the system self-sustaining, and it is impossible to devise any other method of doing it.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia a question. Will the Senator from Virginia please state the amount of the loss to the Government during the past year in consequence of the operation of the Postal Savings Bank System?

Mr. SWANSON. The report of the Postmaster General states it. Of course, it is the contention of those who run the Postal Savings Bank System that the account is not accurately made; but the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW], who was on the committee that discussed the matter for a long time, ascertained and felt that it resulted in a great loss to the Government. There were some people who thought it ought not to be continued on account of the loss sustained by the Government, and who thought the amount ought to be unlimited so as to make sure that it would be self-sustaining.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think I shall have to decline to yield further.

Mr. SWANSON. I think the figures are found in the report of the Postmaster General.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

RADIUM-BEARING ORES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the special order, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 4405) to provide for and encourage the prospecting, mining, and treatment of radium-bearing ores in lands belonging to the United States, for the purpose of securing an adequate supply of radium for Government and other hospitals in the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, on yesterday I made the point of order——

Mr. BRYAN. Will the Senator permit me to offer, so that it may be printed and pending, an amendment to the bill we have just been considering?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, when this matter was laid before the Senate on yesterday I made the point of order that it was not in order to lay the bill before the Senate at the hour of 1 o'clock. The rules of the Senate as to the status of a bill—I should like to have order, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order. It is also a rule of the Senate that a point of order is not debatable.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I understand that. I asked the Chair yesterday whether he cared to hear me, and I understood him to say that he did.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In other words, the rules of the Senate are "more honored in the breach than the observance." The Chair is desirous of hearing the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The rules of the Senate are in some confusion respecting the status of a bill which has gone to the Calendar of Special Orders, but I think there can be no doubt under the rules that a bill so assigned does not come up automatically day after day at the same hour of the day at which it was originally set down for hearing. Rule X provides that—

Any subject may, by a vote of two-thirds of the Senators present, be made a special order; and when the time so fixed for its consideration arrives the presiding officer shall lay it before the Senate unless there be unfinished business of the preceding day—

I may stop at this point to say that under that provision of Rule X the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] asked to have the radium bill made the special order for Friday, the 10th day of this month, at 1 o'clock. The Senate so ordered; and at 1 o'clock, upon Friday, the 10th, the presiding officer, complying with the order of the Senate, laid the bill before the Senate, and its consideration was proceeded with until 2 o'clock, when the unfinished business was laid before the Senate. The rule proceeds:

And if it is not finally disposed of on that day it shall take its place on the Calendar of Special Orders in the order of time at which it was made special, unless it shall become by adjournment the unfinished business.

The latter part of the rule which I have just read clearly contemplates that when the bill which has been made the special order has not been disposed of on the day for which it was first assigned it shall go to the calendar under the head of special orders, and if there shall be more than one such bill upon the Calendar of Special Orders those bills shall be arranged upon the Special Order Calendar in the order of time at which they were originally made special, which means, as I understand it, that if the Senator from Montana had moved on Thursday that his bill be made the special order for Friday, and on Friday some one else had moved that another bill be made the special order for Saturday, neither of those bills having been disposed of upon either of those days, they would take their place upon the calendar in the order of the radium bill first and the second-named bill next.

But no provision is made in the rule respecting the time when these bills upon the Special Order Calendar shall be considered. The rule simply provides that they shall go upon the calendar in a certain order. Then the second paragraph of Rule X provides that—

When two or more special orders have been made for the same time, they shall have precedence according to the order in which they were severally assigned, and that order shall only be changed by direction of the Senate.

It seems to me that provision is perfectly plain, and it simply means that if it shall turn out that two or more bills have been assigned for a particular hour of a particular day they shall be taken up in the order of time at which the requests for their special consideration had been made.

Thus far in Rule X there is absolutely no provision as to when this Calendar of Special Orders shall be considered. That they may not be considered at 1 o'clock of each day is made perfectly apparent by Rule VIII, which provides that—

At the conclusion of the morning business for each day, unless upon motion the Senate shall at any time otherwise order, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the Calendar of Bills and Resolutions, and continue such consideration until 2 o'clock.

So under that rule of the Senate it is mandatory that at the conclusion of the routine morning business the Chair shall lay before the Senate the Calendar of Bills and Resolutions which are entered upon our calendar under the head of general orders, and it is further mandatory that the consideration of that Calendar of General Orders shall continue until 2 o'clock. Manifestly that could not be complied with if in the meantime a bill upon the Calendar of Special Orders should be laid before the Senate.

Then the rule continues—and bills and resolutions that are not objected to shall be taken up in their order, and each Senator shall be entitled to speak once and for five minutes only upon any question; and the objection may be interposed at any stage of the proceedings, but upon motion the Senate may continue such consideration—

I call particular attention to this—and this order shall commence immediately after the call for "concurrent and other resolutions"—

In other words, it shall commence at the conclusion of the routine morning business—and shall take precedence of the unfinished business and other special orders.

So in addition to the mandatory provision that the Calendar of General Orders shall be taken up and shall be considered until 2 o'clock we have the further provision in the rule that that consideration shall take precedence of the unfinished business and other special orders. In other words, the consideration of the calendar upon which we are now engaged under the rule must take precedence of any bill upon the Special Order Calendar.

Rule IX, which may reflect some light upon the subject, provides that—

Immediately after the consideration of cases not objected to upon the calendar is completed, and not later than 2 o'clock, if there shall be no special orders for that time, the Calendar of General Orders shall be taken up and proceeded with in its order, beginning—

And so on.

This means that under Rule VIII we proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills upon the General Order Calendar, and that when that is completed, or in any event at the hour of 2 o'clock, if it has not been completed at that time, we proceed under Rule IX to consider the General Order Calendar, irrespective of whether the bills are objected to or not.

Immediately after the consideration of cases not objected to upon the calendar is completed, and not later than 2 o'clock, if there shall be no special orders for that time * * * the Calendar of General Orders shall be taken up.

There is only one case that could literally fall within the expression "if there shall be no special orders for that time." That would be a case where the Senate had made a special order for the consideration of a bill at a particular hour of a particular day. In other words, upon Friday, the 10th, at 1 o'clock, if the Senate was about to proceed with the consideration of the calendar under Rule IX, the bill of the Senator from Montana would be laid before the Senate under the clause "if there shall be no special orders for that time." But the mere fact that the bill has gone to the Special Order Calendar gives it no status as to time at all, and it would seem, so far as the rules are concerned, that the bill, having been made the special order for a particular hour of a particular day, has its day in court upon that day, and then it goes to the Special Order Calendar in somewhat the same manner that bills go to the calendar under Rule IX, to be brought up only by a special motion. However that may be, it seems perfectly clear that it has no status at any particular hour of the day.

There have been very few precedents established by the Senate upon this subject. There was a case which arose in the Senate February 16, 1858, where a bill had been made the special order for half past 12 o'clock upon a particular day. The consideration of it was not finished upon that day, and the presiding officer undertook to lay before the Senate upon a later day, at the same hour, this bill which had been made the special order. In the discussion Senator Stuart observed:

Mr. STUART. I much prefer that the Senate should pass on this question. I am very clear that the special order does not come up until 1 o'clock.

I may stop to observe that the rules as we have them now were not in operation at that time. Precisely what the rules of the Senate were I am not advised, but there was certainly no rule with reference to unfinished business except there was a morning hour——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will correct the statement of the Senator from Utah. There was a rule, Rule XXXI, and it did provide that the unfinished business should be the special order and should come up at 1 o'clock.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I was about to make that very statement. I was proceeding to say—except that there was a rule with reference to a special order becoming the unfinished business. The morning hour at that time expired at 1 o'clock. By subsequent amendments to the rules the morning hour now expires at 2 o'clock. Senator Stuart proceeded:

And I hope that upon this occasion, where there is apparently no very great solicitude on the subject immediately before the Senate, that point will be settled. There is nothing in the rule which continues a special order from day to day at the hour for which it was first made a special order. A special order is made for 1 o'clock, and that being the hour of proceeding to the ordinary general business of the Senate, on the expiration of the morning hour the Senate proceeds to the consideration of that special order; but I present this case for consideration; it is competent for the Senate, undoubtedly, to make a special order for half past 2 o'clock to-morrow. At half past 2 o'clock to-morrow the Senate proceeds to consider it, and then adjourns without disposing of it. Will that go over until half past 2 o'clock the next day, and at every subsequent day can it not be called up until half past 2 o'clock? I think that after the day for which it was first made a special order has passed it then becomes a special order among the other special orders at 1 o'clock. It takes its rank according to the thirty-first rule, which rank is decided by the day of its date. The first day you take it up at the hour specified, because the assignment fixes the day and the hour, but at all subsequent days it comes up at 1 o'clock.

Now, even if we were to follow that view with reference to this case, then the Calendar of Special Orders, if there were no unfinished business before the Senate, would come up every day, not at 1 o'clock but at 2 o'clock. The Vice President, after ruling upon the question, said:

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, then the Chair will take the sense of the Senate, not in regard to this question of order but in regard to the wishes of the body touching the arrangement of the special orders The Chair will put it in this form: Is it the sense of the Senate that a special order which has been assigned for one day at an earlier hour than 1 o'clock shall, if not finished on that day, fall into its proper place and be called not before 1 o'clock thereafter? If there is no objection, I will put that question to the Senate.

Then he put the question:

Is it the sense of the Senate that orders which have been or shall be assigned for an earlier hour than 1 o'clock shall, if not finished on that day, be not called thereafter until 1 o'clock?

And the vote having been taken upon it the Vice President announced "the ayes have it, and that will be the order of business hereafter."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator from Utah kindly state if I have gathered his position correctly, namely, that this special order comes up at 2 o'clock instead of 1 o'clock, or comes up immediately upon the conclusion of the unfinished business?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No, Mr. President; I have not said that. What I say is that under no construction of the rule could it come up before 2 o'clock.

Mr. WALSH. That is not the question I addressed to the Senator. Will the Senator kindly tell us when, in his estimation, it will properly be before the Senate?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I thought I had already made my position clear about that. I think, upon consideration of all the rules of the Senate upon the subject, a bill, when it is made the special order for a particular time, has its day in court for that hour and that day. If it had not been disposed of upon that day, then it goes to the Calendar of Special Orders, with reference to which no time has been fixed for consideration, and it must come up just as bills come up under Rule IX, upon a specific motion for that purpose; that it does not come up at any particular hour. Then I was proceeding to argue that in any event it can not come up at 1 o'clock, and in any event it can not come up before 2 o'clock of any day.

Mr. WALSH. We understand that, of course, very clearly; but will the Senator kindly tell us what is meant by that portion of the rule which states that—

If it is not finally disposed of on that day, it shall take its place on the Calendar of Special Orders in the order of time at which it was made special, unless it shall become by adjournment the unfinished business.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That simply means that in the arrangement of the Special Order Calendar the bill which was first made a special order shall occupy the first place on the calendar.

Mr. WALSH. Then the Senator's position is that it has no standing whatever, any more than any other bill, and can be brought before the Senate again only by another motion?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator has stated my position.

Mr. WALSH. In other words, it loses whatever right it has by being the unfinished business that day?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It loses any special right after the day when it has been first considered.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. The practice since I have been in the Senate has been such as has just been described, I think, but it is always unsafe to trust to memory. Before the days of unfinished business I believe the special order carried the privilege. I feel quite sure it has not had any privilege since I have been here. The reason was obvious. If the Senator will allow me, I will trespass but a moment upon his time. If special orders are to have a continuous privilege, you will mortgage all the time of the Senate, you will mortgage it every day, and you will have it mortgaged away ahead by a succession of special orders. The practical objection is what has led to the practice of the Senate, as it certainly has been of late years, that the special order had its day in court, and if it was not then finished it either had to be made another special order or be taken up on motion.

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator will permit me a remark, the way to get rid of that is not to make special orders.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Utah yield to me?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to my colleague.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is perfectly willing to hear a reasonable amount of discussion, but the Chair realizes that there is going to be an appeal from the decision of the Chair and the Chair would like to shorten the matter as much as possible. The Chair has not any doubt that in numerous instances a special order when not concluded on the first day has been taken up by a motion subsequently, but the Chair does not believe that there will be any authorities cited to show that this question has been raised since 1901. While the Chair believes that custom can make law, the Chair does not believe that custom can set aside law. So the real question involved is the construction of the rules.

The Chair repeats there is going to be an appeal from the decision of the Chair, and then there will be ample opportunity to discuss the question. When the Senator from Utah has concluded, the Chair wants to rule and to throw the matter open to the Senate for discussion.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In view of the intimation of the Chair, I shall not now trespass further upon the time of the Senate and will submit to a ruling.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Has the Senator from Utah any authority which he desires to cite to the effect that a point of order was made when the Chair of its own motion laid down the special order at the hour fixed for the same?

Mr. SMOOT. That question has not arisen, so far as I am aware, since I have been a Member of the Senate. I want to say to the Chair that the case cited by my colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND], which occurred in 1858, was under the rules of the Senate of 1856.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that.

Mr. SMOOT. And I desire to call the attention of the Senate to that particular rule and the reason why the question was brought before the Senate at that time and why the Vice President ruled as he did. I also want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the rule of the Senate to-day in regard to special orders is entirely different from the rule of the Senate of 1858 in reference to special orders. If we had the rule of 1858 to-day, there is not any question that the special order would come up every day, because of the fact that Rule XXXI——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair——

Mr. SMOOT. It will take but a moment for me to refer to the rule, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has the rule embodied in the remarks which the Chair proposes to make in ruling on the question.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. At a former session, at the hour of 1 o'clock, the Chair laid before the Senate what is known as the radium bill. Upon the right of the Chair so to do being questioned, the Chair ruled that as such bill had been made a special order for 1 o'clock upon April 10 by a two-thirds vote of the Senate it retained its position as a special order from day to day at the hour of 1 o'clock until disposed of or unless it became by adjournment the unfinished business.

This ruling was based upon Rule X of the Senate, which reads as follows:

1. Any subject may, by a vote of two-thirds of the Senators present, be made a special order; and when the time so fixed for its consideration arrives the presiding officer shall lay it before the Senate, unless there be unfinished business of the preceding day, and if it is not finally disposed of on that day it shall take its place on the Calendar of Special Orders in the order of time at which it was made special, unless it shall become by adjournment the unfinished business.

2. When two or more special orders have been made for the same time, they shall have precedence according to the order in which they were severally assigned, and that order shall only be changed by direction of the Senate. And all motions to change such order or to proceed to the consideration of other business shall be decided without debate.

Since that ruling was made the attention of the Chair has been called to Rule VIII, which reads as follows:

At the conclusion of the morning business for each day, unless upon motion the Senate shall at any time otherwise order, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the Calendar of Bills and Resolutions and continue such consideration until 2 o'clock; and bills and resolutions that are not objected to shall be taken up in their order, and each Senator shall be entitled to speak once and for five minutes only upon any question; and the objection may be interposed at any stage of the proceedings, but upon motion the Senate may continue such consideration; and this order shall commence immediately after the call for "concurrent and other resolutions" and take precedence of the unfinished business and other special orders.

From this rule it has been argued that the only effect of a special order is to give the subject precedence at the hour named and for the day named, and that thereafter unless the same shall upon the first day have become the unfinished business of the Senate, it can only be taken up upon motion. The point of order suggested is not without its intellectual difficulties. The Chair has, however, given the subject as careful thought and investigation as reasonable diligence in the time allotted would permit. The Chair still believes that the ruling was correct, but cheerfully accedes to the right of the Senate not only to make but also to construe its own rules, and will not therefore be embarrassed either by an appeal from this ruling or by its reversal if appealed from.

The reasons for the view of the Chair are that prior to the adoption of the present rules of the Senate the unfinished business was in the nature of a special order and had preference over all other special orders. The present rules since their adoption have had in contemplation three things—morning business; calendar under Rule VIII, if that calendar was completed prior to 2 o'clock, then the Calendar of General Orders, under Rule IX; and unfinished business at 2 o'clock. In 1888, upon the resolution of Senator Hoar, the morning hour was extended from 1 o'clock until 2 o'clock, since which time the Chair has no knowledge that the Calendar of General Orders, under Rule IX, has ever been reached. The clause in Rule VIII which provides that that rule shall take precedence of the unfinished business and other special orders, in the judgment of the Chair, was applicable to the time when the morning hour expired at 1 o'colck, when the unfinished business was a special order and when bills had been set down as a special order for a certain day and not for a certain hour.

The Chair believes that a bill may be made a special order for a certain day, without fixing any hour at which it is to be considered; in which event the morning business would be first disposed of, the calendar under Rule VIII, the unfinished business after 2 o'clock, and then the special order. The Chair fails to see why it requires a two-thirds vote to make a bill the special order if when so made it obtains no higher privileges than can be obtained for it by a majority vote of the Senate.

In 1858, on February 16, Mr. Stuart submitted a question of order—whether a subject made the special order of the day for half past 12 o'clock or for any other hour for a particular day, and not during that day finally acted upon, did not on any future day become a special order for the hour of 1 o'clock unless the Senate should specifically determine otherwise.

The Vice President, Mr. Breckenridge, thereupon took the sense of the Senate upon the subject, and the Senate decided that—

The special orders which have been or shall be assigned for an earlier or later hour than 1 o'clock for a particular day shall, if not acted upon or completed on that day, be taken up or called on any future day, under the thirty-first rule, at the hour of 1 o'clock unless otherwise determined by the Senate.

The thirty-first rule was:

When the hour shall arrive for the consideration of a special order, it shall be the duty of the presiding officer to take it up, unless the unfinished business of the preceding day shall be under consideration.

It will be observed by this ruling, whatever may be said as to the time, the bill was preserved from day to day as a special order of the Senate.

It appears quite clear from the earlier rules of the Senate that the unfinished business coming up at the end of the morning business did so as a special order. Rule XV, in force from 1820 to the adoption of the present rules, read:

The unfinished business in which the Senate was engaged at the last preceding adjournment shall have the preference in the special orders of the day.

The Chair believes that the opinion of the Senate in 1858 disclosed it to be the then view of the Senate that a special order had higher rights than a bill taken up upon motion; that it was not and could not by operation of law and without affirmative action upon the part of the Senate be displaced. The Chair thinks that this has been authoritatively once settled by the Senate. In 1900 the Senate made what is known as the Nicaragua bill the special order for December 10 at 2 o'clock p. m. This was, of course, at the very hour when unfinished business was to be taken up and disposed of by the Senate, and there is no dispute that the unfinished business has precedence of the special order. This matter remained in abeyance until the 23d of February, 1901, when the question was raised by Senator Morgan, of Alabama, who had been an honored Member of this body since 1877, and this question was finally passed upon by the President pro tempore of the Senate, Mr. Frye, who had served 10 years in the House of Representatives, 20 years in the Senate of the United States, and at that time had presided continuously over this body for more than 5 years. I shall not pretend to quote the discussion upon the question when Senator Frye was called upon to decide the question, but only to make some excerpts. At one point in the discussion, Senator Morgan said:

The rule of the Senate is that a special order shall only give way on and after the day that it has been set for to the unfinished business coming over from yesterday. Here the Senate, in the closing days of the last session of Congress, by unanimous consent, fixed the 10th day of December as the day on which the Nicaragua Canal bill should be heard as a special order of the Senate, not merely the two-thirds vote, but the unanimous consent of the Senate was given, and from that day to this I have been waiting to find some period of time when there would be no unfinished business coming over from yesterday. I have now found that period of time; and I insist upon the rights of that bill and of the country in connection with it. Those rights are so clear that the President pro tempore of the Senate on frequent occasions to me personally and in public, in the presence of other gentlemen, has said that that was the rule of the Senate and an unavoidable one.

He said further:

Now, sir, I produce the record upon you and upon this Senate. I deny the right of any Senator to get up here unless he amends that record and contradicts it. Let somebody come forward with an amendment and show that there is some motion or agreement of the Senate that this measure which I am now advocating should lose its place after you had unanimously put it upon the calendar for the 10th day of December.

Further he says:

The framers of this body of parliamentary law, acting upon the general parliamentary law, which is set forth in our book here as the rules of parliamentary law compiled by Thomas Jefferson, saw that it was necessary to protect a special order of the Senate by adopting Rule X. They had adopted Rule IX. They saw it was necessary to protect a special order of the Senate against the very point the Senator from Rhode Island, Mr. Aldrich, has made here to-day; that is to say, that if it so happened that the special order was not considered on the day to which it was appointed it was lost entirely. Just observe the absurdity of such a rule.

After a thorough discussion of the question, participated in by Senators Morgan, Aldrich, Spooner, and Hale, the President pro tempore, Mr. Frye, decided:

The Chair has been ready to rule on the point of order. The Chair calls the attention of Senators to the rule which provides that when a point of order is made no debate is admissible. The oleomargarine bill, in the opinion of the Chair, was very clearly displaced as unfinished business by the motion made by the Senator from Maine on yesterday. The presiding officer can not agree to the contention made by the Senator from Rhode Island. A special order requires a two-thirds vote and is almost the only matter before the Senate which has such a requirement. In the judgment of the Chair that clothes a special order with more than usual rights; it clothes it with unusual rights. In the opinion of the Chair, whenever there is no unfinished business subsequent to the special order made, that special order is to be laid before the Senate as unfinished business. Of course, on a motion to proceed to the consideration of any other subject, the special order would be displaced if that motion prevailed.

There is no difference in law construing of that case and this, save the fact that the special order in that case was made for 2 o'clock when it could not dispossess the unfinished business which is also in the nature of a special order and this bill which was made a special order at 1 o'clock.

The Chair has no doubt that the present bill is a special order for 1 o'clock from day to day or until it becomes the unfinished business at 2 o'clock or until it has been disposed of by order of the Senate. The reason for this is that at the hour of 1 o'clock a motion can be made to take up a bill upon the calendar. This may be done by a majority vote, but as the present order was made by a two-thirds vote it remains such special order until by affirmative action of the Senate it is displaced.

It may not be out of place to recall the fact that the present body of rules was adopted on January 11, 1884, to take effect January 21 following, and that the rules were framed by the Committee on Rules, composed of William P. Frye, of Maine; John Sherman, of Ohio; John J. Ingalls, of Kansas; Isham G. Harris, of Tennessee; and George H. Pendleton, of Ohio. It is significant that it was the chairman of the committee who drew the rules who decided the point in 1901.

From the decision of the Chair, the Chair understands, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] appeals.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. SMOOT. On that I should like to submit a few remarks.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Well, I yield to my colleague.

Mr. SMOOT. I beg the Senator's pardon. I overlooked the fact that he had the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hopes that it will not be considered as any disrespect to the Senators discussing the question if the Chair withdraws, as he has an engagement that requires him to leave at the present time.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KERN in the chair). The Senator from Utah has the floor.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY] is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. I wish to announce the continued absence of my colleague [Mr. MYERS] on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to say to the Senator that it is not exceedingly important that this intricate and interesting question of parliamentary practice should be determined now. Of course, the discussion which has ensued and which will ensue will consume all the time between 1 and 2 o'clock any day, so that practically it has no significance or importance.

I had intended to state at the outset that I did not desire to have the bill taken up for discussion for 40 or 50 or 60 minutes, during which time it could not possibly be disposed of; and I merely hoped that it might have so much precedence under the rules that it would be properly before the Senate upon the disposition of the unfinished business.

I have no further interest in the question now before the Senate, so far as it affects the bill under consideration, because it can do no good to get the bill before the Senate at this time.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, the question now before the Senate is a very much larger one than this particular bill. The Vice President has ruled that when a bill has been made the special order for a particular hour upon a particular day, thereafter, for all time to come until it is disposed of, or at least during the life of the Congress, until it is disposed of, it will come up automatically at that same hour every day.

That presents a pretty serious question for the Senate, because if it will apply to this bill it will apply to a dozen bills pending upon the Special Order Calendar, if we have so many. One Senator may move to proceed to the consideration of a bill at half past 12 upon a particular day and another Senator may move to proceed to the consideration of another bill at 1 o'clock upon a particular day, and another Senator to proceed to the consideration of another bill at half past 1 upon a particular day, and so on. All of those bills, neither of them having been disposed of at the hour and the day upon which they were specially set, go to the Calendar of Special Orders; and, if the ruling of the Vice President is right, we have mortgaged the time of the Senate half an hour every day to this bill, half an hour every day to the second bill, half an hour every day to the third bill, and so on.

Certainly such a question as that is a very serious one, upon which the Senate ought to pass.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. Would it not require a two-thirds vote in each one of the cases the Senator has put, so that, after all, it would be within the control of the Senate as to whether or not it would mortgage its time?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Oh, yes; it requires a two-thirds vote before a bill can be assigned for a particular hour of a particular day. That circumstance alone is sufficiently out of the ordinary to require a two-thirds vote. We have given a bill a special and unusual status when we have set it down in advance for consideration at 1 o'clock upon a particular day. That is an unusual circumstance—an unusual status to give a bill. In order to give it that one day in court the rules require that there shall be a two-thirds vote. The ruling of the Chair, however, goes beyond all that and holds that, notwithstanding it has not been disposed of on the day for which it was set, it continues to hold that status, coming up at the same hour every day until it has been finally disposed of.

I think there is nothing in the rules which justifies such a ruling; and I think it is a matter of sufficient consequence that it ought to be determined by the Senate wholly irrespective of the disposition of this particular bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is it not the opinion of the Senator from Utah that, in the light of the present ruling of the Chair, the Senate will be much more careful than it otherwise would be in setting aside special hours for the consideration of a bill? It is within the power of a very small portion of the membership of the Senate to negative a request of that character; and if a bill is to hold its place as the Vice President has indicated it would, as far as I am concerned I would be very reluctant to give my consent to the consideration of a bill under those circumstances.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think the Senator is quite correct. If the ruling of the Vice President stands, I should not only be reluctant but I think I should decline hereafter to give my assent to the making of a special order at all. I am perfectly willing to make a bill the special order for a particular hour if it is understood that it must be disposed of on that day, and that if not disposed of it takes its place upon the Special Order Calendar; but I certainly would not consent to make a bill a special order for a particular day if that fact carried with it the consequence that the bill, until disposed of, would be called up every day at that same hour.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. The very circumstance that the Senate permitted this bill to be made a special order without dissent, and without asking for a vote, and that it went through without contest, lends strength to the contention that those of us who were willing that that should be done supposed that the matter would take the course that it always has taken since I have been in the Senate—that a special order would hold its place only for that one day. Otherwise, there will always be a contest as to the making of special orders, and a vote will be demanded, I apprehend, if a bill is contested at all.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And debate will be had.

Mr. GALLINGER. And debate will be had.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I was not on the floor at the time, but I understood that there was no attempt to ascertain whether or not there was a two-thirds vote in favor of this special order.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is true.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It was practically a unanimous consent, as I understand.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It was unanimous.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That it should be taken up for consideration.

Mr. LODGE. It was only technically a two-thirds vote.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course, if it was unanimous it included the two-thirds.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I had said substantially all I wanted to say before the Vice President ruled upon this question, but inasmuch as other Senators have come into the Chamber since the discussion was had I desire very briefly to restate my position with reference to the matter.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I was out of the Chamber when this question came up. I will ask the Senator to permit me to ask the Chair to state the question before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. VARDAMAN. But what was the question? I was not present when the Chair rendered the decision.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Chair will permit me, I will state, for the benefit of the Senator from Mississippi, that several days ago the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] moved that the so-called radium bill be made a special order for 1 o'clock on Friday, the 10th of this month. That was acquiesced in by the Senate practically by unanimous consent. There was, as I recall, no dissenting vote upon the question.

Mr. LODGE. It was done by consent.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. When the hour of 1 o'clock on Friday arrived, the Vice President laid the bill before the Senate, and the Senate proceeded to its consideration. The consideration of the bill continued until the hour of 2 o'clock, at which time the unfinished business, being the grain-inspection bill, was laid before the Senate, and the consideration of the radium bill ended so far as that day was concerned.

Upon the following day, or, rather, upon Monday following—there being no session on Saturday—the Vice President at the hour of 1 o'clock proceeded to lay this same bill before the Senate, holding that it having been assigned for the hour of 1 o'clock on Friday, and not having been disposed of on that day, it came up automatically every day thereafter at the hour of 1 o'clock until disposed of. That ruling of the Vice President I have challenged. I have insisted that this bill, having been set for Friday at 1 o'clock, had its day in court upon that day, and that after that day it ceased to have any peculiar status so far as time was concerned.

I have already called attention to the rules of the Senate upon that matter, but I am obliged to do so again. They seem to me very clear.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I simply wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. There is an appeal pending from the ruling of the Chair?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. At 2 o'clock the unfinished business will be laid before the Senate?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I simply wish to ask the Senator, if we do not get some sort of a unanimous-consent agreement that this matter shall be deferred without prejudice until to-morrow at 1 o'clock, what will be the status of his appeal?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I presume it would go to the calendar.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The appeal would go to the calendar? If possible, I wanted to get a unanimous-consent agreement, or to ask for it, before 2 o'clock. I simply make that suggestion to the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will permit me, under the ruling of the Chair, which of course governs as until set aside, it will come up at 1 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The bill will come up.

Mr. LODGE. And the bill will bring the point of order with it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; the Senator is correct.

Mr. SMOOT. I believe it will be necessary to ask that the pending ruling of the Chair also shall go over until to-morrow to be disposed of.

Mr. LODGE. The bill brings the point of order with it. The point of order is pending on the bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But the pending question is an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. LODGE. That comes up with the bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But an appeal is not a point of order.

Mr. LODGE. No. It arises on a point of order, however.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I beg the Senator's pardon. I am not clear that I agree with him on that point. My impression is that the appeal from the decision of the Chair in laying the matter before the Senate is the only matter before the Senate, and that the bill itself will not be laid before the Senate at 1 o'clock until it is decided whether or not the Chair is correct in ruling that it will go before the Senate at 1 o'clock, and that decision is appealed from.

Mr. LODGE. While I have never known the case to arise, I should think the Chair's ruling on the point of order would stand until set aside by the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. It would not hurt anything to ask unanimous consent that the pending appeal be brought up when the bill is brought up to-morrow.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, well, that is understood.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that that be done.

Mr. GALLINGER. I object to that. It will come up necessarily.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, it is a matter of indifference to me whether the question is disposed of to-day or to-morrow or some other day, but I think it ought to be disposed of as speedily as possible.

I shall now proceed with my remarks.

I have already stated what proceedings the Senate had taken with reference to this bill. Rule X of the Senate provides, in substance, that—

> Any subject may, by a vote of two-thirds of the Senators present, be made a special order; and when the time so fixed for its consideration arrives the presiding officer shall lay it before the Senate.

That, of course, has been done.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In just a moment. The rule continues—

> If it is not finally disposed of on that day—

That is, upon Friday, the 10th day of April, applying it to this bill—

it—

> shall take its place on the Calendar of Special Orders in the order of time at which it was made special.

That means simply that the special orders shall be arranged upon the calendar in chronological order, the bills that were first made special orders taking first place on the calendar, and so on, in the order of time in which they were made special.

The rule gives the Calendar of Special Orders no particular status at all. When we come to the question as to how the Special Order Calendar shall be disposed of, we must go elsewhere than to Rule X, because it does not bear at all upon that question.

I now yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I am rather inclined to agree with the Senator in the position he has taken. The matter of special orders is rather an old-time custom. I think it has gone out of use in the Senate to-day, and the unfinished business has taken the place of the special order. The confusion has come about, as I understand, by reason of an amendment introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts fixing the hour of 2 o'clock instead of 1 o'clock.

Ordinarily a special order would come up, as I understand, at 2 o'clock as unfinished business does to-day. That is the reason for the expression in the rule that it shall come up if there is no unfinished business, because unfinished business does not come up until 2 o'clock. Formerly special orders came up at 1 o'clock; but the change of the rule as the result of the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts changed the hour, and therefore this would come up regularly at 2 o'clock on the Special Order Calendar, provided there was no unfinished business, and not at 1 o'clock, if it came up at all. I am rather inclined to think the effect of it is just like a motion to take up a bill on the calendar at a certain time instead of at the hour of 1 o'clock on that day. That is all it amounts to.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I can not go quite so far as the Senator from North Carolina seems inclined to go. I think, under the rules, when a bill is made a special order it is simply given an unusual status upon that day, and having failed of passage upon that day it simply goes to the calendar under the head of special orders, and can be brought up only by a motion, as I have illustrated here before, in precisely the same way that bills go to the calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why have a Special Order Calendar, then, if it would have no more effect than having a bill on the ordinary calendar? I think the intention of the rule is that after 2 o'clock, if there is no unfinished business, it will be like unfinished business, as was the case before the adoption of the rule as to unfinished business.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me invite the Senator's attention to Rules VIII and IX upon the subject.

Rule VIII reads as follows:

At the conclusion of the morning business for each day, unless upon motion the Senate shall at any time otherwise order, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the Calendar of Bills and Resolutions and continue such consideration until 2 o'clock.

There is the mandatory provision that the Calendar of General Orders shall be taken up and its consideration proceeded with until the hour of 2 o'clock. In order that even that mandatory provision shall be made clear it is further emphasized by this provision later along in the rule—and shall take precedence of the unfinished business and other special orders.

Therefore it is perfectly clear that when the calendar is being called under Rule VIII the consideration of the calendar takes precedence not only of the unfinished business but of other special orders.

Mr. OVERMAN. I agree to that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. So that up to 2 o'clock it is perfectly clear that this special order can not be considered.

Mr. OVERMAN. I agree to that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But the ruling of the Vice President is that it comes up every day automatically at 1 o'clock.

Mr. OVERMAN. I disagree with the Vice President on that point.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In answer to the precise point of the Senator from North Carolina, I call his attention to——

INSPECTION AND GRADING OF GRAIN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 120.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 120) to provide for the inspection and grading of grain entering into interstate commerce, and to secure uniformity in standards and classification of grain, and for other purposes.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, at the close of the discussion yesterday I called attention to what a great wheat market and what a great milling center Minneapolis has become. It is one of the greatest primary wheat markets in the country. From 75,000,000 to 100,000,000 bushels of wheat are marketed there every year—depending on the volume of the crop—and over 80 per cent of it ground into flour. Because of the fact that it is a great milling center that market has been the best primary cash market in the country. The spot prices, as they call it, or the cash prices, at Minneapolis have always been better than at almost any other primary market in the country, and they are always ahead of future sales. Looking at the quotations of grain in the Minneapolis papers, there is scarcely a day but you find that the cash figure is 2 or 3 cents ahead of the future sales. While we farmers of the Northwest have sometimes been grumbling at the millers and at the grain trade of Minneapolis, yet on the whole it has furnished us the best market in the country.

I remember very well when the question of Canadian reciprocity was before the Senate how Senators compared the Minneapolis market with the other markets of the country, especially the Winnipeg market, which is practically the market at the head of Lake Superior, the Fort William or the Port Arthur market. We showed then that the prices of wheat were on an average from 10 to 15 cents a bushel higher at Minneapolis than the Winnipeg or Fort William price, and as a rule the price was even higher and better than the cash price at Chicago. And the farmers of North Dakota have had the full benefit of this market in common with and on a footing of equality with the farmers of Minnesota.

Mr. President, in view of the fact that the grain-inspection system of Minnesota has been assailed and has practically been made the basis for seeking this kind of legislation, I propose to call the attention of the Senate in some detail to the nature and character of the Minnesota grain-inspection system. In order that you may understand it, I will explain how grain was handled before the present system was evolved and came in vogue. When I was a boy farmers had their fanning mills on their farms. When the wheat was thrashed they ran it through a fanning mill and cleaned it before taking it to market at the mill or the railroad station. It was cleaned wheat they marketed and sold and hence the question of dockage for dirt and foul seeds did not prevail. That old method, on account of the great labor involved, is now obsolete. Farmers no longer fan or clean their own wheat except what little they need for seed. A farmer's fanning mill is simply used to-day for the purpose of cleaning his seed wheat. Otherwise he takes the grain as it is thrashed to the local elevator and he sells it with all the foul seed, smut, cockle, wild buckwheat, wild oats, and all other similar foul seeds in it.

The local elevators at first, and for a number of years, were in the habit of cleaning the wheat before shipping it to the terminal elevators. For a number of years that system prevailed, but the local elevators found that they could not dispose of the offal, or the screenings, as we call them. They could not dispose of it at home only to a very limited extent. Occasionally the farmers and the people in the village would buy some of the screenings for chicken feed, sometimes for hog feed, but the bulk of it the local elevators could not get rid of at any price at home.

So the elevators resorted to another system. Instead of fanning and cleaning the grain at the local elevators before shipping it, they shipped the grain just as they received it from the farmers to the mills and to the terminal elevators, and the mills and terminal elevator proceeded to clean it and take out all the foul seed—all the screenings. The terminal elevators and the mills—and it is a curious thing, too—found a market for those screenings. The better part of the screenings were utilized by the manufacturers of so-called pure stock food. They would buy those screenings by the ton at wholesale from the mills and the elevators, then take the best part of them and grind them up, put a little good grain in with them and dope it with a little medicine and sell it to the farmers in packages as pure stock food.

Now, because of the fact that the grain is brought to the local elevators to be marketed in an unclean state, a system of dockage has grown up. That is, the farmer brings his grain to the country elevator uncleaned—just as it comes from the thrashing machine. The local elevator man examines the grain as it is tendered. He sees it is full of foul seeds; it has smut in it, it has cockle in it, it has wild buckwheat in it, it has wild mustard in it, it has wild oats in it, and other foreign substances. He says to the farmer, "I have got to dock you so much for this foul stuff; I will dock you so much." Ordinarily, unless there is much foul stuff in the grain, the dockage is usually from 1 to 2 pounds to the bushel. There is grain in which there is so much foul seed that the dockage of it exceeds this amount.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHAFROTH in the chair). Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. NELSON. I do.

Mr. WEST. The Senator says that it is docked from 2 to 3 pounds. That is 2 or 3 pounds on how much?

Mr. NELSON. From 1 to 2 pounds per bushel. I am glad the Senator interrupted me. It is docked from 1 to 2 pounds a bushel, and sometimes where the grain is very good, where it comes from the thrashing machine in good order with very little foul seed in it, only a little chaff and dust in it, then it is docked much less. I have had wheat that has been docked only a half pound to the bushel.

Now, how is the wheat marketed and handled? In most of the country east of the Rocky Mountains, it is handled in bulk. It is shipped in bulk from the local elevators. On the Pacific coast, I understand, and in some of the Mountain States, it is still handled and shipped in sacks, just to what extent I am unable to say. I only know in a general way that such is the case.

We have two classes of grain houses or elevators, as we call them, that handle the grain. We have local elevators—sometimes called country elevators—along every railway station in the State where there is any grain to handle. Some stations have only one, other stations have two and three, and I have known quite small stations in a good grain belt to have as many as four and five.

These country or local elevators may be grouped into three classes. One class we call line elevators, another class we call independent elevators, and the third class we call farmers' elevators.

A line elevator is an elevator that is owned and controlled by a terminal elevator company. A terminal company has terminal elevators, say, at Minneapolis and Duluth. In order to keep those terminal elevators full of grain, to receive storage fees, it establishes throughout the country at the various railroad stations local elevators—grain houses—and sends men out to operate them. Such elevators are feeders for the terminal elevators; hence we call them in our part of the country line elevators.

Then we have another class of elevators that are independent—not connected with any terminal elevator. They are usually elevators built and operated by business men in the little towns and villages in order to keep up the price of grain and make a good local market. We call them independent, because they are not attached to any terminal elevator. They buy grain directly from the farmers and ship it to the terminals to commission men there. The commission man sells their grain. He can sell it by sample on the grain exchange or otherwise to millers, exporters, or terminal elevator companies.

The third class of country elevators that we have are what we call farmers' elevators; that is, where farmers associate themselves together to build and operate a local elevator, in order to keep prices up and to cut off the profits of middle men. These elevators ship their grain to commission men at the terminals like the independent elevators. There is a considerable number of such farmers' elevators both in Minnesota and North Dakota, and their number is on the increase. Those farmers' elevators usually send their grain to commission merchants. They are not attached to any terminal elevator company, but they send their grain to commission merchants to be sold like the independent elevators.

We have besides, at the terminals, as we call them, at the city of Minneapolis and at the city of Duluth, big terminal elevators. Those are great big grain houses, holding thousands and thousands of bushels. They are owned by companies, generally incorporated, sometimes, I believe, by partnerships.

The elevators of those terminal companies are maintained and kept up for the purpose of storing grain till wanted by the mills or for export. They get the grain from their line elevators in the first place, and then they buy from the commission men the grain of the independent and farmers' elevators, and they sell it from time to time as there is a demand for it to the millers, to the millers of Minneapolis and the millers at many other points. In other words, they are wheat magazines upon which the mills draw from time to time as their needs may require.

The farmers markets his grain at the local or country elevator. It may be a line elevator, it may be an independent elevator, or it may be a farmers' elevator. That grain is shipped from the local points to the terminals and when it comes there it is inspected by the State grain inspection system, and sold by sample on the grain exchange, and when sold it either goes directly to the mills or to the terminal elevators.

Now, Mr. President, I am going to call your attention briefly to our system of grain inspection in Minnesota. As I said yesterday, I think it is the most perfect and complete system of any State in the Union. While there are seven other States that have a State system, I think Minnesota is one of the pioneers. We first began in 1885, when we passed a law for the regulation and control of terminal elevators, placing them under the control of the railroad and warehouse commission. That was the beginning. We found under that law, not so much complaint at the terminals as we found at the interior points, at the local elevators. Farmers would come with their grain to their local elevator, the local grain buyer, and he would offer them so much. "I will give you No. 1 Northern, or No. 2, or No. 3, as the case might be, and I will dock you 1 or 2 pounds a bushel and will pay you so much," and when the farmer complained of the grades, dockage, weight, and prices allowed him by these local men they would say, "I can not do any better for you because this is all that will be allowed me at the terminal." In many cases they prevaricated; misrepresented and deceived the farmer in this respect, and so the farmers were, to a large extent, at the mercy of these local elevator men, for, be it known that over 90 per cent of the grain when it reaches the terminals has ceased to be the property of the farmers. It passes out of their hands at the local elevators.

I have been a farmer in a small way, Mr. President, ever since 1874, raising grain. I have had some wheat to sell every year—sometimes more, sometimes less, dependent upon the crop—yet I have never shipped a carload of grain either to Duluth or Minneapolis; I have always sold what grain I had at the local elevator and taken the grade, dockage, and price that has been allowed me there.

As I have already indicated, we soon discovered in Minnesota that the great trouble was with the country elevators. So in 1893 we passed a law to which I called your attention yesterday, putting all country elevators, whether line elevators, independent elevators, or farmers' elevators, under State control, making them all take out a license every year. The license fee was very small. We required a license simply to put them on the State book and make them subject to State control. They were put under the charge of our railroad and warehouse commission. We have in Minnesota, and have had for years, a railroad and warehouse commission consisting of three members. A part of the time they have been appointed, and a part of the time elected. At this time and for some years past we have elected them.

These local elevators buy the wheat, and also receive it for storage. The farmer sells his wheat to them, or stores it with them. If he needs the cash, he sells; if he does not need the cash and looks for a rise in the price, he stores the wheat. Whether it is a farmers' elevator, or independent elevator, or line elevator, they buy or store as the farmer may elect. When the farmer comes there with his grain the elevator man says, "I will allow you such and such a grade and dock you so much and pay you so much." If the farmer accepts that and sells, he gets the cash; if he does not sell but wishes to store, he gets a storage ticket which states the amount of grain in pounds and bushels, the grade of it, and the rate of dockage. If the farmer is dissatisfied with the grade and dockage, and believes that he is not given a high enough grade, and is docked too much, then a sample is taken of that grain—two or three quarts; I forget just how much—and it is put into a sack, sealed, and sent to the chief grain inspector at St. Paul for examination, and he determines whether the grade and dockage is just or not.

In addition to these two laws, the law of 1885 providing for the regulation and inspection of terminal elevators and the grading of grain at those points and the country elevator law of 1893, we provided in 1899 for a board of grain appeals, consisting of six men appointed by the governor. It is a board sitting in two sections, one section of three men at Duluth constantly in session, and another section of three men constantly sitting at Minneapolis. That is called our board of grain appeals.

I call your attention to the fact that practically there are three tribunals that pass upon the question of grades and dockage under our Minnesota system. When your carload of grain comes into the terminal elevator the grade and dockage are passed upon in the first instance by an inspector. If the owner of the grain is dissatisfied with that inspection he can immediately call for a reinspection, a reinspection not by the man who made the first inspection, but a reinspection by other inspectors, by the chief inspector or two of his deputies. If the shipper of the grain is still dissatisfied he can appeal to the board of grain appeals consisting, as I said, of six members. So there are three tribunals to pass upon it; first, the original inspector; next, the inspectors who reinspect it; and third, the board of grain appeals.

I desire, Mr. President, to call the attention of the Senate briefly to the main features of our terminal-inspection law. Under this law, while the supreme control is under the railroad and warehouse commission, we have under that commission one chief grain inspector and several deputies and we have one chief weighmaster and several deputies. The force is divided into these two classes—the inspection force and the weighing force. All these men, whether inspectors or weighers, are under bond to the State of Minnesota and the State can not only enforce those bonds, but any party injured by the inspection or weighing is at liberty and is given the right by statute to institute a suit upon that bond and get relief in damages. No such relief is given by this bill.

All our public terminal warehouses are required to take out a license and they are placed under big bonds, not less than $50,000 in each case.

Section 2047 of the Revised Laws of Minnesota, as amended, defines public terminal elevators as follows:

SEC. 2047. Defined.—All elevators or warehouses located within the switching limits of St. Paul, Minneapolis, and Duluth, and other points in the State which are now, or may hereafter be, designated as terminal points, in which grain is received for storage in bulk, and that of different owners mixed together or so stored that the identity of the different lots or parcels is not preserved, shall be public warehouses known as "terminal warehouses."

I will call the attention of the Senate to section 2050:

No such warehouseman shall sell or otherwise dispose of or deliver out of store any such grain without the express authority of its owner and the return of the storage receipt except as herein provided, nor—

And I ask Senators to listen to it—

nor mix together grain of different grades in store, nor select grain of different qualities, but of the same grade, for storage or delivery, nor in any way tamper with the grain of others while in his possession or custody, with the purpose of securing any profit to himself or any other person. * * * Any person violating any provision of this section shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment in the State prison for not more than five years, or both.

There is another important provision of the statute pertaining to these terminal elevators, and that is that they are required to provide separate bins for the storage of grain. If a farmer, an independent, or farmers' elevator ships grain to St. Paul or to Minneapolis or Duluth to a public warehouse, he can ask to have that grain put in a separate bin and not mixed with other grain. That has been the law and is the law to-day. But very few farmers avail themselves of that privilege, as I shall show further on by a report of the North Dakota commission.

Our grain-inspection force is practically under civil-service rules. For the last 20 years, so far as I know, we have never allowed politics to interfere with it. Our grain force is well disciplined, well organized, and is composed of men who have grown up in the service. When a new man is appointed in the service, he is at first assigned to the humble position of a "helper," at $50 or $60 a month, to help the "sampler" to open cars. After proving his skill and efficiency he is gradually and slowly promoted.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. WEST. Whose duty is it to appoint the grain inspectors?

Mr. NELSON. The grain inspectors are appointed by the railroad and warehouse commission.

Mr. WEST. Those who own elevators do not dictate the appointments?

Mr. NELSON. No; they have nothing to do with the administration of the law. The elevator men have no more to do with it than has the Senator from Georgia. The inspection force is appointed entirely by the Railroad and Warehouse Commission. The men who own and control the country and the terminal elevators have nothing to do with these appointments. It is entirely a State force appointed by the railroad and warehouse commissioners of the State of Minnesota.

Mr. WEST. And they are not paid by the owners of the elevators?

Mr. NELSON. No; they are paid by the State.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. NELSON. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. Of course there has been no question raised as to the matter referred to by the Senator from Georgia; but let me ask the Senator from Minnesota from what source do the warehouse commissioners obtain the inspectors?

Mr. NELSON. They get them mainly from among the farmers.

Mr. McCUMBER. No. The inspectors must be men who have had experience in inspecting under some system.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, we began at an early day gradually and in a limited way to supervise and inspect terminal elevators. From small beginnings our force has gradually grown up and our inspection force has been mainly recruited from farmers and farmers' sons.

Take the members of our board of grain appeal. That board, as I said, consists of two sections, one section of three at Duluth and another section of three at Minneapolis. As a rule, two out of that board of each section are farmers or men who have been engaged in farming and raising grain. We have been very careful about that.

I remember when I was governor a little incident which may properly be related here. A young man in my town who had been raised on a farm and worked on a farm but had moved into town, and who thought he was quite a fellow, came to me and wanted me to secure him a place on the grain inspection force. I told him that I could only get him in as a helper; that the railroad and warehouse commission did not appoint new men as inspectors or deputy inspectors, or as weighers or deputy weighers; that he could only get in as a helper and would have to serve an apprenticeship as such. A helper is a man who walks about with the grain sampler, helps to open the cars, and take samples for the inspector.

Helpers usually start at a salary of from fifty to sixty dollars a month. I secured the appointment of this man, who was from my home town, as a helper, I think, at $50 or perhaps at $60 a month. He had been at work for about a month or six weeks at Minneapolis, when one day he came down to the capital and called on me at the governor's office. He was highly indignant. He said to me: "Why, I thought you were going to help me get something respectable to do in the grain-inspection service." I said, "I have helped you the best I could; I have asked the railroad commission to give you as good a place as they could." "Well," said he, "what do you think they have done? They have made me a helper. I am compelled to open cars and to assist the sampler and crawl in on my hands and knees and take samples. I want you to understand, Mr. NELSON, I am too good and too big a man for that." "Well," I said, "I am very sorry, but I can not do any better for you. You will have to continue in that capacity and demonstrate your efficiency before you can get something higher."

That has been the method pursued in our grain-inspection service. It has been entirely nonpartisan. The bulk of the force has been recruited from among the farmers of the State. On the whole, it is as efficient and reliable a public service as can well be conceived of or as any section of the country can well have.

As I have already stated, our grain force is divided into two sections; that is, into two groups. One is the inspection division, under a chief inspector and under which are the grain samplers; the other is the weighing section, under a chief weighmaster. The weighers and the inspectors are all under bond, and anyone who is injured by any of these men, either by false weights or by improper inspection, has a remedy on these bonds. While the bond runs to the State, the statute provides that anyone injured may sue upon the bond. Let me quote the law. It reads:

All bonds required by this subdivision shall be filed with the secretary of state, and suit may be brought thereupon by any person injured by the misconduct of the principal.

I shall now, at the risk of being a little tedious, call your attention in detail to just how the grain business is handled at terminal elevators. I have here a statement which I shall afterwards corroborate from a report of a commission of North Dakota——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Before the Senator from Minnesota proceeds to that detail, will he give information concerning the number of inspectors employed under the laws of Minnesota?

Mr. NELSON. I can not give the Senator the number.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. How long has the law been in effect?

Mr. NELSON. The law providing for terminal inspection has been in effect since 1885.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What would be the effect upon the Minnesota system of the passage of the bill advocated by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]?

Mr. NELSON. It would utterly break up and destroy the system.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And it would break up and destroy the system of every other State which has established grain inspection?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly; it would break up the system of every State in the Union.

Mr. WEST. Before the Senator proceeds——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. WEST. Is there any possible chance whereby this law could be made uniform throughout the States and yet allow the States to have charge of the inspection? I have reference to the standardization of grades of grain.

Mr. NELSON. There is no objection to creating national standards, but I will show you later on that in order to do that you would have to have at least from 10 to 12 different classes of standards for wheat. We can establish uniform standards of grain for the whole country, leaving the inspection in the hands of each State government, simply requiring them to adhere to the Federal standard. The Lever bill, in substance, so provides, and a similar bill has been introduced by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] in the Senate. We are quite willing that grades shall be standardized; we have no objection to that; but we have established in Minnesota a perfect, well-regulated grain inspection system that is now giving satisfaction and has given satisfaction for a great many years to the farmers of Minnesota.

I now ask those of you who are present to listen to the method in which the business is done. I read from a paper entitled "Minnesota State Inspection and Weighing Departments and Sampling Bureaus," by John G. McHugh, secretary Chamber of Commerce, Minneapolis, Minn.:

INSPECTION OF GRAIN.

The inspection and grading of grain in Minnesota is exclusively in the hands of the Minnesota grain inspection department, which is under the supervision of the Railroad and Warehouse Commission of Minnesota.

Grain shipped to Minneapolis is inspected by the State samplers in the various railroad terminal yards where it is placed by the railroad company upon arrival. The inspection department also samples at certain outlying points, viz, Staples, Glenwood, Melrose, and Wilmar, Minn. The sampling of grain at these outlying points is for the purpose of facilitating the delivery of the grain after its arrival at the terminal market, and to prevent delay in unloading and demurrage charges. In Minneapolis the Great Northern Railway has two terminal storage yards where grain is sampled, the Soo two yards, the Omaha one yard, the St. Louis one yard, the Great Western Railway one yard. When the cars of grain reach these terminal yards or storage yards at the outlying points above mentioned it is ready for State and bureau sampling.

During the fall and winter months the State samplers arrive at the railroad yards above mentioned about daybreak, or as soon as there is sufficient light for proper sampling. The State samplers secure samples of the car for the State inspectors, who grade the grain, but these samples are only for the use of the State inspection department.

It therefore is necessary for the commission merchants and others selling grain on the exchange floor of the chamber of commerce to secure additional samples of the cars by which the grain will be sold.

A number of years ago each commission firm and line elevator company employed its own samplers, or had the samples secured by some of their employees.

Now they combine and send their samplers there to get samples for the grain inspection.

However, owing to the number of railroad yards to be visited, this method was found exceedingly inconvenient, and as a result certain individuals engaged in the sampling work formed two bureaus, known as the sampling bureaus, and these two sampling bureaus now secure practically all of the samples by which grain is sold in the exchange room of the chamber of commerce. These sampling bureaus make a charge for each car sampled, and each of these bureaus have their own customers.

All of the samplers—

These are not the samplers of the State—

All of the samplers are licensed by the chamber of commerce, and make daily reports to the chamber of commerce regarding the seals broken and applied by them in the work of sampling.

Then follow the rules by which these samplers are governed. The State sends a sampler early in the morning to take samples of the grain from each car. They break the seal, unlock the car, recording the number of the seal and the number of the car, take a sample of the grain, put it in a sack, and send it to the inspector for inspection. At the same time, or about the same time, a sampler for the chamber of commerce appears and takes samples of the same grain. He brings his samples to the chamber of commerce, and the grain is sold there upon those samples.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. WEST. Suppose that two men sampling a specific carload disagree; what is then the result?

Mr. NELSON. Neither of the samplers has anything to do with the grading of the grain. The State sampler goes to the car, gets a sample of the grain, puts it in a sack, and sends it to the State inspector, who passes upon the grade and dockage. The other sampler represents the chamber of commerce—the grain exchange—and takes his samples to the chamber or exchange, where those samples are spread out on tables for the inspection by the members of the exchange, and it is upon these samples that the cash sales are made from day to day. The State sampler does not pass upon grade or dockage at all; he merely procures samples for the inspectors. The other sampler, representing the chamber of commerce, gets samples which he sends to the chamber of commerce. I repeat, the two samplers are independent of each other, and neither one of them passes upon the grade or dockage.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President, what I wanted to get at was this: Does the inspector to whom the samples go look over both of the samples which are taken?

Mr. NELSON. No; he does not have anything to do with the sample that is taken out by the representative of the chamber of commerce. That is an independent transaction and is outside of State authority.

Mr. WEST. May I ask what is the use of having two samples taken out of the same car?

Mr. NELSON. I will tell the Senator why that is done. It is because on the chamber of commerce, as I have said, the grain is sold by samples. They send their samplers to the cars to secure samples, and when the samples are brought in they are put on the table in the chamber of commerce, and the grain is sold by sample. The other sample taken by the State official is sent to the State inspector, who passes on the grade and dockage. There is no connection between the two. The one is a State institution, while the other is wholly a private institution pertaining to the chamber of commerce.

Mr. President, I ask, without reading, to insert in my remarks at this point the rules governing the samples in taking samples out of the cars and the sealing rules. There are 18 of those rules, which are very minute and describe how the samples are to be taken, the manner in which seals are to be broken on the cars, and the manner in which the cars from which samples are taken are to be resealed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the request will be granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The following are the sampling and sealing rules under which the employees of the sampling bureaus work:

1. No licensed sampler shall accept a sample of grain of any kind from another sampler, State, or bureau. Every sampler must sample his own car.

2. No licensed sampler is permitted to open up a car and go away without first closing the door and sealing same.

3. Sampling bureaus must provide a bar for each railroad yard, which the licensed sampler must use when necessary to aid them in closing doors so that they may be properly sealed.

4. In cases where it is not possible to close car doors or to seal them properly, a notation must be made by the sampler upon the sealing card giving the reason.

5. Flax must be probed not less than seven times, all other grain not less than five times at points equally distributed in the car; or as many times as may be necessary in each case to obtain a correct sample.

6. All samples must be probed samples, except when large loads prevent it, in which case the sample may be taken from the doorway and marked "Grab."

7. When able to get into cars to probe them, but not able to secure a sample from the bottom, the tickets must be marked "No bottom."

SEALING RULES.

8. Seals must be carefully protected and must be kept under lock and key when not in use.

9. Seals must not be left hanging on car doors while samplers are in cars securing samples.

10. Seals must be used in numerical order. No excuse will be taken for failure to obey this rule.

11. Defective seals must be returned to the office of the secretary of the chamber of commerce, with the report of the sampler. Defective seals must be reported upon the report of seals used as being defective.

12. Seals that are lost must be reported as lost in their regular order on the sealer report.

13. Sealers must furnish their sealing report daily to their employers.

14. Seals will be issued in lots of 100 and charged to each sampler. Samplers are forbidden to loan seals under any condition whatever.

15. A new bunch of 100 seals will not be furnished to any sampler, nor to any employer for account of any sampler, until the previous lot has been fully accounted for.

16. Samplers requesting a new lot of seals through their employer must furnish their employer with the numbers of the seals still remaining in their possession.

17. Samplers securing seals direct from the secretary's office must furnish the same information.

18. Samplers are permitted to use one-half of the back of their cards for their numbers. The other half of the back of the card must be kept free for notes regarding car doors, etc. If possible, however, these notes should be made on the face of card.

The violation of these rules or careless sampling would result in the revocation of the sampler's license.

Mr. NELSON. I quote further from the same document.

As stated above, the State samplers and the bureau samplers arrive in the railroad yards at the same time. The bureau samplers are not allowed to break railroad seals, and the cars are opened, and the railroad seals broken by a State sampler, who makes a record of the seal broken, and later of the State seal applied after the car has been sampled both by State and bureau samplers.

Senators will understand that the cars come to the terminals sealed. The seal is broken by the State sampler when he takes the sample. At the same time he records the number of the car, the number of the seal, and everything that pertains to the identity of it. After the sample has been taken out the car is resealed, and the seal which is then put upon it is called the State seal. I read:

The railroads provide offices in their yards for the use of the State and bureau samplers. Railroad clerks also provide lists of cars of grain and seed ready for sampling. The State samplers secure samples from all of these cars, but the bureau samplers secure samples of those cars only which are shipped to their customers. The bureau samplers and the State samplers are not permitted to sample a car at the same time.

After the cars have been sampled, both by the State samplers and the bureau samplers, the doors are then closed and sealed by a State sampler, who keeps a record of the seal originally broken and the seal applied, as above mentioned.

The State sampler also makes a record of the car number and its initial. Samples are secured both by the State samplers and by the bureaus—

I ask Senators to listen to this—

by means of a double hollow brass tube, called a probe, which is thrust down through the grain to the bottom of the car in a number of places. These probes have openings corresponding to each other from one end to the other.

Then follows a description of the process, which I ask may be inserted in my remarks without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HITCHCOCK in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

When the probe in inserted, the inner tube is turned so that these openings are closed. After the probe reaches the bottom of the car, the inner tube is turned so as to allow the grain to rush into these openings and fill the probe. If the grain near the bottom of the car is tough and damp, it will not flow freely, and the dry grain might fill the probe from end to end. In order to prevent this, a plug is placed between the first and second openings at the end of the probe so that if the dry grain above rushes in rapidly, it can not fill the end of the probe. This gives the tough or damp grain at the bottom of the car, if any, a sufficient time to fill the bottom section of the probe.

The work of securing samples of the car, both for inspection and sale, is exceedingly important. The samples secured should accurately represent the entire carload. Where grain is unevenly loaded, it is a difficult thing to secure an accurate sample of the car.

The State and bureau samplers make use of a cloth in securing samples, upon which the contents of a probe are emptied. When the probe has been inserted, opened, and filled with grain, the inner tube is then turned, and the probe closed and withdrawn. It is then held horizontally and opened, and the grain examined by the sampler, whether State or bureau, to detect any variation in the quality of the grain from the top to the bottom of the car. The contents of the probe are then dumped upon the cloth and other probes taken in various parts of the car. If no appreciable variation develops, all of the grain secured by the probe from various parts of the car are then mixed together thoroughly upon the cloth, and a sample sack is filled with this mixture, care being taken that the contents of the sample bag shall be an accurate average of this grain, and shall also accurately represent the amount of foreign matter in the grain.

Should the car be unevenly loaded so that the grain in one part of the car is quite different from the other, or should the car be "plugged" by an unscrupulous shipper, two or more samples are taken of the car in as many sample sacks, and an estimate is made of the quantity of each kind of grain in the car.

The State samplers place in the sample pack just mentioned a ticket on which has been placed the car number and initial. The sample is then taken to the State inspector's office in the Flour Exchange Building, Minneapolis, Minn., where under a proper light it is carefully graded by expert inspectors.

Mr. NELSON. After the samples have been secured by the State sampler they are taken to the inspection department and—

The grade and dockage of grain is then determined by means of testing apparatus adapted to the work, consisting of finely adjusted scales and sieves of various kinds.

The grading of grain by these inspectors is based upon rules laid down by the State inspection department.

Now let me call your attention to this:

The Minnesota grades are fixed annually, about the 1st of September each year, at a joint meeting of the grain inspection boards of Minneapolis and Duluth, commonly referred to as boards of appeal.

Our grain season does not open until the fall of the year—usually about the middle of September. There is usually no grain thrashed until about that time. Before the grain sale season commences the board of grain appeals, consisting of six men, meets and determines upon the grades for the crop of that year, and after they have determined upon that and notice is published they have no right to change that grade during the year; it is a permanent thing. They can only change it by a vote of five out of the six members; it requires almost a unanimous vote before they can change that grading.

Each of these boards consists of three members appointed by the governor of Minnesota, and each member must have the same qualifications as grain inspectors, and not more than two members of each board shall be of the same political party. Their terms of office are for two years, and they are required to give a bond in the sum of $5,000 for the faithful discharge of the duties of their office.

As stated before, these boards meet in joint session about the 1st of September each year, and establish the description of the grades of grain subject to State inspection, known as the Minnesota grades. These grades when determined are published daily for a week in a newspaper at Minneapolis and Duluth.

The State inspectors are governed by the descriptions of the Minnesota grades as above mentioned in inspecting the samples secured by the State samplers.

That is, they follow the grades laid down and fixed by the board of grain appeals. If any shipper of grain is dissatisfied with the inspection made by the inspector in the first instance, he has a right, as I have said, to call for a reinspection. That reinspection must be made by other inspectors, and not by the original inspector. It must be made by the chief deputy inspector and his first two assistants, who had nothing to do with the first inspection. If the shipper is still dissatisfied with the reinspection, he can appeal to the board of grain appeals, and that board finally settles the grade. I quote further from this document:

These inspectors, in determining the grade and dockage of each car, do not know in any instance to whom this car of grain belongs.

After the inspectors have determined the grade and dockage of any of the cars, lists are made showing the car number, initial, grade, dockage, etc., which are posted conveniently for those desiring this information. The sample sacks are numbered in numerical order as they are inspected, and after inspection are carefully hung on sample racks to be preserved for 36 hours, if occasion should require, that further reference may be had to them for either reinspection or appeal. These inspectors not only have no knowledge of the ownership of the grain that they are grading, but they do not know from whom or what point the grain was shipped, so that the judgment of the inspector at the terminal is based wholly upon the grain before him.

At the same time that the State samplers deliver their sample sacks to the State inspection department for grading, the bureau samplers deliver these sample sacks direct to the tables in the exchange room of the chamber of commerce, which are rented by their customers. In ordinary cases, these samples are placed upon the cash grain tables in the exchange room before the opening of the market at 9.30 a. m. each day.

REINSPECTION AND APPEAL.

In case the owner of the grain or his representative, the commission merchant, is not satisfied with the grade or dockage, he may secure a reinspection of the grain, and may apply to the board of appeals after the reinspection. Reinspections are made by the chief deputy inspector and his first two assistants, who receive the grades and dockage of the other inspectors; no inspector being permitted to regrade or reinspect his own work. If the owner or commission merchant is not satisfied with the reinspection, an appeal may be taken to the board of grain appeals, one of which is located at Minneapolis and the other at Duluth. These boards are in continuous session from 9 o'clock a. m. until 2 p. m.

The bureau samplers put in their sample sacks a ticket, giving the name of the sampling company, the car number, initial, and capacity, the name of the firm (their customer) for whom the sample was secured, the date, and the name of the sampler.

That refers to the bureau sampler—the sampler for the chamber of commerce, but the State sampler does nothing of the kind. He simply takes down the number of the car, the number of the seal, and to what line the car belongs. Neither the sampler nor the inspectors know whence that grain comes, or who is the owner thereof.

I call your attention again to the fact that when the car of grain comes from the country and is placed on the side track of the railroad, in the morning the sampler who represents the State and is a State official under bond goes there and takes a sample of the grain. Formerly that sample was examined at or near the car at the time it was taken out of the car. It is not so now and has not been so for several years. It is now put in a sack and sent to the inspection department. The other man, representing the chamber of commerce, who goes there and takes samples, sends them to the chamber of commerce, where they are spread on a table and used as the basis of the cash or spot sales.

If the commission firm representing a farmers' elevator company is dissatisfied with the grade received he immediately files with the State inspection department a request for reinspection on a blank form provided by the State, giving the car number and initial, etc., this request being signed by the commission merchant.

If this reinspection is not satisfactory to the commission merchant he then files with the chief deputy inspector an order for appeal to the board of appeals on a blank form provided by the State, which gives the car number, etc., and is signed by the commission merchant or party requesting the appeal. When this is done, the samples of the car upon which an appeal is taken are delivered by the State inspection department to the board of appeals, who examine the sample and determine the proper grade. The decision of the board of appeals is final and conclusive. In case it can be shown that the sample secured from the car by the State samplers was incorrect the board of appeals will at once reconsider their decision, based upon a fresh sample.

Among the duties of the State samplers when securing samples for inspection and grading is that of examining each car of grain for leaky conditions that might exist and making a record of the same on their record books.

SALE OF GRAIN IN THE EXCHANGE ROOM.

The car of grain is sold in the exchange room of the chamber of commerce, based upon the sample secured by the bureau sampler before mentioned.

They call him the bureau sampler; he is the sampler of the chamber of commerce, and all the cash grain or cash sales at Minneapolis are sold upon samples furnished by this sampler and not upon State inspectors' grades. The cash sales of wheat on the chamber of commerce are not sold according to grades fixed by the State inspection department, but are sold according to samples obtained by the sampler of the chamber of commerce.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. NELSON. I do.

Mr. STERLING. I should like to inquire if the samples put upon the table in the chamber of commerce are not graded at all?

Mr. NELSON. No; those samples are not graded.

Mr. STERLING. Are they not given as samples of certain grades in grain?

Mr. NELSON. Not at all. The State sampler takes a sample out of the car and puts it in a sack, and that sample is sent to the State inspector, and he grades it. The sample that is taken by the chamber of commerce man is not graded at all.

Now, we have in Minnesota another law which I do not think other States have enacted, and to which I desire to call the attention of Senators. We require every commission merchant who deals in grain and other farm products to take out a State license and to give a bond. If he is engaged in the grain-commission business, he has to give a bond of at least $5,000, and more if his business requires; the amount is fixed in proportion to his business.

I quote further from the statement from which I have already quoted, as follows:

The commission merchant empties the contents of the sample sack into a sample pan, which is then placed upon the cash grain table for examination by the buyer. In this pan is also placed the sampler's ticket which was contained in the sample sack, giving information regarding the car. The samplers are required to state upon their cards whether the grain is in a heating or hot condition, if such be the case, and these tickets must be displayed in the pan when the grain is offered for sale to the buyers.

The commission merchant offering grain for sale for farmer elevator companies must be licensed by the railroad and warehouse commission, and must furnish a bond to the railroad and warehouse commission in amount satisfactory to the commission. All commission merchants, members of the chamber of commerce, soliciting shipments from country merchants are licensed and bonded by the railroad and warehouse commission. Such license may be revoked by the railroad and warehouse commission for cause and upon notice and hearing. For the purpose of fixing or changing the amount of bond required, the commission may require complete statements of the business from the commission merchant, these statements being for the exclusive use, however, of the railroad and warehouse commissioners. The laws of Minnesota require that the commission merchants shall render a true statement in writing to the shipper within 24 hours of the amount sold, price received, name and address of the purchaser, and the day, hour, and minute of the sale, and shall forward vouchers for all charges and expenses. If the shipper of grain is not satisfied with the manner in which the commission merchants have handled his shipments, he may file complaint with the railroad and warehouse commission, who shall investigate the matter complained of. In making the investigation, the railroad and warehouse commission can compel the commission merchant to produce all books, records, etc., regarding the matter.

I refer to this matter because it is very important. Grain shipped from these country elevators, from independent and farmers, as I described them a moment ago, is shipped to commission merchants. We had some years ago some experience in that matter. Some of those commission merchants turned out to be unreliable. Some of them failed, entailing great losses on the farmers; but a few years ago our State legislature passed a law requiring all commission merchants to take out a license and to give a bond and to be subject to the regulation and control of the Railroad and Warehouse Commission of Minnesota. Therefore if I, owning an independent country elevator, ship grain to a commission merchant, he will go to the chamber of commerce and sell that grain by sample; but I have some protection, because the commission merchant is now a licensed officer and under a bond, and is subject to the regulation of the railroad and warehouse commission.

But I continue the quotation:

When the grain is sold by the commission merchant a confirmation of the sale is promptly forwarded to the shipper, giving the particulars above mentioned. If this car has been sold to a terminal elevator or mill orders are given to the railroad company for the delivery of this car to the terminal elevator or mill.

If the buyer desires to secure an additional sample of the car for checking purposes he employs one of the sampling bureaus above mentioned to secure this sample for him. The bureau sampler thereupon breaks the State seal, keeping a record of the number of the seal broken, and applies a chamber of commerce seal, all seals being numbered consecutively.

A daily report is furnished to the secretary of the chamber of commerce by the bureau sampler of the seals broken and applied. When the car reaches the terminal elevator or mill for unloading it then comes under the control of the State weighing department, which is also under the supervision of the railroad and warehouse commission. State weighers are located at all of the leading terminal elevators and mills. The State weigher at once makes a careful examination of the car to detect any bad order conditions and a complete record is made of any such conditions found.

The inspection of the car for leaky conditions having been finished the State weigher takes a complete seal record of the car before the seals are broken In case the mill or elevator company, at whose plant the car has been set for unloading, should break the seals for private inspection they also are required to make a record of the seals which they have broken and the seals which they apply.

Next I come to the State weighing department. That is distinct from the inspection department. I quote on this point from the document already quoted from, as follows:

STATE WEIGHING.

After the seal record has been secured the car is placed at the unloading pit, where, by means of steam shovels, the grain is unloaded from the car.

The grain is then elevated to the garner, which is the large receiving hopper located just above the scale hopper. After the scale has been properly balanced and the hopper valves securely closed the grain is drawn down from the garner into the scale hopper.

The grain is then carefully weighed by the State weigher and the original entry of weight is made in a record book provided for the purpose. He then takes a specially arranged ticket, and by means of the type-registering device with which all scales on which State weights are given are equipped, he obtains a type-printed record of the weight, which must correspond with the weight recorded in the book.

He then checks this type-printed record with the figures that he first recorded in the record book, and if they do not agree it is his duty to at once thoroughly investigate the work before the grain has been dropped from the scale to discover the cause of the difference in the records.

Since an incorrect record can not be obtained from the type-register device unless it is actually broken or out of order, it is practically impossible for error to enter into the work of weighing under the present system.

Another check that tends toward accuracy is the fact that all through the weighing operation the State weigher has not been alone in the work, for the mill or elevator weigher has been present all the time, and as a result the two men are enabled to compare their work and figures as an extra precaution against mistakes.

At the larger elevators in the system where the weighing is done on hopper scales in the cupola two men are employed by the State, one being stationed upstairs where the weighing is done, and the other supervises the work of unloading and handling downstairs. This downstairs man sees that the cars are properly swept; it is his duty to know that all of the grain has been elevated from the unloading pit before the signal is given to the State weigher above to weigh the grain; and he must know that the car is placed at the particular unloading pit which corresponds with the scale number upstairs, on which scale the State weigher has been advised the carload of grain is to be weighed. It is this downstairs man who keeps the seal record.

The men who weigh the grain at these terminals are State officers, and they are under bonds. If they commit any wrong, if they are guilty of false weighing whereby anybody suffers any damage, the person injured can sue them on their bonds just as well as the State.

Sometimes there is a complaint that they do not give full weight. Here is a rule laid down to reach such cases. It is a rule laid down by our grain inspection department, but unfortunately the shippers do not follow it:

When a shipper of a car of grain obeys the law by placing a card in the car, giving the shipping weight, an immediate investigation is made if there is an apparent discrepancy.

In other words, our State rule requires that when a man ships a carload of wheat from an interior point he shall prepare a card stating the weight of the grain, the amount of bushels, and put it inside the car. The object of that rule is that when the car gets to the terminals, if there is a discrepancy between the weight in the car, as given on the card, and the weight of the State weighers at the terminal, the controversy can immediately be settled. They can have it looked up, and see where the mistake is. Unfortunately, however, that is a rule with which the shippers fail to comply in most instances. I quote further:

When a shipper of a car of grain obeys the law by placing a card in the car, giving the shipping weight, an immediate investigation is made if there is an apparent discrepancy between the State weight and the shipping weight, and it is very plain that such an investigation, made while the grain is still held in the scale hopper, is of more value than when made a few days or weeks after the weighing has been done and all the circumstances surrounding the case may have been forgotten.

When there is no shipping weight ticket placed in the car the State weigher has no means of knowing the amount of grain the shipper has loaded into the car, and consequently he would not know of the fact if a shortage did actually exist.

Here is a description of the system of weighing, which I ask to have inserted in my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Where track scales are used instead of hopper scales, the loaded car is uncoupled from all other cars, placed upon the scale platform and weighed. Then when the grain has been unloaded from the car, the empty car is weighed to obtain the tare weight. This tare weight is deducted from the gross weight in order to obtain the net weight of the grain. A complete record of the work is kept the same as in hopper scale weighing, and the recorded weights are checked by means of the type registering device previously mentioned.

When the State weigher closes his report for the day it is mailed at once to the State weighmaster's office where the report must be on hand by 7 o'clock a. m. on the day following the weighing.

From these records on file in the weighmaster's office an official certificate of weight is issued, bearing upon its face the car number, initial, contents, and State weight, together with the date and place where the grain was weighed. This certificate is stamped with the seal of the office of the State weighmaster, and forms the basis of settlement between the seller and buyer in the matter of weight.

All State weighers are under a surety fund of $5,000.

They are wholly independent in their work, not knowing to whom a single car of grain belongs, and they also know that the tenure of their office is not dependent upon the good or ill will of mill or elevator people at those weighing stations where they may be stationed.

Scale experts are employed by the department, whose sole duties are to test the scales and keep them adjusted to the Government standard of weights. Nor does the State supervision cease at the testing of the scales, but takes up the details of proper scale construction, elevating machinery, and all apparatus that enters into the handling of the grain before it is fully weighed.

The mechanical improvements at the terminals have kept pace with the progress of development of the State system of records and weighing, and to-day in the mills and elevators are installed the most improved type of scales that money can buy.

In the matter of track scales the old wood foundations are replaced with steel and concrete, and the track scale capacity has increased from 100,000 pounds to 200,000, while the largest hopper scales in the world are in Minneapolis, with a capacity of 120,000 pounds, net.

Automatic devices are used to aid in securing exact results; the sacks are sealed to prevent willful or accidental changing of the scale leverage without the knowledge of the department.

A close supervision is kept over all scales on which State weights are given, and this does not mean just ordinary care in the use of the scales, but means a complete and severe test from minimum to maximum capacity of every scale in the system.

The State grain department thoroughly investigates all claims that are presented.

When a claim is presented alleging a shortage, it is placed on file and handled in the order of its filing. The records are carefully checked over to see if an error has been made in transposition of numbers, addition of drafts, or by actual mistake in recording figures or a set of figures.

The type register ticket, which has been carefully preserved for reference is then examined and compared with the figures as shown by the original written record.

The record of the work is then investigated at the unloading station. The seal records are also checked up.

Another very important branch of the State grain department is the system of patrol service, whereby the cars loaded with grain are watched while going through the terminal yards, to detect any leaking condition that might exist as well as to guard against pilferage.

Many times leaking cars are found and reported by these special watchmen, that would not show to be leaky except when in motion, for cars often leak in the yards when switched about and do not show evidence of leakage when set for unloading.

Much has also been accomplished in the way of protecting the property of shippers from pilferage, a loss against which the country shipper would be powerless if it were allowed to exist unchecked.

Since these special watchmen cover the whole terminal system wherever cars of grain are handled, they are a further check upon the work of seeing that the cars are properly swept at the different unloading stations which they are continually passing during their yard work.

These men are regular weighers assigned to this patrol service, and are empowered with police authority.

The State grain department stands as the arbitrator between the seller and the buyer; it treats both with equal fairness; it is disinterested as to the financial interest involved, its only care being to see that justice is done.

It has the supervision of grading and weighing of all grain that pours into the terminal markets, and it aims to be an active and energetic factor in the work of securing correct grades and weights, making constant efforts toward the improvement of the service by the adoption of the most modern equipment, and by the application of the experience that years in the development of the work has given.

REPORT TO THE SHIPPER.

When the exact weight of the car is known to the commission merchant, he then renders an invoice to the buyer for the amount due for the car, and also forwards an "account sale" to the country shipper, particulars regarding the car, giving the car number, initial, kind of grain, gross weight, dockage, if any, and net weight, price per bushel sold at, and gross proceeds. Also showing the charges, including freight, inspection and weighing fees, commission, etc. If the shipper attached a draft to the bill of lading, and this draft has been paid by the commission merchant, this amount is deducted as an advance from the net proceeds, and the balance forwarded with the account sale to the country shipper, together with duplicate inspection and weighing certificate and expense bills, etc.

In addition to the patrol service of the weighing department for the purpose of checking leaking cars, the chamber of commerce employs inspectors who visit the local and outgoing railroad yards for the same purpose, and also to detect any cases of rough handling of the railroad equipment which might result in loss to the shipper.

The country shipper can always secure a complete seal record by applying to the State inspection department and to the office of the secretary of the chamber of commerce. If the car at the time of unloading has a railroad seal on one side, which was attached at the shipping point, and on the other side a chamber of commerce seal, the secretary's office of the chamber of commerce can immediately advise regarding the number of the seal broken when the chamber of commerce seal was applied. If this was a State seal, the State inspection department can furnish him the number of the seal broken when the State seal was applied. By this method a complete sealing record is kept from the time the car was shipped until it is unloaded, even though it may have been opened for sampling several times.

If the farmers' elevator company is dissatisfied with the treatment accorded it by the commission merchant, it can make complaint to the railroad and warehouse commission, and, in addition, can file complaint with the secretary of the chamber of commerce, who will investigate the shipment. Farmers' elevator companies and shippers generally should not hesitate to request an investigation of their shipments by the secretary of the chamber of commerce.

Mr. NELSON. To sum up, Mr. President, when a carload of grain reaches Minneapolis from an interior point, from a country elevator, it is put on a sidetrack. Early next morning a State sampler goes to the car and gets a sample of the grain with his probing instrument. He takes that sample, puts it in a sack, and it is handed to the State grain inspector or to a deputy inspector. The inspector passes upon the grade and the dockage. He takes the sample, runs it over a sieve, as I stated a moment ago, tests it, and fixes the grade and the amount of dockage.

If the owner of the carload of grain is dissatisfied with that inspection, if he feels that the inspector has not given him the grade that he ought to have for the grain, if he feels that he has not given him the proper amount of dockage, he can immediately apply for a reinspection. A reinspection is thereupon had by other inspectors, usually by a chief deputy and two assistants. If the owner of the grain is still dissatisfied he can immediately appeal to the board of grain appeals. So it is difficult to see how you could provide a better and safer system to protect the public. There are practically three tribunals—first, the original inspector; second, the reinspectors; third, the grain appeal board—that pass on the grades and the dockage.

In this connection I wish to say further that our inspection system is not compulsory like the plan proposed in this bill. A farmer or a country elevator can ship grain to Minneapolis or St. Paul without having State inspection. A farmer in our State can secure a car, load his grain directly on the car, and send it to a commission merchant at Minneapolis, and that commission merchant can sell it directly to the millers without there being a single bit of State inspection. There is nothing compulsory in the system as in the pending bill.

Since 1885 Minnesota has been engaged in formulating and perfecting her grain-inspection system, and we have by degrees and finally got a system in which the farmers and shippers are better protected than in almost any other State I know of. Many years ago it was difficult for independent elevators and farmers' elevators to get sites at railway stations. If the independent elevator or the farmers' elevator applied to the railroad companies for a site to build an elevator or warehouse on, the railroad companies would look wise and say: "Well, we would like to accommodate you, but we have not room. We need what land we have around that station for our yards and tracks. We can not spare you ground for a site"; and in that way they would stand them off.

Finally, in 1893, I think, we succeeded in passing a law compelling the railway companies to give sites for independent and farmers' elevators; and if the railroad companies refused to give sites for that purpose we authorized condemnation proceedings, so that they could secure sites in any event. Since we passed that law we have had no difficulty. Our farmers have had ample opportunity to secure elevator sites and warehouse sites in the country.

That is not all, Mr. President. The farmers felt that they would like to ship their grain without shipping it through an elevator, without paying toll either to a local or terminal elevator. So we provided by legislation, I think pretty much at the same time, though I am not sure about the year, that the railroad companies should furnish cars to the shippers, and that they should equip their stations with platform scales at the stations, to the end that a farmer might notify the railroad company in season and say: "I want a car to ship a carload of wheat to Minneapolis, and I want it as soon as I can get it"; and when the car was furnished—and they would be careful to furnish it, under the rules of the railroad and warehouse commission, in the order in which the demand was made, whether by an elevator or a farmer—the company was required to have a platform scale where the car could be pulled on the scales and weighed before it was shipped.

In that way we afforded our farmers every possible facility. A farmer in Minnesota to-day can ship a carload of wheat from his local station to Duluth or Minneapolis without the grain passing through an elevator. He can haul the grain right up to the car, put it into the car, and ship it direct to the commission merchant at Minneapolis, who can sell it to the miller by sample, without having any State inspection or grade at all.

During the early years of our system of grain inspection until we secured the country-elevator law in 1893 there was some complaint among our farmers. In recent years, aside from a few politicians who seek to make political capital out of it, our farmers in Minnesota have been fairly well satisfied with our system of grain inspection. There has been no complaint made by them, so far as I know, in respect to the system. Of course there have been from time to time reinspections and appeals, but the outcome of this has, on the whole, been satisfactory. The complaint has come mainly from our adjoining State of North Dakota. They have had the benefit of the same market we have had. There has been no discrimination between their grain and our grain in any respect.

I can tell where part of the trouble of North Dakota arises from. It arises from their system of thrashing. Owing to the large farms they have had in North Dakota and the scarcity of help, a large share of their grain has not been stacked. It has been thrashed from the shock. To some extent that has been true in our State, in the upper part of it, in the so-called Red River Valley, but not to the same extent as in North Dakota. In North Dakota a large share of their grain is not stacked before thrashing, and it oftentimes happens that before the grain is thrashed out of the shock it becomes bleached and injured by rain and sunshine and storm, and thus it loses in color, quality, and grade.

During the earlier years of their farming, while their land was new, their wheat was tolerably clean and nice, as clean as any of ours; but in later years, owing to their extensive system of farming their larger farms and owing to their methods of farming, oftentimes seeding grain without plowing the land, simply running those pulverizers or rotary cultivators over it, they got a good deal of foul seed in their grain—wild oats, smut, cockle, pigeon grass, and a lot of those things.

The greatest trouble, however, came from shock thrashing. Some falls they would be fortunate, and perhaps there would be little or no rain between the time the grain was cut and the time they put it through the thrashing machine; but other falls, again, they might have two or three storms and showers. Those thrashing machines have big crews. They are in a hurry about their work, and if there is a rainstorm they are not always careful to wait long enough to have the grain thoroughly dried before going on. It is because of that shock thrashing that their wheat, though originally of a good quality, oftentimes comes to the terminal stations bleached and looking badly.

Those big farmers thrash from the shock. They haul their grain immediately to the country warehouse, perhaps into the car, and it is shipped immediately, and when it is shipped in that way it is liable to heat, deteriorate, and become damaged.

We farmers know that grain, after it is cut and shocked and after it is put in stacks, goes through a sweating process. In the case of our moderate-sized farmers, who stack their wheat, if the grain gets bleached a little in shock, if we stack it and let it stand in stacks two or three weeks it goes through a sweating process, and it regains its natural and good color, which it had lost in the bleaching process, and improves in grade and quality.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before the Senator leaves that point, I wish to inquire if the wheat that undergoes the stacking process does not ship more safely and with less liability to deteriorate in transit?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly. I have always been careful to stack my wheat. I never thrash it until it has stood at least three or four weeks in stacks, because wheat in stacks undergoes a sweating process and at first it becomes a little tough.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCUMBER. I might also ask the question whether the Senator does not believe that the North Dakota farmer understands that as well as anyone else and makes due allowance for it?

Mr. NELSON. No; I do not think they all do, for if they did there would be more grain stacked and less shock thrashing among them.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think he does, Mr. President, fully as well as the Minnesota farmer or anyone else.

Mr. NELSON. I think a good deal of the trouble comes from that source.

Mr. McCUMBER. I can say——

Mr. NELSON. Fortunately, I have here a North Dakota witness as to the good quality of our system of inspection and showing their own failure to pass the proper legislation.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota further yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCUMBER. I simply want to say, for the intelligence of the average farmer of North Dakota, that he does understand that condition just as well as the Senator from Minnesota or myself, and he makes full allowance for naturally deteriorated grain.

Mr. NELSON. I am not disputing the intelligence of the North Dakota farmers. They are as intelligent as the Minnesota farmers. The trouble in North Dakota is that they have had a larger proportion of what we call the large farms, and farming in that country is not like it is in the older States.

In the older States, where they engage in stock raising and have a lot of cattle, they keep hired men by the year. On the North Dakota farms they have little to do in the winter; they are large prairie farms; there is no wood to get in, and nothing particularly to do except to take care of the few head of horses and cattle they have. They get a large part of their help from the big cities in summer. They go to the big cities and get all kinds of help, and they rush their farming through as rapidly as they can, under great pressure and as expeditiously as possible. That is one reason why they resort to shock thrashing, because they avoid the expense and trouble of stacking.

I have talked with many North Dakota farmers about the matter and they have said: "I am satisfied I would get a better grade for my grain, and do better, if I could stack it and let it stay in stack before thrashing; but, unfortunately, it is so hard to get help that we have to rely upon the help we can get from the big cities, and for that reason we have to get along the best way we can without stacking our grain, and thrash it as rapidly as possible."

In 1907 the Legislature of North Dakota passed a law known as chapter 129 of the laws of 1907. It is as follows:

CHAPTER 129.

(S. B. No. 195—Hanna.)

BOARD OF GRAIN COMMISSIONERS.

An act providing for the naming by the governor of the State of a board of grain commission, prescribing their duties, and providing an appropriation therefor.

Whereas the people of the State of North Dakota generally recognize the fact that the inspection of grain in the terminal cities in Minnesota and Wisconsin has not been satisfactory to them, and that there has been more or less conflict as to the grades of the grain and the dockage on same, and

Whereas, from the investigation made by the committee from the North Dakota State Bankers' Association during the past summer, it was shown that there were abuses and that conditions existed which ought not to exist, and which should be remedied: Now, therefore the following law is proposed for enactment by the legislature:

Be it enacted by the Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota:

1. Board appointed; duties; appropriation. There shall be appointed by the governor of this State, within 60 days after the passage and approval of this act, a nonpartisan board, consisting of three members, who shall be citizens and freeholders of the State, and not, directly or indirectly, interested in any elevator company, to be known as the "grain commission board." The duties of this board shall be to go to the cities of Duluth, Minneapolis, and Superior, and to carefully investigate the feasibility and practicability of the State of North Dakota buying or leasing or building an elevator to be used as a terminal elevator for the use and benefit of the people of the State of North Dakota, and making a report thereof. The said board in their investigation shall make full inquiry into the present grain inspection, the methods of handling of grain, the dockage of grain and the expense of cleaning grain, and the disposition of the screenings and their approximate value. They are to report as to the probable cost of buying, leasing, or building of a terminal elevator of a certain capacity, and the probable expense of operating the same, including taxes and insurance. Also to report any further matters that may come to their knowledge during their investigation and that would be of help in throwing further light and information on the subject. The board shall make a detailed report of their findings to the governor of the State, which shall be submitted by him to the next session of the legislature for such action as they shall deem proper. Each member of the board shall receive for the time actually spent by him in the performance of his duties the sum of $7 per day and his actual and necessary traveling and other expenses, but in no event shall each member of the commission spend more than 60 days in the performance of their duties. Not more that 50 days shall be spent in this work in the year A. D. 1907, and not more than 10 days in the year A. D. 1908 to supplement their findings of 1907, and to bring down their report as to conditions as near to the time of the meeting of the next State legislature as possible. The board is hereby authorized to employ and pay for a stenographer to assist in preparing their report. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act there is hereby appropriated out of the State treasury of moneys not otherwise appropriated the sum of $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay the per diem and expenses of the commission and their stenographer.

2. Emergency. Whereas an emergency is said to exist in that this board should be appointed prior to July 1 next, therefore this act shall be in force from and after its passage and approval.

Approved, March 4, 1907.

I now have the report of the commission which that law provided for, and I desire to read from the report. It was a commission of three men. I will read the report, for it will clearly justify and make good the statement that the system of inspection in Minnesota is a good one, and it is not subject to all the vituperation and criticism that have been invoked against it here. Mind you, this report was made at about the time the hearings were had that my friend from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] referred to yesterday.

I read from public document No. 37 the report of the board of grain commissioners to his excellency, John Burke, governor of North Dakota. It appears to have been printed in 1908:

Pursuant to the provisions of the statute providing for the appointment and designating the duties of this board, we severally qualified by executing a bond in the penal sum of $5,000, running to the State of North Dakota, and conditioned upon the faithful discharge of our duties as members of said board of grain commissioners, said bonds being on file in the office of the secretary of state.

On November 14, 1907, we met in the city of Minneapolis and organized by the election of Mr. A. R. Thompson as chairman and Mr. M. O. Hall as secretary of the board.

The board immediately took up the matter of investigating the system of terminal grain inspection and weighing in vogue at Minneapolis, Duluth, and West Superior, beginning their duties in this respect by an investigation of the State weighing system in operation at the city of Minneapolis.

In pursuance of this the board repaired to the office of Mr. P. P. Quist, State weighmaster of grain, and informed him of their desire and purpose. Mr. Quist, in his capacity as the chief of the Minneapolis weighing department, rendered efficient and accommodating service to this board in pursuing their investigation.

We first inspected the office of the weighing department. On the long counters we found spread out for the use of the public carbon copies of the weighers' daily reports.

I ask attention to this:

We first inspected the office of the weighing department. On the long counters we found spread out, for the use of the public, carbon copies of the weighers' daily reports, which showed in detail the work of the previous day, giving car numbers, initials, kinds of grain, and weights. These reports also showed notations of leaks or any other bad-order condition of the cars which might have resulted, or did result, in a shortage. When leaky cars are discovered a special report is made by the weigher and the leak designated on the reverse side of the written report, which has a diagram of a freight car.

Our attention was called to the Minnesota statute, which requires all shippers—

I want to invoke your attention to this:

Our attention was called to the Minnesota statute which requires all shippers to place a card on the grain door of the car shipped, giving the outweight, so that in case of a discrepancy as between local weights and terminal weights an immediate investigation can be made to determine such discrepancy, for it is very obvious that such an investigation will be of more value if made at once instead of after days or weeks have elapsed.

If the name and address of the shipper appear on these shipping cards and the weigher's report shows such car to be in bad order, a letter is at once sent to the address given and a copy of the weigher's report inclosed, which can be used in making a claim against the transportation company for the grain lost in transit. Mr. Quist assured us, in this connection, that a just claim accompanied by such an official report is hardly ever rejected by the transportation companies, but usually settled promptly. We wish to emphasize the importance of this to our shippers—of weighing the grain and inclosing a card in the car showing the outweights, as a basis for recovery in case of shortage.

It is the North Dakota commission that has this to say:

We next visited the electric steel elevator at Minneapolis, which, as the name thereof would indicate, is built entirely of steel, having round steel tanks for storage purposes. This elevator, being fireproof, is exempt from the Minnesota law, which requires that all grain stored in public elevators must be insured in favor of the owner—

It is a matter I had forgotten to state, that except in fireproof elevators, when the grain is stored there, the company owning the elevator is required to take out an insurance for the benefit of the grain holders—

thus saving a great deal of money, as the insurance rate on grain is quite high. At this elevator we made a very close inspection of the system of weighing in vogue, which is identical with the system generally in operation at Minneapolis, Superior, and Duluth. An assistant State weigher was stationed on the ground floor of the elevator. His duty is to keep a record of the seals of the cars about to be weighed. He makes a careful examination of the car in order to detect any bad order or leaky conditions, and it is also his duty to see that the car is properly swept out after being unloaded. He then notifies the State weigher, who is stationed in the upper story or cupola of the elevator, that the car has been unloaded and the contents thereof elevated. The scales in this elevator, as in most all other of the terminal elevators, are located in the cupola, most of them having a weighing capacity of from 85,000 to 120,000 pounds. The scales are of the so-called "hopper-scale" variety. The scale beams are equipped with a register device, which prints the weight on the ticket. The scale hoppers are also provided with a Neale patent indicator, which is not only a check against a leaky scale hopper, but against accidents and even dishonesty. In weighing the grain, after it is elevated into the hopper, two men are employed—one is a State weigher, representing the State, and the other some employee, representing the particular elevator company or mill where the grain is being handled. Each of these men keeps a separate record. They check up their weights at the scale before the grain is dropped from the hopper with a view that no error can be made, and especially when it is further checked by the so-called automatic "type-register" ticket. There is also a device which indicates when the scale hopper has been opened, and which makes it impossible to receive other grain into the hopper before the same has been completely emptied. When the day's work is ended the State weigher makes out a full report, in duplicate, of his day's work, which is sent to the State weighmaster's office, together with the automatic register ticket, where they are again checked by clerks with report sheets to detect any error that may have been made in the report. This is done for the purpose of still further insuring the correctness of the official certificates to be issued by the weighing department. These certificates are issued in the first instance to the consignee of the grain in question or upon application in duplicate form to any person or persons who have any interest in the grain so weighed.

Our board next made a visit to the Pillsbury "A" mill. Here we examined into the condition of the cars that were standing in the mill yard preparatory to being unloaded. Several of these cars showed indications of having leaked while in transit and were in a condition unfit for carrying grain. Investigation proved that State employees had made this inspection and had made a complete record of conditions. The system of weighing in vogue at this mill was also inspected, and was found to be about the same as that at the elevator just described. This mill has a daily capacity of 17,000 barrels of flour.

We next visited the Phoenix mill, where the weighing of the grain unloaded there was done on a track scale, also under supervision of the State weighing department. The system in vogue here we found to be this, that the gross weight of a car and contents were first ascertained and then the grain is unloaded and the empty car reweighed to ascertain the tare. In no case is the stencil weight marked on the car taken for the tare. No reliance is placed on the stencil weight on cars. Moreover, at these track scales all cars are detached from other cars while being weighed. We were informed in this connection that about one-third of the different stations where State weighing is in force at Minneapolis were equipped with such track scales. These track scales are equipped with the same safety devices and automatic registers that are used on the hopper scales.

After describing where the weighing is done—the two kinds of weighing: one the hopper system, taking it up to the top and weighing it, and the other the platform weighing—the commission proceeds:

Our attention was called to the fact that all State weighers are under $5,000 bonds, conditioned upon the faithful and honest discharge of their duties as such. Again, our attention was called to the fact that aside from the constant scale supervision by an experienced scale expert employed by the State, the shipments from elevators to mills, or from scale to scale, where State weighing was in force, were carefully watched with a view of ascertaining whether these scales weighed the same. One of the purposes of this is to detect any scale getting out of order.

This practically concluded our investigation into the public weighing system at Minneapolis. A few days later, however, we resumed such investigation as to the system at Duluth and Superior, and there we found that practically the same system was in operation, conducted in the same manner.

We found in pursuing this investigation—

that an unusually large number of cars are received at terminal points in bad order, cars that are received in such condition that it is quite obvious that more or less loss has been sustained while in transit—losses that in most cases, perhaps, should be borne by the transportation companies, inasmuch as it is only right and proper that a transportation company should in the first instance furnish a car in good condition and deliver its contents intact to the consignee. Responsibility for discrepancies occurring while in transit should be in most cases borne by the transportation companies. We also found that at Duluth and Minneapolis 85 per cent of all the grain was weighed on so-called "hopper scales."

Scales taken up:

Furthermore, that it appears that there is a regular shrinkage of about 30 pounds per 1,000 bushels caused by hauling, as it is a well-recognized fact that grain can not be handled without a loss when elevated and weighed in hopper scales.

One of the complaints that the Senator from North Dakota made was that they deducted 30 pounds out of each carload for shrinkage, and so forth. There is no law for it and that custom has since been abandoned. There was a time when, out of a carload of wheat, for in a carload of wheat there are now generally from 1,000 to 1,200 bushels, they deducted 30 pounds, or half a bushel, out of the 1,000 or 1,200 bushels as a matter of shrinkage. This North Dakota commission that I am reading from continues:

It appears to this board that this is an injustice to the shipper, and we would recommend as an improvement to the present system of weighing, and in perfect fairness to the shipper, that all grain be weighed on track scales before unloading instead of hopper scales.

TERMINAL INSPECTION OF GRAIN.

Our board next—

This is the North Dakota board—

Our board next took up the matter of terminal inspection of grain, and in this connection made careful and diligent inquiry into the system in vogue as to grade and to dockage. The Minnesota terminal-inspection system was established by an act of the legislature in 1885, and has been in operation since that time under the provisions of the general law, as amended from time to time. The terminal-inspection law was the outgrowth of a demand on the part of the farmers of Minnesota for a system different from commercial inspection, which obtained prior to the enactment of the Minnesota grain and railroad laws of 1885. Prior to this time the inspection of grain at the Minnesota terminals was in the hands of men who were appointed by the chamber of commerce.

It was claimed by shippers that such an arrangement was too one-sided, giving the purchaser of the grain practically the sole privilege of fixing its grade and its dockage. Under the present system, the State becomes the arbiter between the shipper and the buyer. As originally established, this system was conducted almost entirely on the basis of outside or car-door inspection. When a carload of grain—

And here they proceed to describe it—

When a carload of grain reached the terminal market, it was placed by the railroad company upon special tracks called inspection tracks, which were provided for in each railroad yard. A State grain sampler appeared in the morning, as soon as it was light enough to see, accompanied by an inspector. He first took a record of the car number and initials, also a record of the number of the car seal, which he had to break in order to enter the car. He then took a hollow brass tube, called a probe and by plunging this tube down through the grain to the bottom of the car in five or more places he secured a fair simple of the grain throughout the entire car.

Now, this is what the North Dakota commission said:

These several probes were deposited at the door of the car, from which the inspector made his inspection and fixed the dockage. The sampler then resealed the car—

I may say that since this time the samples are sent to the inspector; they are no longer inspected in front of the car.

The sampler then resealed the car, keeping a record of the State inspection seal, applied in place of the broken railroad seal. While a State inspector was determining the grade of the grain in the car in question, a sampler employed by the chamber of commerce at Minneapolis, or the boards of trade at Duluth and Superior, also took a sample, which sample was turned over to the consignee of the car for exhibition in the chamber or board of trade. The chamber of commerce and the board of trade also keep a complete seal record. Such was the system originally employed. In later years the Minnesota Railroad and Warehouse Commission, who are charged with the supervision by law of the inspection and weighing departments, have made several innovations. The most important is doubtless the one that there is no more car-door or outside inspection.

That is what I called attention to a moment ago.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. NELSON. I yield.

Mr. WEST. I do not think I made the point clear to the Senator a few moments ago in reference to the comparison. I have not yet learned the difference on a comparison between the State inspector and an inspector of the board. They both go there and inspect?

Mr. NELSON. No; they do not inspect.

Mr. WEST. Well, they get samples?

Mr. NELSON. That is all.

Mr. WEST. And those samples are inspected subsequently?

Mr. NELSON. Yes.

Mr. WEST. Now, what I wish to know is whether there is any comparison between the inspections made by the State and the board of trade?

Mr. NELSON. No; there is no inspection by the board of trade. The Senator misapprehends the situation.

Mr. WEST. Then, may I ask a further question?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. WEST. The sale is made on the inspection of the board of trade, is it not?

Mr. NELSON. No, sir; not at the chamber of commerce. I have tried to repeat that several times. I am sorry the Senator was not here.

Mr. WEST. Perhaps I was out at the time, but what I wish to know is the relations sustained between the inspections made by the State and the inspections made by the board of trade?

Mr. NELSON. There is no inspection by the board of trade, and there is no relation between the two. The board of trade simply sends its man there to get samples of the grain, and those samples are brought to the chamber of commerce and spread out upon the table. They are not graded by the chamber of commerce. Their samplers simply bring a specimen of the wheat and a ticket showing from what car it is taken, where it came from, to identify it, and it is sold in the chamber of commerce for cash by the sample that is laid on the board.

Mr. WEST. Perhaps I have misstated it when I use the term "board of trade." But the sale is made on that inspection?

Mr. NELSON. No; it is not made on it. It is made on looking at the grain on the table. There is no inspection or grading of it.

Mr. WEST. Well, who grades it when it is sold?

Mr. NELSON. There is no grading of what is sold on the board of trade. It is sold by sample. I quoted from the book here yesterday, and I will quote from this report as I go further on and show the same thing.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, that we may have a clear understanding, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question there?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have shipped some grain myself, and my colleague ships a great many carloads every year. Although the system the Senator speaks of is in vogue and samples are taken before the exchange, and those samples, we will say, are not graded at all; but every time the commission merchant sends me back my account or my colleague's account it shows that this grain was graded at a certain price; that it was docked a certain number of pounds per bushel; that the price was a certain price; that it was sold there at that price at that hour; and when I look at the reports I find it is sold for the exact price that the grain was at that hour. So I can not see how it is sold by sample. While the sample may guide in the matter, I can not see how it is sold by sample when they always report back to me that it is sold at a certain grade, reporting on that grade and the price on that grade.

Mr. NELSON. But the price is made by the chamber of commerce upon the sample laid on the table.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the junior Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. NELSON. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator from Minnesota is correct to a certain extent. There is a little ticket placed in the little pan where they have the sample, and on that ticket is marked the condition of the grain and the weight of it, and, of course, that is the grade.

Mr. NELSON. Who marks the ticket? That is not done by the grain inspector.

Mr. GRONNA. The ticket is marked.

Mr. NELSON. Not by the State officer.

Mr. GRONNA. It may not be marked by the State officer, but it will be marked by the man who takes it up.

Mr. NELSON. It will be marked by the sampler of the board or the chamber of commerce, but not by any State officer.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will further permit me, we will say now there is a car of No. 1 northern grain. The sample may be a good sample of No. 1 northern, or it may be a poor sample of No. 1 northern. If it is a good sample, it will naturally command a premium. Of course, that is an advantage to the farmer. I will admit that it is an advantage to the farmer that the samples are shown, because if it is a good sample of No. 1 northern, he will get the advantage.

Mr. NELSON. Does not the Senator know that if he will look at the quotations in the Minneapolis papers he will find No. 1 northern quoted at different prices at cash sales, and that is because it is sold by sample?

Mr. GRONNA. That is true; but it is also true, Mr. President, that each little basin, as I call it, has a ticket in it showing the car number, the weight, the quality, and the conditions all through.

Mr. NELSON. That is not prepared by the State official.

Mr. GRONNA. Of course, the grain is sold on the grade from the condition of the sample.

Mr. NELSON. Of course, it is sold by sample. That is what I said. It is sold by the sample.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. BRADY. I should like to ask the Senator a question relative to the loss in weight. I do not exactly understand the Senator, whether the 30 pounds on a thousand bushels was an arbitrary loss.

Mr. NELSON. There was an arbitrary rule that they adopted, but that rule is obsolete now; they do not adhere to it at all.

Mr. BRADY. How do they figure the loss?

Mr. NELSON. They do not figure any now.

Mr. BRADY. They have discontinued that practice?

Mr. NELSON. They have discontinued the practice now. I do not know how many years ago they discontinued it.

Mr. BRADY. I understood from some discussion here on the floor that that had been done, and I was anxious to know the facts in regard to it.

Mr. NELSON. There was such a rule at one time. That is, it was a general rule. It was conceded on all hands that there was liable to be some shrinkage in shipment, and so they adopted, after awhile, an arbitrary rule without figuring and determining it. They have now abandoned that rule. That is no longer in vogue; but you can see how slight it was. Carloads now run from 1,000 bushels up to 1,500 bushels, and 30 pounds on a carload would not surely be a great deal of shrinkage.

Mr. BRADY. It is not a great deal. I am asking for information only. That is not in vogue now?

Mr. NELSON. No; it is not in vogue; that is, it is not the rule now.

Mr. BRADY. If the Senator please, I should like to have a little further information relative to the question asked by the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. WEST]. I am not yet clear in my mind regarding the grading of the wheat that is purchased by sample on the Board of Trade in Minneapolis. I understood the Senator to say in his previous remarks that the State inspector would go around the car——

Mr. NELSON. Not the State inspector.

Mr. BRADY. Who goes through the car?

Mr. NELSON. It is the State sampler. He goes and takes a sample. That is all he does.

Mr. BRADY. Whom does he represent—the State or the board of trade?

Mr. NELSON. He represents the State. There is a State sampler and there is a sampler who represents the chamber of commerce. To make it plain to the Senator, suppose there is a carload of grain out here. I am a sampler for the State, and the Senator is a sampler for the chamber of commerce. We both go there and take a sample out of that car. I take my sample to the State inspector, and he inspects it. The Senator takes his sample to the chamber of commerce, and there it is put in a pan with a ticket, and so forth, and spread upon the table.

Mr. BRADY. The Senator has made it very plain. I think I understand it now.

Mr. NELSON. On the chamber of commerce the grain is sold upon that sample.

Mr. BRADY. But what becomes of the inspection made by the State grain inspector?

Mr. NELSON. The State inspects that grain. It takes a sample and gives the grade to it, and pronounces what the dockage is.

Mr. BRADY. Does that govern the board of trade in buying and selling?

Mr. NELSON. No; it does not govern the board of trade. The board of trade itself, as a board, does not do any buying or selling. That is done by commission men, who buy and sell on the board of trade to the millers.

Mr. BRADY. What does the Senator say is the effect of the inspection by the State grain inspector?

Mr. NELSON. The main value of that inspection, as far as I can see it, is that cash sales are made by sample on the board of trade. The chief value of the State inspection is that it relates to the question of future sales or to what we call hedging.

There is a good deal of that done. As I explained yesterday, when, I think, the Senator was not here, a mill buys, say, 10,000 bushels of grain to-day to be made into flour. They do not know how the future market will be. That wheat may drop in price a great deal before they get it made into flour and sold. So, to protect themselves, at the same time they buy that wheat they sell to deliver in the future, and in that way they accomplish a sort of insurance to protect themselves. If the Senator had been here and heard the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], who explained that system more clearly than I have done, he could see the great value of it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. McCUMBER. If it will not disturb the Senator in the slightest——

Mr. NELSON. Not if it is reasonable; but I want to get through. I do not want to be interrupted too much.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not want to impose upon the Senator at all, but I wish to ask him if all the future sales are not filled with certificates from the warehouses and not with certificates as to the car of grain that is unloaded into the warehouse, and the warehouse certificates are applied to fill future contracts?

Mr. NELSON. Here is the point about that. I sell a thousand bushels of No. 1 northern, to be delivered, say, at Minneapolis or at Duluth in June next. I must deliver wheat that at the terminal will pass at that grade. I have agreed to sell and deliver, say, 10,000 bushels of No. 1 northern, or No. 2 northern, or No. 1 hard, as the case may be. Now, when the time comes I have a right to deliver the actual wheat. If I see fit to deliver the actual wheat, instead of settling the differences, as they do at the clearing houses, the man who receives that wheat has a right to ask for a State inspection. He has a right to show that the thousand bushels of wheat I deliver come up to the grade that I have agreed to sell. There is where the State inspection applies.

But I want to proceed and read from this report, because it throws a good deal of light. This is the report of the North Dakota commission upon our system.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before the Senator leaves that point——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. NELSON. I yield.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to suggest that in addition to the very useful purpose stated by the Senator from Minnesota the official grade of it is authentic information to the world of the visible supply of that quality of grain in the open markets of the United States, and to that degree they furnish most valuable information not only to the millers but to the trade generally.

Mr. NELSON. Yes; all that is true. I will quote further from this report, and it will show what I have been trying to explain to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WEST] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY]. I am reading from the report of the North Dakota commission upon the Minnesota inspection.

All grain is now inspected inside. The grain sampler—

I wish Senators would listen now, so that they will not be mistaken about this matter—

All grain is now inspected inside. The grain sampler, instead of depositing the several probes of grain taken by him at the car door, to be then and there inspected, now deposits them in a small sack, called a sample sack. In this sack, together with the grain, he places a ticket of the car, on which has been marked the number of the car and initials. The sample is then taken or expressed to the State inspection officer, where, under light, it is inspected by expert inspectors. The grain dockage, if there by any dockage, is then determined by means of apparatus adapted to the work, consisting of finely adjusted scales and sieves of different kinds.

In the event that the shipper or consignee is not satisfied with either grade or dockage, as the case may be, of the grain in the car in question, it is his privilege to call for a reinspection. The grain is then at once reinspected by the chief deputy inspector or his assistant, using for their reinspection purpose the same sample as originally based upon. In case either of the parties is still dissatisfied with the reinspection, it is their privilege to call for an appeal, which means that the merits of the case will then be considered by the State board of grain appeals, a board of nine members, three of whom officiate at Minneapolis, three at Duluth, and three at Superior. This is an entirely independent board, being appointed by the governor of the State, while the inspectors and weighers are appointed either by the railroad and warehouse commission themselves or, with their consent, by the chief inspector of grain. In Superior they are appointed by the State grain commissioners of Wisconsin. In case of controversy as to the grade or dockage, a sample of the grain being submitted to the board of appeals, an entirely new sample is procured from the same car. Thus, while the original inspector and the chief deputy inspector reviewing his inspection use the same sample, the board of appeals procures an entirely new sample from the same car.

In pursuance of the system of indoor inspection, and with a view of expediting the disposition of cars upon arrival at the terminals, thus alleviating the annual car shortage, the Minnesota commission have established sampling stations in interior towns in that State. Thus, there is a sampling station at Wilmar, at Melrose, at Cass Lake, at Sandstone, and at Staples.

Grain samplers in the employ of the inspection department are stationed at these places, which in all cases are division points. As the grain comes to these points it is sidetracked, and the State samplers, together with the commercial samplers, obtain samples of the grain in the same manner as indicated above. These samples are then inclosed in a strong wooden box, securely locked, to which there are two keys, one in the possession of the sampling foreman at the interior point and the other in possession of the inspection office at Minneapolis or Duluth, as the case may be. The samples, when so secured, are sent by express to the terminal point which is the destination of the cars of grain of which they are samples. It thus quite frequently happens that the samples are received some time before the arrival of the car of grain that they actually represent. This affords plenty of time for original inspection and reinspection, if required. In this manner all the preliminary details are settled when the car arrives, and it can be immediately ordered to its final destination, thus assuring prompt unloading and disposition for further use. The grade and dockage given by the board of appeals is final.

I quote further:

Our board also found that the rules that govern the grading and docking of grain at the terminals in Minnesota are established at the beginning of each grain year by the members of the board of appeals. They are charged by law with meeting every year and establishing such grades as in their judgment the conditions may warrant. As soon as the grade and dockage of any carload of grain has been completed or finally determined a certificate of inspection is issued by the State inspection department. Thereafter the carload of grain may be sold or delivered at any mill or elevator for unloading. In this connection we desire to state that it is also made the duty of the grain samplers during their work in the railroad yards to make a careful examination of each car of grain with which they come in contact for the purpose of discovering any leaky conditions that may exist, and they are also charged with reporting to the office any indications on the surface of the grain in the car which would indicate that any grain might have been removed, either by leakage or otherwise, from such car.

I will further show you how careful we are in Minnesota in these matters.

I quote further from the report—

have also established an important branch of the State inspection and weighing system, that of watching or patrolling the terminal yards, whereby cars loaded with grain are continually watched while going through these yards, in order to detect leaky conditions that may exist, as well as to guard against pilfering.

So you understand, we not only have this inspection system by which these samples may be taken and the grain inspected, but we have a police there in the yards where the cars are brought in who go there at once and examine the cars and see that they are not in a leaky condition and that no grain is stolen or pilfered from them.

The terminal railroad yards are usually located in outlying districts where the vigilance of special watchmen is required. Very often leaky cars are found and roported by these special watchmen that would not show to be leaky except when in motion, for cars often leak in the yards when being switched about, which does not show any evidence of leakage when standing still. A great deal has also been accomplished in this respect in protecting the property of shippers from pilferage, a loss against which the local shipper would be almost powerless if it occurred. These special watchmen cover the entire terminal system wherever cars of grain are handled, and they also see to it that cars are properly swept at the different unloading stations. These special watchmen assigned to this patrol service are empowered with police authority.

The commissioners were treated with all possible courtesy by the chiefs of the respective departments, both in Wisconsin and Minnesota, and they apparently had nothing to conceal.

When the carloads come to the terminals we not only grade the grain properly and inspect it properly, but we have appointed a police there to see that the cars are in a good condition and that there is no pilfering and no leakage or anything.

"HANDLING OF THE GRAIN AT TERMINALS."

This is the North Dakota Commission—

Grain, after being inspected and weighed, at terminals, is disposed of by going to mills or terminal elevators. Some of the coarse grain is unloaded by teams from the car. Grain that goes to the several mills, in most all cases, can be considered as sold to these mills for manufacturing purposes, as it stands to reason that a mill would not buy grain that it did not intend to use for some purpose.

Here I call the attention of the Senators from North Dakota to this, and this is from their own commission:

As a matter of fact, over 95 per cent of all the grain that arrives at the terminals has passed from the original possession of the raiser of the grain into the possession of the several line, independent, or farmers' elevators that operate the local elevators on several railroads that lead to these terminals.

This is the testimony of the North Dakota commission, that over 95 per cent of the grain when it reaches Minneapolis has ceased to be the grain of the farmer and has gone into the hands of the middlemen; that it is owned either by the local elevator company or is owned by the terminal elevator company.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. BRADY. I merely want to ask the Senator relative to the description he read a few moments ago as to the policing of the tracks and safeguarding the grain after it arrives in Minneapolis.

Mr. NELSON. And in Duluth.

Mr. BRADY. And in Duluth. Was that from the report of the North Dakota commission?

Mr. NELSON. Yes; they reported that we had done that in Minnesota.

Mr. BRADY. The language used is that of the commission?

Mr. NELSON. Yes; this is what that commission says. I am reading from the report of the North Dakota commission. They do not give us such a bad character. We not only inspect North Dakota grain and grade it, just as we do our own, but we provide special detectives and policemen to look after their cars as well as our own. We are not so very bad, after all.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. NELSON. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. I would not have interrupted the Senator except for the fact that he directed his remarks to me, calling my especial attention to what he was reading with reference to the fact that 95 per cent of all our grain by the time it arrives in Minneapolis has passed out of the farmers' hands. I think that is approximately correct, but the value of what these elevators receive must get back to us.

Mr. NELSON. That is an argument. I am anxious to proceed, and I trust if there is to be any argument the Senator will make it in his own time. I am willing to answer questions and explain matters as I proceed with my remarks, but I do not like to have other arguments made in the course of my address. I called the Senator's attention to this report because it was the report of the Senator's own State commission. I continue the quotation:

Less than 5 per cent of the grain received at these terminals belongs to original shippers or farmers. Investigation at local markets shows that most all farmers raising grain dispose of the same at the local markets—and their interest in terminal inspection, weighing, and prices is measured with the indirect effect of such conditions. As these conditions are good or bad, they reflect themselves back on the producers. The shipper of grain to the terminals has his option, if he desires to temporarily store his grain, to patronize either public or semipublic terminal elevators.

Now, listen to this—

When he ships the grain to the termin[illegible] he has a right to patronize the public or semipublic elevators.

The public elevators are licensed as such, and their business is under the jurisdiction and supervision of the railroad and warehouse commission of that State. Daily reports are made from these houses to the State warehouse registrar.

Now, listen—

These houses are not permitted to mix grain of different grades together. While it is permissible to mix the grain of different owners, the grade being the same, it is not allowed to mix that of superior and inferior grades. Thus the identity of the grain stored is retained.

That is in our public elevators. I am reading, I repeat, the report of the North Dakota commission.

It is inspected in by the State inspector, and inspected out in the same manner. The weighing in and out is on the same plan, and under State supervision.

Here is another point:

These elevators offer an opportunity that independent shippers and others may afford themselves of, who may consider their grain to be of superior quality, and who desire to dispose of the same by special sale or otherwise.

By utilizing these public elevators shippers can, if they so desire, preserve the identity of their grain by special binning, the same—

That is, if I ship grain to any of these public elevators, I can have it put in a separate bin and its identity preserved, if I so desire.

This feature of special warehousing being given them by law. In view of this it is quite remarkable that so little use by shippers is made of the public terminal elevators, particularly by those raisers and shippers of grain who are fortunate in owning and producing the higher grades.

That is what the commission says; that it is unfortunate, that while this facility is afforded to the farmers who raise a superior quality of grain to have it stored in separate bins, they fail to avail themselves of it.

It would seem that they, above all others, would take advantage of an opportunity to get the higher prices that the superior grade of their grain entitles them to. The latter suggestion appears particularly pertinent, as it would affect North Dakota farmers and shippers, who, this board feels, are the producers of the better grades of grain.

There are also private elevators. According to the Minnesota law, which I read a while ago, elevators that receive grain for storage for the public are public elevators, and they are governed by the rules to which I have referred. We have also in the cities what are called private elevators, the owners of which buy the grain they store and take no other grain into the elevators than what they buy and own.

At the present time there is one of these public elevators at Minneapolis and one at Duluth. In addition to acquiring a license for the proper conduct of their business, they are also bonded to the State of Minnesota in a sum sufficient to guarantee the performance of their duties as public warehouses, in accordance with the provision of law.

In speaking of semipublic elevators we refer to those houses where grain is inspected in and out by State inspectors, and also weighed in and out by State weighers. There are a large number of these houses, most all of which are owned by private parties. We refer to them as semipublic elevators under State supervision of grades and weights. This does not mean, however, that the identity of the grain going into these houses must be preserved; that is optional with the owner of the grain. If he so desires, he can mix grain of different grades. These semipublic houses handle a great bulk of the grain that comes to the terminals. While they have public inspection and weighing, they are private in operation, inasmuch as the grain they handle belongs either to the elevator or to the private parties for whom they warehouse and handle the same.

This is a phase of the terminal grain business that has been quite generally misunderstood by our North Dakota shippers and farmers, who seem to think that all the elevators of Minneapolis and Duluth are public houses, where the identity of the grain must be preserved and as received. We here desire to strongly emphasize the distinction that exists between public and semipublic houses.

The report also calls attention to another fact, and I invite the attention of the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] to this, in view of the question that he asked my friend from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] on yesterday:

Another class of terminal houses that invited and engrossed the attention of our board are the so-called grain hospitals or mixing houses. Of these there are quite a number at the terminals. As their name suggests, they make a business of cleaning, scouring, and mixing grain for profit. The grain that is not in a warehousable condition is conditioned, smutty grain is scoured, grain of inferior grade or no grade is mixed with grain of better grades to insure the market grade or quality. Wheat that is too light in weight for a certain grade is mixed with heavier wheat, so that it may acquire the proper weight. Smutty wheat—which in its dirty condition would be unfit for human food is scoured or washed and brought up to a No. 2, or sometimes even a No. 1, grade. Foreign seeds and foul stuff are removed from the grain. On the whole, the grain hospital system is a business practice whereby inferior and unmarketable grain is improved and made marketable. That this process requires the mixing with the poor grain of some of the better or perhaps the best grain is admitted.

It is very curious that at the end of their report this commission recommend that the State of North Dakota build terminal elevators at Duluth and Minneapolis. That is a part of their recommendation; but, in addition, they recommend not only that the State build terminal elevators, but that North Dakota build a terminal hospital for the grain. Here is what their report says:

In another place in this report we have described the business of the so-called grain "hospitals" or mixing houses. The improvement of grain by this process has become quite modern, and in our judgment permanent, and we would suggest that the benefits of thus improving grain ought to be within the reach of farmers and shippers from our State.

That is, from North Dakota.

With this end in view we would suggest the acquirement or operation of grain hospitals—one to be at Minneapolis and the other at the head of the Lakes, to be operated in connection with our terminal elevators. This would afford an opportunity for our North Dakota farmers or shippers who are unfortunate to come into possession of or raise smutty grain or whose grain has been damaged by inclement weather or who have not the facilities for cleaning grain before delivering same at the local market to ship their grain to these houses for the purpose of improvement, they to become the beneficiaries of the increased market value by reason of such improvement and to be recompensed in a reasonable manner for the offal from such grain.

We inquired into the cost of cleaning and improving grain at these houses, and found that such cost ranges from one-half to 2½ cents per bushel, according to the condition of the grain handled. For original cleaning the usual charge is from one-half cent to 1 cent per bushel, but if it becomes necessary to scour or wash grain the cost is materially increased, being from 2 cents to 2½ cents per bushel. However, in view of the largely increased market value of grain treated in this manner, it is quite obvious that still larger profits should accrue to those who would avail themselves of the opportunity of thus improving their grain.

A great deal of stress has been laid on the fact that these "mixing houses," as they call them, or, as they are designated in this report, these "hospitals," take inferior grades of grain and improve them by scouring, cleaning, fanning, and airing them until they become a higher grade. This report is fair enough to recognize the necessity of that. It describes these "grain hospitals" and it recommends that the State of North Dakota, for the benefit of the farmers of that State, establish a grain hospital, one of such grain hospital elevators to be in Duluth and another in Minneapolis.

So that after all they are not so hostile in North Dakota to these grain hospitals, or mixing houses, as it has been made to appear.

Mr. President, those who are familiar with the grain business know how it oftentimes happens that by rain, bad weather, peculiar climatic conditions, and other drawbacks grain becomes injured and damaged, and that unless we have a so-called grain hospital, where they can take care of the grain for the time being, the farmers would have to sell such damaged grain for hog and cattle feed. In my own experience I have had a great deal of trouble when there has been much rain on the grain while it stood in the shock. It would in such case have a tendency to sprout and become damaged in the shock and in the stack.

A great deal of stress has been laid on the fact that these elevators take in grain of a lower grade and ship out grain of a higher grade. While there may be some apparent injustice in some cases, it comes chiefly from improving the condition of the grain. I have had a little experience which illustrates the good that sometimes results from thoroughly cleaning the grain. In 1904, about 10 years ago—I am not exactly sure about the date, but the Senator from North Dakota, sitting in front of me, I think will remember it—we had in wheat what we called the black rust, something we never before had had in Minnesota. We always have from time to time a little of the red rust, but, as a rule, it has not affected our wheat very much. It has frequently affected our barley and our oats; but that year we had a black rust, and the effect of it was that the wheat did not ripen well; there was a good deal of shrunken, light wheat in the field. In the year to which I refer I had the black rust on my farm, and when I hauled my grain to the elevator men in the fall—there was not much grass seed in it; there was very little foul seed in it; its chief defect was shrunken and not fully ripened berries, the result of the black rust; there was not any smut in it; it had a little wild oats and some pigeon grass in it—when I took that grain to the elevator I could only get a No. 2 grade for it. I had some of that wheat left in the spring, and I had to use it for seed. I ran it twice through a fanning mill in my own granary on the farm in order to clean it and get seed suitable for planting. After I had done my seeding I had, perhaps, 40 or 50 bushels left, and I hauled that wheat to the same elevator man who had taken the wheat from that bin in the fall when I was given a No. 2 grade, and he gave me No. 1 for it. That shows how grain may improve by a system of fanning and cleaning through a fanning mill.

I quote further from said report as follows:

It suggests itself to our board that the modern grain hospital under proper supervision would serve a public purpose providing the profits they made were indirectly reflected back to the producer of the superior grade which they handled. These houses, together with the mills and semipublic houses, are also the beneficiaries of the sale of the immense amount of screenings or dirty grain. This brings us to that particular feature of our official duty which requires that we shall "make full inquiries into the dockage of grain and the expense of cleaning grain, and the disposition of screenings, and their approximate value." Screenings are here designated in the law as dirt, foul stuff, and foreign seeds contained in the grain as raised and brought to market. It presents one of the lamentable features of local disputes as between the seller and buyer.

In the early days, when the farmers cleaned their grain and when because of new and clean ground there was little or no foreign stuff in the grain there was no dockage. Later it became necessary and to-day dockage is recognized as a necessary and legitimate practice and has been officially sanctioned for years. Wheat, flaxseed, and rye are now officially docked at the terminal. The last few years have shown a very large increase in dockage, as would appear from the records. Thus, in 1904 the average dockage was 21.1 ounces per bushel; in 1905 it was 18.6 ounces per bushel; in 1906 it was 27.9 ounces per bushel; in 1907 it was 32.2 ounces per bushel; and in 1908, 39.2 ounces per bushel. This latter is the record for the crop year ending August 31, 1908.

All of this emphasizes the growing importance of this feature of the grain business. Not many years ago screenings or dockage were of little or no commercial value, being burned, as a rule, under boilers in engine rooms of mills or elevators. To-day they are used for various commercial purposes, ranging in value from $7 to $15 per ton.

The commissioner, after giving figures as to the amount of screenings, add:

In our own State of North Dakota, owing to practically no regulation, this board would feel warranted in doubling the figures.

We have approximately the same number of local elevators in North Dakota as they have in Minnesota.

This appears to us altogether the more remarkable when we consider the fact that the North Dakota lands are much newer and ought to produce, and, in our judgment, do produce, cleaner grain than the long-farmed land of Minnesota. In view of this we feel justified in estimating the commercial value of the screenings now practically given away by North Dakota grain raisers at not less than $150,000 per year. The North Dakota grain producer does not only give away this vast amount of screenings, but he is in addition taxed the regular amount of freight that accrues on shipments of grain in which the same is contained. It may appear impracticable, but nevertheless the waste of this immense amount of stuff, which is suitable for food purposes for stock, would suggest the idea that it should be kept at home and used by our farmers instead of being given away and paying freight on the same besides.

Our own farmers are as foolish as the North Dakota farmers in this respect. I have already explained that years ago our local elevators, when they got the grain from the farmers, they would fan it and clean it in the local elevator and then ship the clean wheat to the terminals; but the trouble was they could not get rid of the offal—the screenings. The farmers would take a little of the screenings home for the chickens and the pigs, and the people in the villages would come and get a little for the chickens, too, but the elevators found it very difficult to dispose of the screenings, so they abandoned that system of cleaning the wheat at the local elevators, and they now ship it in an unclean condition to the terminal elevators where it is cleaned and where, as I have said, they have opened a great market for the screenings.

The report further adds:

the farmers' elevators, or independent elevators, or even the line elevators, might equip their houses with cleaning machinery, so that these screenings might be kept at home and probably ground into feed.

I suppose they have tried it in North Dakota, as we tried it in Minnesota. The farmers would not take but a small amount of the screenings from the local elevators, and so the local elevators were forced to ship the uncleaned wheat to the terminals.

I quote further from the report, as follows:

Screenings as now sold at the terminals are used principally for the feeding of sheep and for the manufacture of food. Thousands of tons of feed are annually shipped into this State, and it would seem to be an act of wisdom to retain our own screenings right at home and use them for such purposes instead of shipping them to Minneapolis, Duluth, and Superior, paying the freight on same, and then shipping the manufactured feed back into this State, which seems to be the logical, or rather the illogical, consequences of our present system.

MINNESOTA LAW GOVERNING AND REGULATING PUBLIC ELEVATORS.

(See Exhibit "F.")

TERMINAL GRADES AND CLASSIFICATION.

Terminal grades, under the Minnesota laws, are established annually by the State board of grain appeals. Formerly this was done by the railroad and warehouse commission, but since 1899 this duty devolves on the separate board appointed by the governor of the State, who are in no wise connected with or responsible to the railroad and warehouse commission. We quote the law relating to this board.

* * * * * * *

Quoting a prominent Twin City grain man: "Fixing price of wheat by committee of chamber of commerce and spread in price of grade is one of the greatest injustices in the grain trade." Our board also inquired into the differences in price, as between the several classes of wheat; there are three classifications of wheat which affect our State, namely, that called northern spring wheat, durum or macaroni wheat, and velvet chaff wheat. The latter wheat as yet has been raised in our State only in very limited quantities. The raising of durum wheat has, however, assumed large proportions, the amount reported as being raised in 1907 being 18,822,630 bushels, as against 50,658,389 bushels of northern spring wheat, as reported to the commissioner of agriculture, by the several licensed local elevators doing business in our State.

These figures suggest the importance that the raising of durum wheat has assumed in our State, and our board felt justified and warranted, in view of this, to make careful and diligent inquiries into the terminal grading and prices, as well as into local grading and prices, as they affected the disposition of this wheat. When we began this investigation we found that this wheat was being graded under the separate classification at the terminals, namely, that of durum wheat. Otherwise the inspection, dockage, and weighing is done in the same manner as that for other wheat. We also found that there was a large difference in the price of this wheat as compared with the corresponding grades of northern spring wheat.

On October 14, 1907, when we first took up this matter, the official difference in price at Minneapolis between No. 1 Northern spring wheat and No. 1 Durum wheat was 17¾ cents. This, we believe, was about the average difference that they obtained at terminal markets during the grain season of 1907. At this time, November, 1908, the difference in price between No. 1 spring wheat and No. 1 Durum at terminals is 16 cents. We also found that the difference at local markets in North Dakota as between Northern spring wheat and corresponding grades of Durum wheat was fully as large and sometimes even larger than the average which we quote for the terminals.

In view of this fact and of the generally recognized fact of the superiority of the Durum wheat our producers are justified in inquiring and being informed as accurately as possible whether this large discrimination in these two classes of wheat is justified by their flour-making qualities and disposition as to sale, etc. Our board devoted some little time to making inquiries along this line, and in pursuing this course of this investigation we had two objects in view. First, to find out the relative value of these two wheats as to their flour-making qualities. In this respect we submit, together with this report, several scientific tests that have been made by competent analytical chemists, one of whom is Prof. E. F. Ladd, food commissioner of North Dakota, and the other test was made by the Howard Chemical Laboratory, of Minneapolis.

Mr. President, if this report is carefully read through—and I shall insert more of it in my remarks without taking the time of the Senate in reading it—Senators may discover that very little fault is found with the Minnesota grain-inspection system by this board. They complain a great deal about the prices paid for durum or macaroni wheat. The grain-inspecton system of Minnesota does not regulate the prices of grain; it has nothing to do with prices; it inspects and grades; it establishes the grades; and when those grades are established, the price paid is fixed by the men who deal on the grain exchanges, the millers, and other dealers.

Durum or macaroni wheat is a new variety of wheat introduced some years ago by the Agricultural Department in the Northwest for the reason that it was supposed to stand drought better than other kinds of wheat; and I presume it does so. At first, it seemed to be a better yielder per acre and to stand the drought better than the old-fashioned varieties—the Scotch

Fife and the Blue Stem—but the millers did not like it at first. It did not make as white flour as the other wheat and was harder to grind. After a while an export demand for the wheat sprung up, especially from Southern Europe—for macaroni purposes—and this demand tended to increase the price, and then the millers began mixing a small percentage of it with their other wheat, so that in time the price of durum wheat increased till for the last two or three years there has only been a difference of from 4 to 5 cents per bushel between that and other varieties of good spring wheat, and that is about the difference now.

I quote further from the report:

From the observations and inquiries that we made and the information that we were able to obtain we are of the opinion that there is an uncalled for and unjust price discrimination as between northern spring wheat and durum wheat. Inasmuch as this is a subject intimately connected with the matter of interstate commerce, we would suggest that the Federal Government should carefully inquire into the local and terminal purchase of durum wheat and what becomes of the same after it leaves local markets. We deem it quite essential to the proper protection of the grain growers, who are raising durum wheat, that they should receive the full market value for such wheat as demonstrated by its actual flour or food value. We are constrained to believe that at this time they are not receiving such full value, but that large quantities of this wheat are being ground together with northern spring wheat and disposed of in domestic and foreign markets for the full price at value of northern spring wheat flour.

During the present year the Minnesota board of grain appeals has established another classification of wheat, namely, that called "velvet chaff wheat.' This is a comparatively new variety of wheat, and while the same has been grown in Minnesota and South Dakota for some years it has as yet not been very much in our own State. However, it is quite probable that in the course of a few years, on account of its hardiness and superior yield, it will be extensively raised in North Dakota. Up to the present year this velvet chaff wheat was mixed by local buyers with their northern spring wheat and disposed of as such. Millers grinding the same claim to have discovered a perceptible inferiority as between this and the blue-stem variety, and mainly at their request a new classification was established.

The difference in the price of the corresponding grades of northern spring wheat and velvet chaff at this time is 6 cents per bushel. We are not prepared to state as to whether or not this is an unjust discrimination, as we have stated in regard to the difference in prices between durum and northern spring wheat. However, we believe also that in this instance careful investigation by the Federal Government ought to establish the correctness or incorrectness of the difference in price.

While perhaps not strictly germane to the duties and functions of this board, we assume the liberty of briefly stating the modus operandi in vogue at the terminals as to the purchase and sale of grain. This business is conducted almost entirely through the agency of the Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce and the Duluth and Superior Boards of Trade. These are organizations of men engaged in the grain business for the purpose of facilitating such business, organized on the theory that a large volume of grain that finds its way to these terminals necessitates some central place where the same, or samples thereof, can be presented for sale, and where seller and buyer can meet advantageously to make the trades and purchases which their business necessitates. This board is willing to go on record as not favorable to so-called chambers of commerce and boards of trade, but until some better system is adopted they must be tolerated.

These organizations employ grain samplers, whose duty it is to accompany the State grain samplers and to secure proper samples of the grain in cars which are about to be inspected. These samples are presented on tables during the open sessions of the chamber of commerce or board, with an official tag affixed showing what the State inspection was as to such car. This affords a reliable way of presenting and selling the several cars of grain as they are received from day to day. The sales so made by members of these organizations, whose charge is 1 cent per bushel for all kinds of grain except oats, for which a charge is made of one-half cent per bushel. No discrimination is made in the sale of grain, the shipments of individuals receiving the same attention from the commission men, who are members of these organizations, as those of larger concerns.

A complete record is kept of all sales as to time, place, and price, and from this record can be ascertained at any future time the exact price for which any carload of grain may have been sold in the past. These organizations also exercise care as to the financial standing of the several members connected therewith who do a commission business and who solicit consignments of grain from shippers.

I now wish to call attention to another episode in connection with the North Dakota system.

In 1909 the North Dakota Legislature sent a committee of three senators and three representatives to see our legislature and our grain-inspection service as to whether we would not allow North Dakota to appoint on our board of appeals some members from their State. Our State authorities and the members of our legislature were quite willing, and the grain-inspection department was willing; but they submitted to the attorney general of the State the question whether the Legislature of Minnesota could pass a law authorizing them to appoint two members of the grain board of appeals from North Dakota. The attorney general held that under the constitution of Minnesota our State would not have the right to appoint two citizens of North Dakota to sit and act with them officially as members; but the attorney general made a suggestion which I will read. Here is what he says. After first stating that it would be unconstitutional to appoint two members from North Dakota as members of our board of grain appeals, he suggested this:

Appreciating how desirable in the present instance such an arrangement would seem to be, I beg to suggest that if the State of North Dakota should appoint some citizen of that State, to be paid by it, to sit with, but not as a part of, the board of grain appeals of this State; and if the legislature of this State should authorize the same so far as it was concerned, giving such persons full access to all books and records of such board of grain appeals, all the practical advantages of the plan asked for would be effectuated, and no apparent legal objection could arise thereto.

This suggestion was adopted. I have here the correspondence, and I ask to have it inserted in my remarks. The first letter is a letter from Mr. Sundburg, chairman of the senate committee, and Mr. Davis, chairman of the house committee. I have the letter addressed by them to the attorney general. I have the attorney general's reply. I have the letter from Mr. Staples, the head of the railroad and warehouse commission, favoring the plan. I ask to have these letters published.

He says, in this letter:

A remarkable fact in reference to the matter of complaint is that this general complaint against the inspection and weighing service in Minnesota is confined entirely to the State of North Dakota.

I ask to have this correspondence inserted in my remarks without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

GRAIN AND WAREHOUSE COMMISSION,
St. Paul, Minn.

GENTLEMEN: We herewith inclose you copy of a letter, which we had just addressed and mailed to the attorney general of this State.

It was represented to the joint committees of the Senate and House on grain and warehouse by the delegation from North Dakota, that the chamber of commerce of Minneapolis saw no difficulty in a practical way in granting the request of the North Dakota delegation.

At your earliest convenience kindly give us, in writing, the views of the commission on this question: if there be any practical difficulties, what the same are, and if in your judgment such difficulties may be obviated.

Very respectfully, yours,

BENGT. E. SUNDBURG,
Chairman Senate Committee.
ANDREW DAVIS,
Chairman House Committee.

ST. PAUL, MINN., February 4, 1909.

Hon. GEO. T. SIMPSON, Attorney General, St. Paul, Minn.

DEAR SIR: The undersigned, chairman, respectively, of the grain and warehouse committees of the senate and house request your opinion, at your earliest convenience, upon the following matter:

A delegation from the senate and house of the State of North Dakota on yesterday met with the joint committees on grain and warehouse of the senate and house of this State and requested that our laws be so changed that North Dakota could have a representative upon the grain board of appeals at Minneapolis and Duluth, and after a full hearing the said joint committees adopted a motion expressing it as the sense of the committees that the request be granted, upon condition that it could be constitutionally and legally granted, and upon the further condition that it should upon investigation be found to be practical.

At said hearing it developed that a similar request had been made of the State of Wisconsin for representation upon the board of appeals at West Superior, Wis.

We desire your opinion whether, under our constitution, such request can be granted, and, if so, what if any changes would be necessary in our laws in order to permit another State to be represented on the grain appeal board of this State, and what practical difficulties, if any, would stand in the way of carrying out the project.

Very respectfully, yours,

B. E. SUNDBURG,
Chairman Senate Committee.
ANDREW DAVIS,
Chairman House Committee.

ST. PAUL, MINN., February 6, 1909.

Hon. ANDREW DAVIS,
Chairman, Grain and Warehouse Committee,
House of Representatives Building.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your valued favor of January 4, in reference to suggestion that provision be made by law for the appointment on the board of grain appeals of one or more members from some other State than Minnesota, will say the delegation from the Legislature of North Dakota met with this commission and devoted considerable time to the discussion of the question. Naturally the duties of this department make it necessary that we be thoroughly conversant with the subject. It has been necessary in the past for us to refute many charges brought against the Minnesota service by certain persons from without the State, made in most cases without any foundation or real knowledge of the conditions which exist.

There are at the present time—have been for years past and always will be—certain individual complaints which have more or less justification. As long as the question of inspecting grain is dependent upon the personal judgment of man mistakes will be made; also in the weighing "in" and "out" of approximately 400,000,000 bushels of grain annually as we do in our department there will be an occasional mistake made by a weigher, but we wish to say emphatically that there is absolutely no discrimination made in the matter of inspection or weighing of the grain as between that grown in Minnesota and that grown in any other State. In fact, the inspector and weigher, as a rule, has no knowledge where the grain comes from.

A remarkable fact in reference to the matter of complaint is that this general complaint against the inspection and weighing service in Minnesota is confined entirely to the State of North Dakota.

We believe, however, that considering the fact that the State of North Dakota sends into our terminals for inspection and weighing approximately 100,000,000 bushels of grain annually, it might be good policy to permit the appointment of two members out of the six members on the boards of appeal from outside the State of Minnesota; this would enable the selection of two men from the State of North Dakota, if that would seem to be the most proper and reasonable thing to do by the appointing power. By the placing of two men from outside the State on the board of appeals, an opportunity is given for exercising a voice in the matter of making rules, the establishment of grades, and the overseeing of the manner in which the work of weighing and inspection is done, and would enable the people from the outside to secure information which they would be willing to accept as reliable, and by this means, in our judgment, the cause for complaint would soon fade away.

If the constitution will permit legislation of this character, our commission can see no objection whatever to the plan.

Very respectfully, yours,

C. F. STAPLES, Commissioner.

FEBRUARY 15, 1909.

Messrs. BENGT. E. SUNDBURG,
Chairman Senate Committee.
ANDREW DAVIS,
Chairman House Committee.

GENTLEMEN: In your favor of recent date you ask whether, in my opinion, under the constitution of this State, the request of the delegation of the Senate and House of the North Dakota Legislature that the laws of the State of Minnesota be so changed as to allow the State of North Dakota a representative upon the board of grain appeals of this State may be granted. To put the matter in another way, the State of North Dakota asks the Legislature of Minnesota to so change the laws of this State that a citizen of North Dakota may be appointed by the governor of this State to and hold an office created by and under the laws of this State.

Replying thereto I beg to advise that, in my opinion, the request of North Dakota may not be granted.

It is not an argument in favor of such a procedure that the same is not specifically prohibited and therefore implied granted by the terms of our constitution. Such a person so appointed would be an alien to this State, and it is an "acknowledged principle" which lies at the very foundation, and the enforcement of which needs neither the aid of statutory nor constitutional enactments or restrictions, that the Government is instituted by the citizens for their liberty and protection, and that it is to be administered and its powers and functions executed only by them and through their agency.

Appreciating how desirable in the present instance such an arrangement would seem to be, I beg to suggest that if the State of North Dakota should appoint some citizen of that State, to be paid by it, to sit with, but not as a part of, the board of grain appeals of this State, and if the legislature of this State should authorize the same, so far as it was concerned, giving such person full access to all books and records of such board of grain appeals, all the practical advantages of the plan asked for would be effectuated, and no apparent legal objection could arise thereto.

Yours, truly,

GEORGE T. SIMPSON, Attorney General.

Hon. F. S. TALCOTT, H. J. BESSESEN, and
G. S. TRIMBLE, Senators, and J. H. FRAINE,
JAMES HILL, and S. J. DOYLE, Representatives,
Composing special committee on part of the Legislature of the State of North Dakota to investigate and report on conditions relating to the inspection and weighing of grain at the Minnesota terminals, to wit, Minneapolis and Duluth.

GENTLEMEN: Replying definitely to your proposition made to the senate and house committees on grain and warehouse of the Minnesota Legislature, which proposition embraced a request for a member on each of our grain-inspection boards at Minneapolis and Duluth, and which proposition had been favorably considered by and had the indorsement of the railroad and warehouse commission of our State, and by the chief inspector of grain of our State and the members of the grain-inspection boards of our State, and which also had the favorable indorsement of his excellency, Gov. John A. Johnson, and which proposition had also met with the indorsement of the senate and house committees on grain and warehouse of this legislature, we desire to most respectfully submit the inclosed official communication from the attorney general of our State, which, in our judgment, quite fully and effectually negatives the request and proposition made by your committee as far as the appointment of such representatives is concerned when made by the governer of this State, and in the same manner as he now appoints the members of the grain-inspection board.

Mr. NELSON. This communication leaves no doubt as to the unconstitutionality of such action and disposes of the proposition as a feasible legal arrangement.

However, the attorney general suggests a different method by which to accomplish the object sought; namely, by representation on these boards by citizens of your State who could act in the capacity of sitting or ex-officio members, whose appointments came from some authority in your State, and whose emoluments were provided for in the same manner.

This proposition has been fully and carefully considered by the railroad and warehouse commission of this State, whom our laws designated as the supervisors of the grain interests of the State, and it has met with their unanimous and cordial approval. They have also submitted the question to the chief inspector of grain and to the grain-inspection board of this State, and it has also met with their approval.

Acting on this, we, therefore, on behalf of the legislature of this State, and of the railroad and warehouse commission thereof, and of the chief inspector of grain, and of the grain-inspection board and its members, make this proposition to your committee for submission to your legislature:

We will receive at our grain terminals, Minneapolis and Duluth, two properly appointed and accredited grain experts who shall have full access to the meetings of the grain inspection board, full access to the office and inspection room of the inspection and weighing department, full access to such places where grain is cleaned and weighed, and who, in addition, will be given every opportunity to fully inform themselves as to the methods in vogue of grading, docking, or inspecting grain as far as the same comes legally under the supervision of the board of railroad and warehouse commissioners of this State, the said appointed experts to serve without emoluments on the part of this State and to have no vote in the determination of questions voted on by the grain inspection board.

By the commission.

A. C. CLAUSEN, Secretary.

In pursuance of that request, and upon the suggestion of the attorney general, the Legislature of North Dakota and the Legislature of Minnesota passed legislation to which I will refer. I quote from the laws of North Dakota for 1909, chapter 134:

APPOINTMENT OF EXPERTS.

Whereas North Dakota representation upon the board of appeals of the grain inspection department of the State of Minnesota would be of distinct benefit and advantage to the State of North Dakota; and

Whereas through the representations and personal efforts of the special committee appointed by this legislative assembly, an agreement has been reached whereby two residents of North Dakota, who are experts in the matter of grain grading and inspection, will be permitted to sit with the Minnesota boards of appeal at Minneapolis and Duluth and have access to the books and records of such boards and personal knowledge of the transactions of such boards; and

Whereas such representation will give to the people of the State of North Dakota a better knowledge of the conditions prevailing in the matter of grain inspection and better opportunity to present their claims in behalf of the producers of this State. Now, therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota, the House of Representatives concurring:

1. Governor may appoint.—Duties.—Salary.—Appropriation.—The governor is hereby authorized to appoint two residents of North Dakota, who shall be expert in the matter of raising and grading and knowledge of grain, to sit with the Minnesota board of appeals at Minneapolis and Duluth, such appointments to be made under such legislation as may be passed by the Legislative Assembly of the State of Minnesota, the salaries of such expert representatives to be $3,000 per year, they to serve during the entire year and to make a report to the governor to be transmitted to the legislative assembly at the opening of the session of 1911. The expense incurred under this resolution is hereby authorized and declared to be proper and in the interest of the people of this State.

Approved March 16, 1909.

That was the act of the North Dakota Legislature. The Minnesota Legislature responded to this in the following joint resolution:

JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 18.

Whereas the legislative assembly of the State of North Dakota has passed a joint resolution authorizing the appointment of two grain experts, residents of that State, to sit with the Minnesota boards of grain appeals at Minneapolis and Duluth, in order to make themselves and through them the people of the State of North Dakota familiar with the weighing and inspection departments of this State and the methods pursued by said members in determining appeals; and

Whereas it is highly desirable to establish and maintain the most friendly and cordial relations with the people of the State of North Dakota, and especially so upon a matter in which the people of that State are so vitally interested:

Now, therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the said representatives of the people of North Dakota be, and they are hereby, cordially invited to sit with the boards of grain appeals of this State and the railroad and warehouse commissioners, and the members of said boards of appeal and all officers and employees of this State engaged in the weighing and inspection departments are hereby requested to afford to said representatives every facility in their power for a perfect understanding of the methods pursued in this State in the weighing and inspection of grain and in the determining of appeals.

This shows, Mr. President, how we have always been ready to meet the people of the State of North Dakota. When they came to our legislature and wanted us to appoint two members from their State on our board of grain appeals we were ready to do it. We were willing to do it; our legislature was willing; our railroad and warehouse commission was willing to do it. When, however, the attorney general said we could not do that strictly, but we could allow them to pick out and appoint two or three men who could sit with our members without a vote and examine and inspect everything and become thoroughly familiar with it, our State authorities adopted that suggestion and were ready to meet it.

I have here the reports of these two men, made to the legislature, and I will quote from some of it. The board was appointed under the laws I have quoted, the Minnesota law and the North Dakota law. This is the report they made to the governor of North Dakota, dated January 3, 1911:

In accordance with Senate bill No. 345, enacted by the eleventh legislative assembly, year A. D. 1909, providing for two State grain commissioners, who were to be appointed by the governor of the State, to serve on the Minnesota board of appeals at Minneapolis and Duluth terminals, and having been regularly appointed and commissioned August 26, the year 1909, to serve as members of said board of appeals, we very respectfully submit the following report:

Immediately following our appointment to office we proceeded to Minneapolis, where we established our headquarters office which, through the courtesy of the railroad and warehouse commission of Minnesota, was furnished us.

Owing to the fact that the law providing for the said commission was not specific as to our duties; also, that various conflicting reports had been circulated throughout our State with regard to Minnesota's system of inspection; we felt that better service could be rendered in the discharge of our duties by jointly acting together in our investigations. We find that the method of determining grades and their system of inspection to be as follows:

In compliance with the provisions of section 2062, chapter 28, revised laws of 1905 of the State of Minnesota, the joint Minneapolis and Duluth grain-inspection boards (that is, the board of appeals) meet about the 1st day of August and establish grades of grain for a period of one year, which shall be known as Minnesota grades. The appeal board consists of six members—three at Minneapolis and three at Duluth—and hold their appointment under the governor.

They are the court of last resort in the matter of grades. When a car of grain reaches the terminal market, it is placed by the railroad company upon inspection tracks, which are provided in each railway yard. A State sampler is on hand in the morning, as soon as it is light enough to see. He takes the seal record of the car. He then takes a hollow brass tube, and by plunging it through the grain, to the bottom of the car, in several places, secures a fair sample of the whole load. The sampler reseals the car and keeps a record of the State seal applied. A sample of the grain is also taken by the chamber of commerce sampler, which is given to the consignee. A seal record is also kept by the chamber of commerce sampler. The sample thus obtained by the State sampler is placed in a sample sack and a ticket giving the number of the car and initials. The sample is taken to the State inspection office, where it is inspected.

Now, listen to this:

The grade and dockage is then determined by means of finely adjusted scales, and sieves of different kinds. If the shipper is not satisfied with grade or dockage, he can call for reinspection. The case is then reviewed by the chief deputy inspector or the assistant chief deputies. In case the parties interested are still dissatisfied, an appeal can then be called for. Then the case will be brought before the board of appeals, and the grade and dockage determined by them will be final.

Another duty of the inspection department is to make an examination of each car for leaky conditions, and keep a record of it. When grade and dockage has been determined, a certificate of inspection is issued by the State inspection department. The grain is then sold and unloaded. All grades of grain as now graded here are made on its physical appearance.

Here is a queer notion of this board, to which I wish to call attention:

This we believe to be unjust and should be made on its commercial or milling value, determined by accurate chemical analysis, and baking tests.

In other words, they recommended that you should not grade it by its physical appearance, but by its commercial value when it has passed through a grain hospital and has been tested and its baking capacity ascertained. You can see how utterly impracticable what they recommend here is. Unless the grain, before it is sent to the inspector, has been in a hospital, has been treated, has been conditioned, as it is called, and unless it has been tested for baking purposes it could not be graded. Wheat never has been graded on that basis anywhere, that I know of, and could not be so graded till it had passed through a grain hospital and bakery.

We find that wheat that was graded three northern, on account of its badly bleached color, made as good flour, and the baking test was equal to the best hard or No. 1 northern grades. Also smut in wheat affects the grade just to the amount of smut it contains. Take, for instance, a sample of our best northern wheat and let it contain smut, and it will be graded as low as No. 3 or rejected.

That is true. I have no doubt, because smut in wheat is a poisonous substance, and smutty wheat would make flour that would be hardly fit to eat.

This we also believe to be unjust. All wheat is washed by the modern mills of our country, as well as smutty wheat, in order to properly temper it for grinding. We understand the cost is no more to condition smutty wheat than any other wheat.

To "condition" it means to have it rid of the smut.

The smut being all removed by the same operation, this is another good reason why it should be graded on its commercial value. The difference in the price paid for smutty wheat is from 4 to 10 cents per bushel under No. 1 northern price. We find, and it is freely admitted that about all cargoes loaded out of Duluth carry one pound and oftentimes more dockage per bushel than is not taken into account or considered. The mixing of the different grades as they are inspected in and the grades they finally take on out inspection is unjust and works to the disadvantage of our State.

In justice to the farmers and growers of grain we believe the inspection department from the samplers to the board of appeals, inclusive, should be taken out of politics and come under civil service regulation. So that no person or persons connected with the service would depend on holding his job upon the success or failure of any political party.

That is exactly what our system has been in Minnesota for years. It is taken out of politics. We have had in recent years Democratic governors, and we have had Republican governors, and there never has been an upheaval or a change in our inspection force. We have as good a civil service in that respect as it is possible to have anywhere.

Now, let me read from this report further:

No doubt the matter of weighing grain at the terminals at Minneapolis and Duluth and other weighing stations have been more severely complained of than any other department of the grain business, but, we believe, not always justly, from the fact the shippers do not always weigh their grain. The manner of weighing grain we find to be as follows:

First, the State weigher examines the car for bad order or leaky conditions. If any are found, a complete record is made of these conditions. Before unloading the weigher takes a record of the seals. The car is then placed at the unloading pit and the grain elevated to the garner located above the scale hopper. The scale is balanced and the grain drawn into the scale hopper and weighed and the weight recorded in a book provided for that purpose. The weigher than takes a special ticket and by means of a type-registering device a printed record of the weight is obtained which must correspond with the weights in the record book. All State scales are equipped with this type-registering device.

In the large elevators the weighing is done on hopper scales in the cupola. Here two men are required for the work. One upstairs does the weighing, and the one below keeps the seal record, sees that the cars are properly placed for unloading, and that the cars are swept. He then signals the weigher above that the grain is all elevated. It is then weighed.

At some places track scales are used. In weighing in this instance the car is uncoupled from other cars and weighed on the scale platform. When emptied, the car is weighed back, and the net weight is thus obtained and the record kept, same as the hopper-scale weights. The State of Minnesota has a law requiring the shipper to place a card in the car giving the shipping weight. We find that not 10 per cent of the shippers comply with this law. It is very important that they should do so, for then the State weigher would note any difference between the State weight and the shipper's weight while the grain is still in the hopper. The matter could then be immediately investigated, and if loss was caused by leaky conditions of the car the shipper would have valid claim against the railroad company. He would know the actual amount of his loss, and settlement could be more easily obtained. Each day the weigher sends reports to the State weighmaster's office, from which an official certificate of weight is issued, giving the car number, initial, contents, State weight, the date and place where weighed, and if found in bad order notation is made on the certificate.

We have found that in several instances where we were asked to investigate cases of shortages that the car or cars of grain that had been consigned to the commission company by our shippers, after having been inspected by the Minnesota inspection department but not weighed by them, were reconsigned by the commission company to mills elsewhere in the State of which they were stockholders. The said milling company, not having a State weigher, issued a private certificate of weight which was nearly identical with the regular Minnesota State certificate of weight, differing only in having been signed weighmaster instead of State weighmaster, as the regular State certificate would show. The shipper believed he had received the regular Minnesota certificate of weight.

There has been some complaint about shrinkage in weight. The shippers have in some instances complained that the weights given them at the terminals have been insufficient—less than the amount shipped. In this connection I wish to read the following from this report:

The number of bad order cars, that is, cars without seals or doors and having leaky sides, ends, or bottoms found by the State weighing department for the past 5 years will average more than 15,000 cars each year at Minneapolis alone.

The following table of bad order conditions we believe will be of interest: We find the total number of cars weighed at Duluth in the months of September, October, November, and December, 1909, were 25,979 cars. The total number of leaky cars at Duluth for the same period was 7,225. The total number of cars weighed at Minneapolis for the months of September, October, November, and December, 1909, were 56,214. The total number of leaky cars was 3,502 for the same period.

A number of these cars are in bad condition. A large number of them are leaky. They are not properly coopered inside. They are in leaky condition. When the cars reach the terminal there has been a loss in weight from these causes. When our State inspection department weighs that wheat, there is a discrepancy, and it is immediately charged by the shipper to the weighing department, instead of being charged to the railroad company, as it ought to be charged.

The report goes on further, as follows:

Other bad conditions were as follows: Cars received without seals at Minneapolis and Duluth, 5,486; patched cars received at Minneapolis and Duluth, 6,009; car doors found open at Minneapolis and Duluth, 1,597; and numerous cars found without doors and with other defects. Thus it can be readily seen why there are so many shortages in weights complained of. A visit to the various railroad and inspection tracks, which, by the way, are more commonly known as the "wheat fields," at terminals and see hundreds of bushels of wheat that are strewn and wasted oftentimes through lack of care and careless switching and handling of cars would convince any shipper of grain of the necessity of weighing his grain and placing a card in the car showing the actual net weight.

We would advise that every farmers' or independent elevator of our State should be equipped with an automatic scale and every car weighed before shipping to terminal markets, and a card placed in the car as required by the Minnesota State law. These scales are not expensive, easily installed, and do not require much room or need much attention.

Then the report speaks of the Durum wheat, and the great discrepancy in the price of it, to which I have already referred. It says:

The question of durum wheat may well be touched upon in this report. At the terminals of Minneapolis and Duluth there are received each year about 30,000,000 bushels of this wheat, which, according to analysis and baking tests, made both by State and private laboratories, makes as good a loaf in nearly all particulars as good No. 1 northern wheat. Such being the case, it is contended by the best authorities that the commercial value of the two grains is about the same, and at the outside there is only 5 cents per bushel difference in favor of the best northern wheat.

What they complain of in this report is this: At one time, in the early days of Durum wheat, there was a difference of between 15 and 25 cents a bushel, but now that big difference has disappeared. I have the market report of the Minneapolis

Journal for April 3, which shows that the difference between Durum and No. 1 Northern was only from 3 to 4 cents per bushel, and that has substantially been the difference for the last two or three years.

Now I shall ask leave to suspend. I desire to add something further to my remarks to-morrow, but I shall not take over half an hour.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am very greatly interested in this bill, and I had intended to take some part in the debate. I find that it is absolutely necessary for me to leave the city this evening, and I can not be back before the first of next week, Tuesday being the earliest possible day. I think there are other Senators who want to speak. I understand that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] is obliged to leave the latter part of this week. After some conference with the Senator in charge of the bill [Mr. MCCUMBER], I have thought that possibly we could agree upon some day in the future when we could vote upon it, and I wanted to suggest a unanimous-consent agreement to vote on the legislative day of May 1.

Mr. SMOOT. Would it not be just as well if the Senator from North Dakota would ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside, in the absence of the Senator from Missouri, and upon his return take it up and dispose of it as the unfinished business?

Mr. REED. That would be entirely agreeable to me, if it would suit the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA].

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] at what time he intends to return.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I would prefer to have a definite time set for the disposition of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator from North Dakota desires a definite date I have no objection, but I thought the best way to dispose of the matter and get it out of the way entirely would be to have it temporarily laid aside until the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from North Dakota return.

Mr. REED. Of course, either arrangement will suit me. My personal preference would be to lay it temporarily aside until I could get back, but I must take into consideration the fact that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] wants to be present at the vote and the further discussion.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator from North Dakota if May 1 would be satisfactory to him to vote upon the bill?

Mr. GRONNA. That would be satisfactory to me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. REED. In view of the fact that there would have to be a roll call, I will ask the Senator in charge of the bill if it would be agreeable if we simply pass a motion at this time that the bill be laid aside until May 1 and then be made the special order of business.

Mr. SMOOT. We could make it a special order for that time by a vote, but we could not by a vote lay the bill aside to be taken up on a particular day as the unfinished business.

Mr. REED. What I mean is a mere motion to make it a special order for that day. If that will be satisfactory to the Senator in charge of the bill, it will be to me.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, I dislike very much to lay the bill aside at any time. There are a number of other speeches to be made upon the subject, and I wish to keep it before the Senate as the unfinished business. I am inclined to accommodate every Senator, as I have stated heretofore. I wish that we may have a vote upon the measure and that every Senator who desires may have an opportunity to present his views. It would be entirely satisfactory to me to fix May 1 to vote upon all amendments and upon the bill, but there are a number of speeches to be made and, as I have had charge of the measure, I should like an opportunity, after the speeches are concluded in opposition, in an address of sufficient length, probably from half an hour to an hour, to meet the several arguments made by all the Senators who are opposing the bill.

If we can agree to take up the bill on the 1st day of May and dispose of it on that day, with all amendments, it would be entirely satisfactory to me, provided Senators can get through with the arguments that are to be made in opposition to the bill in time to give me an opportunity to reply to those arguments upon that day.

Mr. SMOOT. Then let it be made the legislative day and not the calendar day.

Mr. SHIVELY. That might involve dragging the debate along for two or three or four days. In other words, unless it is fixed pretty definitely now Senators will postpone their speeches until that time.

Mr. SMOOT. They will do that anyhow. I am perfectly satisfied to fix a certain time upon that day if the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] will agree to it.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I think it ought to be the legislative day, unless there can be an understanding that the Senators who are going to speak will speak between now and that time or agree to give me a reasonable time on that day. I do not desire to have all the time taken up by the opposition and have no possible opportunity to reply to their several arguments.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, as far as I am concerned—and, of course, I can only speak for myself—I shall so conduct my remarks upon the bill as to leave the Senator from North Dakota plenty of time to close the debate. I think he is entitled to that. I should like to ask the Senator, would he prefer to have a unanimous-consent agreement, which would involve a roll call, or simply a motion passed making the bill the special order for the 1st day of May?

Mr. MCCUMBER. I could not agree to make it a special order under the uncertainty of the rules in reference to a special order, and even as I myself would understand the rules. I would rather simply agree that the bill should be taken up at a certain hour upon the 1st of May, and that the same and all amendments should be voted upon before the close of that legislative day. That seems to me to be the only way by which we can reach a satisfactory conclusion. I have no doubt it will be disposed of during that day without any particular trouble. I think the inquiry made by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY] can be answered in that way. From what I know of the status of the bill, if we take it up at a reasonable hour on that day and proceed to a vote, we will not run it beyond that calendar day.

Mr. SHIVELY. Then say "on the calendar day."

Mr. MCCUMBER. Let us agree that we will take it up immediately on the close of the morning business upon that day.

Mr. SHIVELY. Let it be the calendar day, so that we will know we are going to dispose of it on that day.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the senior Senator from North Dakota yield to his colleague?

Mr. MCCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. I was going to suggest to the Senator from Missouri, if he will ask unanimous consent to take up the bill on May 1, which is on Friday, and that a vote shall be taken on the bill and all amendments thereto not later than Saturday, the 2d, say at 4 or 5 o'clock, I think that would be acceptable to all Senators.

Mr. REED. Very well, Mr. President; I will then ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 120 be made the special order——

Mr. MCCUMBER. I wish the Senator would not put that in, but simply ask that the bill be taken up at that time.

Mr. REED. That it shall be taken up on May 1 at the conclusion of the morning business, and that said bill, together with all amendments thereto, shall be voted upon on that legislative day, and in no event later——

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I can not consent to that. The legislative day might continue indefinitely, so that no other business could be done. A filibuster might start, and it would cut off the calendar and suspend the entire business of the Senate, so I will object to the words "legislative day."

Mr. REED. I ask that it shall be voted upon together with all amendments not later than 5 o'clock on the 2d day of May.

Mr. SHIVELY. I can not agree to that. It seems to me that we ought to be able to fix a day and not give two days to this work at that time.

Mr. REED. Very well. Of course, if there is objection, I must change the request. I suggest, then, that it be voted upon on the calendar day of the 1st of May. I think we can dispose of the discussion in the way the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] suggests.

Mr. MCCUMBER. To accommodate the Senator and with the understanding, which I trust will be carried out, that I may have an opportunity to reply to the arguments against the bill before the final vote upon that day, I shall not object. I will consent to that so far as I am concerned.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I have an objection to the idea of agreeing in advance to vote upon a bill on a certain calendar day. We know by experience that the result of such an agreement is that when that calendar day arrives a number are cut short of an opportunity to discuss the question, and we know that before that time there will not be a quorum of Senators here to listen to the discussion. I think the only way to frame a unanimous-consent agreement is to have it the legislative day, and that will give everyone an opportunity to discuss the question, including the author of the bill.

Mr MCCUMBER. The Senator, I think, will see that the Senator making the request is between two fires. On one hand, the Senator from Virginia objects to the legislative day; and on the other hand, the Senator from Nebraska objects to the calendar day. I do not know how he is to have any kind of a motion or request agreed to.

Mr. SWANSON. It would seem to me that we ought to fix upon a time. The object of a unanimous-consent agreement is to bring the Senate to quick action. I have seen repeatedly here delay after delay, the morning business and everything delayed from one day to another, the morning hour dispensed with, the calendar dispensed with, and everything dispensed with on account of having a unanimous-consent agreement in connection with the legislative day. We do not know what may develop in connection with this measure, and consequently I can not consent to the legislative day, which might mean a week.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it is evident that we can not get a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me say to the Senator that as it seems almost impossible to-day to arrive at a unanimous-consent agreement, and it is impossible to tell just how long the debate will last, I will do my very best to keep in communication with the Senator and inform him and try to accommodate him as much as it is possible for me, being in charge of the bill, without at the same time endangering its loss.

Mr. REED. The Senator is very generous; but the fact is that my trip takes me to my own State. I will get there Friday morning. If I have good fortune, I will get through with my business in the supreme court, say, on Saturday, and I shall immediately return. The moment I am through I shall return. It is possible that the docket might be laid over until Monday, but not probable. Therefore a notice to me would not do me much good, because I am coming back as soon as I possibly can. But I shall trust to the Senator himself to give me an opportunity to be heard upon the bill on my return.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am doubtful if we get a vote on it this week. I think I can lay it aside temporarily to dispose of other business without any objection by the Senate. At least, I will do the best I can to see that every Senator has a full opportunity to express his views.

Mr. SHIVELY. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 16, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 15, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Take us, O God, our heavenly Father, into Thy nearer presence, that we may behold the glories which wait on the faithful, that we may be encouraged to strive earnestly to unfold the eternal possibilities which Thou hast wrapped up in us. Rich are we by inheritance, but we shall prove recreant to our trust if we do not increase and multiply them.

For the treasures of precious worth
We must patiently dig and dive;
For the places we 'ong to fill
We must push and struggle and drive;
And always and everywhere
We'll find in our onward course
Thorns for the feet and trials to meet
And a difficult river to cross.

But if we are with Thee nothing can prevent us from the desired goal. For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

PORTO RICAN CITIZENSHIP.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill pending pertaining to Porto Rican citizenship by having printed in the RECORD a memorial by the House of Delegates of Porto Rico relating to said measure.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in reference to Porto Rico.

Mr. ANTHONY. I did not understand what the gentleman wished to extend his remarks on.

Mr. McKENZIE. It is on the bill providing for citizenship for Porto Rico.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY—ALLEGATION AND PROOF OF LOYALTY IN CERTAIN CASES.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday, and the unfinished business is the bill H. R. 5850, and the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union——

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, pending that I desire to ask unanimous consent that general debate on this bill be limited to one hour and a half, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and one-half to be controlled by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to one hour and a half, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN.] Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The house automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 5850, with Mr. BARTLETT in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 5850, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5850) to amend section 162 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Illinois consume part of his time now?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the bill before the House proposes to amend section 162 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911. The important feature of the bill is that which provides that in all cases contemplated to be heard under this section no allegation or proof of loyalty shall be required in the presentation or adjudication of claims. There seems to be a good deal of question whether this really does, as a matter of fact, change the present law. If it is necessary to make that point clear, I am rather inclined to the opinion that the bill ought to pass. I think we have gotten far enough away from those troublesome and unfortunate days that we ought to give a liberal interpretation to the laws that ordinarily apply in cases of this kind. These cotton cases come dangerously near, if they were not in fact acts of, confiscation in time of peace.

It is a regrettable fact that owing to the lapse of time the probability is that very few of those who themselves lost this property or their direct heirs or descendants would be benefited, and in many cases moneys would be paid to those who have no real moral claim to it. If we could reimburse and compensate those who actually suffered those losses I think there would be little question in the mind of anybody as to the propriety of doing what is here proposed to be done.

Mr. Chairman, this bill is a striking reminder of the infinite variety of troublesome questions that war leaves in its wake. Fifty years and more after the Civil War we are still troubled with these questions and we are still paying year after year enormous sums to in part compensate for the waste and suffering caused by that war. In view of those lessons that we and other peoples of the world have learned relative to the waste of war we have all of us hoped that the nations in the future, or our Nation at least, would hesitate long before embarking on warlike operations or taking steps likely to lead to war.

This has been our hope; and yet, gentlemen, we are informed that to-day at least 12 of the greatest battleships that float the deep are on the way to Tampico on a warlike errand. No mention is made of what disposition is to be made of the good ship "Friendship" or the superdreadnaught "Goodfellowship," of which we heard so much in the recent past. Down at Tampico, Mexico, the Government of Mexico, whose neighbor, whose best friend we are, or ought to be, has one or two back-number, decrepit gunboats, any one of which a 13-inch gun would blow from the bosom of Tampico Bay and sink to the bottom of the sea. We have there now three or four of the mightiest dreadnaughts in the world, but we are sending all of our great Atlantic Fleet. Why? To settle the all-important question whether we shall be given a salute of 5 or 21 guns. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

We have been making treaties with all the world under which we pledge ourselves to refer to boards of conciliation or arbitration any questions that may arise that would tempt or tend to invite hostilities with a foreign power. Our Secretary of State prides himself upon being the evangel of peace, of arbitration, of the settlement of international troubles by peaceful means.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield.

Mr. SLOAN. Might the gentleman not excuse the sending of the good ship "Friendship" and the good ship "Fellowship" on the basis that we do not know yet, and can not for some time, of course, know, whether they would have to pay tolls or not?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, they may have been sunk by the British, that have recently taken the Panama Canal.

We have been offering, almost forcing upon, the nations of the world treaties under which we agree to arbitrate matters involving questions of national honor, but to-day the fleet is steaming under forced draft to Tampico. For over a year in northern Mexico American citizens have been insulted, browbeaten, their property destroyed, their lives taken. We have appealed to the bandits and cutthroats in command of the forces there in vain. Day before yesterday the press informed us that though we had appealed on behalf of 600 Spanish citizens whom we have taken under our protection by our own act, protested against the confiscation of their property by Villa, protested against their expulsion from the country in which they have lived for generations, the State Department has accepted the declaration of Carranza and Villa that our protest is in vain and the incident is closed. When a British subject whose protection we had assumed is foully murdered in the presence or in the vicinity of the bandit chief of the revolutionary forces in northern Mexico our State Department accepts his statement with regard to it, handed to us by Carranza, bearing every evidence of falsity, making no apology, offering no redress, without protest.

For months, while Americans by the hundreds and thousands have been forced out of northern Mexico, while their property was being destroyed, during which time many have suffered indignity and some have suffered death at the hands of bandits cooperating with the so-called constitutionalist forces, we have declined to send forces across the Rio Grande to enforce our demands, and we have supinely accepted as final the refusal on the part of the so-called constitutionalist leaders to consider our demands or to give adequate redress in the cases in which they condescended to give them any consideration.

Even when the body of an American citizen, foully murdered, was known to lie in a neglected grave almost within sight of our border we refused to send forces to recover his body or demand the punishment of his murderers.

But down at Tampico it is different. There the Government of Mexico is operating. Last December our President informed the world that that Government must fall. In one breath he made the declaration that there was no government in Mexico, and in the next that the Government that he had recognized by sending his emissary, John Lind, must and would fail. He refused to establish the official relations with the Government and people of Mexico that international usage require for the protection of our people in Mexico and virtually gave notice to every force of rapine and revolution that we would give every aid short of actual warlike operations to break down the established government in the City of Mexico and to aid the assaults of its enemies. The President has followed that program steadily, using the prestige and the power and the might of this great Nation to bring about the defeat and ruin of a neighboring government, and now he has sent our fleet to enforce the mandates that reflect personal prejudice and enmity against the man who happens to be at the head of the Government of Mexico.

Down at Torreon the forces of Villa destroyed property worth millions of dollars. Was there any protest on the part of our Government? There was not. I do not know that there should have been. But when the Federal Government in Mexico, attempting to hold its lines and protect its people at Tampico, fired some shots that threatened to injure the property of a branch of the Standard Oil Co. and of the oil company controlled by powerful British interests we presumed to say that the Government of Mexico should not use its armed forces for the purpose of maintaining its own sovereignty.

But they did fire some shells over the Standard Oil tanks and the oil tanks of Lord Cowdray's company, our demands to the contrary notwithstanding. And I am glad they did. When we reach that point in the management of our international affairs that we feel that we can call upon the armed forces of any country to desist from acts necessary for the protection of its sovereignty, which in no wise involve ours or the lives of our people, I hope that any nation against whom we endeavor to enforce that sort of bulldozing will resist it to the last. It was not a question of protecting life, but there was danger that the property of the Standard Oil Co. and of the English oil company would be destroyed in the attempt of the Government of Mexico to maintain our sovereignty, and we presumed to say they could not do it.

Then came this incident at Tampico, that has taken from the international scene the ship "Friendship" and the dreadnaught "Goodwill" and has replaced them with the 13-inch guns of our real dreadnaughts. What is it all about? What was it that happened that has given excuse for all this bluff and bluster? I do not know exactly, and I have not been able to find anyone that does. The first story, before it was viséd, revised, and doctored by the administration journals, was that a party of marines in a launch landed at Tampico for the purpose of securing some gasoline for the launch motor. They were arrested without violence, kept for a short time under arrest, but not confined, as I understand it. There was no violence; not even a uniform was mussed, though some feelings may have been ruffled. They did not have their flag with them. They were in uniform, and they were probably armed. They were a foreign armed force in a country then under hostile fire. I do not pretend to know much about international law, but——

Mr. RUBEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I can not yield, as I have very little time. I do not pretend to know much about international law, but if I understand the facts, I do not know what else could have been done by the officer in direct command under the circumstances. On learning what had been done, the officer in command ordered the liberating of the men, we are informed. In a short time the matter was reported to the Government in the City of Mexico and apology was freely and promptly offered. The officer immediately in command was ordered punished. This is the awful insult to the flag for which and on behalf of which the American Navy is to-day steaming down the coast with hostile intent, proposing, I assume, to line up in battle array in front of the two little measly worm-eaten gunboats that Mexico has off Tampico. If it was not so utterly and indefensibly bombastic, so stupid and therefore serious, it would be a delightful comedy sketch. Huerta not only offered an apology, he not only promised to punish the officer who, if I have the facts aright, really did nothing that under the conditions existing he could not properly be excused for doing, but Huerta also offered to fire a salute of five guns in order to make it clear that no affront was intended to the men or officers of the vessel whose men had been temporarily arrested. But we must have 21 guns or nothing. We must have the last ounce of this pound of flesh. Our citizens in northern Mexico murdered, their property to the extent of hundreds of millions destroyed, the constitutionalist forces refusing to give serious consideration to our representations in regard to these things, and nothing done but to continue to accept the insults of the constitutionalist leaders and to furnish them arms and ammunition.

Now the scene shifts. Now the opportunity is presented to carry out the presidential determination to eliminate Huerta from the situation. If Huerta complies with our unreasonable demand it is hoped and expected that his compliance under conditions that do not command the respect and judgment of the Mexican people will weaken him in their esteem and so strengthen the forces of revolution aimed at the Government of which he is the head. If he should not comply, here is an excuse to intervene, the opportunity to have some things that have weakened the prestige of the administration in the recent past forgotten in the call to arms, the call on the patriotism of the American people.

Where is the good ship "Friendship"? Where is the superdreadnaught "Goodwill"? Where are the peace treaties? Where are the men who have taken every affront that Villa and Carranza have offered us without question?

We surrendered at Panama, and the American people do not like it. The American people have grown tired of the continual failure to protect the property and lives of our people in northern Mexico; and here is a chance, not to remedy the conditions against which complaint has been made, but to weaken the only force in Mexico at all effective in the protection of the lives and property of our citizens and in the maintenance of peace and order in that country.

It may be that here is an opportunity for the President to appeal to the patriotism of the American people in order that they may forget Panama, in order that they may overlook the failure of the administration to do its duty in the protection of our citizens and their property in northern Mexico, in the zone of the revolution; but I do not believe our people are so simple as to be misled by this play of fake heroics.

Everybody knows, or will know, there was no intentional insult to the flag or our uniform at Tampico. There was no flag connected with the incident, according to the earlier dispatches. But the administration journals of this morning have finally dragged the flag in and dragged the marines out of the boat, whereas the first uncensored dispatches gave it that the marines, without their flag, went in uniform into Tampico and some minor officer took them into custody, probably not knowing what else to do with an armed alien force in a zone of revolution. The Government in the City of Mexico, following the rule that it has followed uniformly, even in the face of our continued opposition to it, in the face of our continued efforts to overthrow it, preserving an attitude of good nature and friendly consideration, offered to and did punish the offending officer, offered an apology, offered even to salute with guns, but drew the line at 21.

Some may wonder why the Government of Mexico, realizing our power, our ability to enforce and demand however unreasonable, should not accede to it. I can readily understand how any self-respecting Government might very properly halt after having offered every reasonable and proper reparation and refuse to meet a demand which it considers, and which probably is, under the circumstances, unreasonable and unwarranted. The salute is, I assume, demanded on the claim that an intentional affront and insult was offered to our uniform and our flag. From what information I have been able to secure that is not the case, and it is but natural that any self-respecting Government should decline to do an act which amounts to a confession that those acting under its authority have not only acted hastily and possibly in a way not warranted by international usages, but with purpose and intent to humiliate our men and insult the uniform and the flag. I have no doubt but what the Government of Mexico claims that nothing of the sort was done or intended; and if that is true, they are entirely justified in refusing to comply with a demand we have no right to make.

Our administration has persistently, in harmony with the avowed and announced hostility of the President toward Huerta, engaged in acts which come perilously near being acts of war against his Government. By giving aid and comfort to its enemies and thus weakening the Government at the City of Mexico we have prolonged and enlarged the area of the revolution in northern Mexico to the infinite loss and damage of our people and other foreigners in their lives and in their property; and now a trifling incident is seized upon, an incident that involved no harm or injury to anyone, to further weaken and embarrass the Mexican Government. And so this is the mighty issue involved, the dignity of a Nation of 100,000,000 people, that to enforce it in the teeth of a miserable little fleet of worm-eaten gunboats we invoke all the forces of our mighty fleet of dreadnaughts. Aye, as our German friends would say, if it did not contain the possibility of an awful tragedy, "it would be to laugh." [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from Illinois the remaining time?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Four minutes are reserved.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I now yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GREGG].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GREGG] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Chairman, I shall confine myself to the discussion of the bill that is up for consideration to-day. This bill provides for such amendment and modification of the law that anyone who has a claim against the Government for property taken under the captured and abandoned property act, passed in 1863, may bring a suit in the Court of Claims, and proof of loyalty is not to be made a jurisdictional question in the courts as it is now.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is strange to me that there has not been long ere this some similar provision of law. The custom and usage of civilized warfare for more than a century as to property taken from the enemy for the use of the army, even in a country invaded, has always been to pay for such property taken from a private individual. On March 12, 1863, pending the war, as we all know, Congress passed what is commonly known as the captured and abandoned property act. I am going to review this law just to make the matter plain to the Members of Congress who have not had time or opportunity to give it thought and consideration.

This act of March 12, 1863, authorized the collection of all abandoned and captured property in the States of the Confederacy; authorized the sale of such property and directed, after deducting certain expenses, the payment of the net proceeds into the Treasury of the United States. This law also provided that the owner or owners of any of the property so taken might, within two years after the close of the war, bring suit for the recovery of the proceeds. But the law contained the provision that before the recovery should be authorized the owner should establish his loyalty to the Union throughout the war.

Now, what condition did that bring about? Of course, the people of the South, who knew they had not been loyal, who knew they could not establish their loyalty, did not go into the courts, because they knew of that provision in the law and supposed, as a matter of course, that they had no right to recover, because they were not loyal, and the law expressly provided that they would have to prove their loyalty in order to recover.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. GREGG. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. Does the gentleman think that was an unfair or an unwise provision of the law—that requirement as to proof of loyalty?

Mr. GREGG. I shall discuss that later.

Mr. WILLIS. Very well.

Mr. GREGG. I was just coming to this point: Notwithstanding the provision of that law, as you know, a proclamation of general amnesty or pardon was issued by the President of the United States. All the subjects of the Confederate Government were pardoned, and the Supreme Court of the United States, in the Padelford case, held that the pardon restored all these claimants to their property rights in and to the proceeds of this property taken and sold, put them as though they had never been disloyal to the United States; in other words, that it wiped out the past, and that the proceeds of that property which had been sold and put into the Treasury were held by this Government as a trust for the owners, regardless of their loyalty; that there were no longer any disloyal citizens in this Union; that their property rights had been fully restored; and that the proceeds of property taken and sold were held as a trust.

Notwithstanding that the court so held, this money has been held in the Treasury of the United States, and the owners are barred from any right to bring suit to recover same, because the act authorizing suit limited the right to two years after the close of the war.

We are trustees. We are holding property in trust. Yet by our might as sovereign we deny to the beneficiary of the trust the right to recover the trust estate to which he is entitled. We are pleading the statute of limitations against them. This would be dishonorable in an individual. How much more dishonorable in a great Government.

Mr. ELDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREGG. Yes.

Mr. ELDER. As a matter of fact, under the decision in the Padelford case, those who were not loyal in fact were held to be loyal as a point of law, and some who put in their claims did recover under that decision. Is not that the fact?

Mr. GREGG. Yes; some did.

Mr. ELDER. Now, it is merely a question of the statute of limitations; and those who, knowing, as a matter of fact, that they had not been loyal, did not presume to put in their claims, can not now recover merely because of the lapse of time, which was limited.

Mr. GREGG. Yes. As I said before, the law limited the right to sue to two years. The people in the South who knew they were not loyal did not sue, because under the terms of the law they thought they had no right to sue.

Mr. ELDER. A few of them did sue.

Mr. GREGG. Such as thought they could establish their loyalty. Most of those who sued thought they could establish their loyalty. By the time the Padelford case was decided, the two years had expired, and these people who did not claim to have been loyal had no remedy, and no remedy has ever since been given to them. No opportunity has ever been given them to establish their rights so clearly given to them in the Padelford case.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will my friend yield?

Mr. GREGG. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that unless this money can be recovered it will amount to a confiscation of property?

Mr. GREGG. That is the effect of the Supreme Court decision.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And is it not a fact that no property in the United States has been confiscated on account of disloyalty, as far as the gentleman knows?

Mr. GREGG. Not as far as I know. Now, I want to read a few brief extracts from opinions of the Supreme Court. As I said, the court first held that the pardon restored all rights in the Padelford case, reported in Ninth Wallace, page 531. They followed that opinion in the Klein case, reported in Thirteenth Wallace, page 128; in the Armstrong case, Thirteenth Wallace, page 154; the Pargoud case, Thirteenth Wallace, page 156; the Carlisle case, Sixteenth Wallace, page 147; and the Young case, Ninety-seventh United States, page 39.

So the original decision in the Padelford case has been so often followed and is so thoroughly established as the law of the country that there is no gainsaying its correctness now.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREGG. Yes.

Mr. GOULDEN. Can the gentleman inform the committee how much money is involved or what amount of money will be required?

Mr. GREGG. There are various estimates—from $4,000,000 to $10,000,000.

Mr. GOULDEN. Can the gentleman further tell just how much is in the Treasury now?

Mr. SISSON. If the gentleman will permit, the Treasury Department shows that something less than $1,000,000 would possibly be affected by this bill.

Mr. GOULDEN. That is what I want to know.

Mr. SISSON. If every man was able to prove that the particular money in the Treasury was his own.

Mr. GOULDEN. I understand.

Mr. GREGG. The amount just stated by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] covers only the property taken subsequent to June 1, 1865. In answering the question of the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULDEN] I covered the whole period of time, property taken prior to and subsequent to June 1, 1865.

Mr. GOULDEN. From $4,000,000 to $10,000,000 is the total sum involved if all claims were allowed.

Mr. GREGG. Yes; from $4,000,000 to $10,000,000. Now, my only objection to this bill is that it does not go back far enough, because if citizens have the right to recover for property taken after June 1, 1865, then citizens ought to have the right to recover for property taken prior to June 1, 1865, because, as I said before, the decisions of the Supreme Court put those from whom property was taken prior to 1865 in the position of being just as loyal and just as much entitled to all their property rights as you are to-day or I am to-day.

Now, for the information of the committee I want to read just a few extracts from the opinions of the Supreme Court of the United States in the cases referred to by me. In the Padelford case the court said:

> In the case of Garland (4 Wall., 333) this court held the effect of a pardon to be such "that in the eye of the law the offender is as innocent as if he had never committed the offense"; and in the case of Armstrong's Foundry (6 Wall., 766) we held that the general pardon granted to him relieved him from a penalty which he had incurred to the United States. It follows that at the time of the seizure of the petitioner's property he was purged of whatever offense against the laws of the United States he had committed by the acts mentioned in the findings, and relieved from any penalty which he might have incurred. It follows further that if the property had been seized before the oath was taken the faith of the Government was pledged to its restoration upon the taking of the oath in good faith.

In the eye of the law, according to the Supreme Court, the past was completely wiped out, and the offender was as innocent as if he had never committed the offense.

Now, in the Klein case the Supreme Court, following the Padelford case, said:

> We conclude, therefore, that the title to the proceeds of the property which came to the possession of the Government by capture or abandonment, with the exceptions already noticed, was in no case divested out of the original owner. It was for the Government itself to determine whether these proceeds should be restored to the owner or not. The promise of the restoration of all rights of property decides that question affirmatively as to all persons who availed themselves of the proffered pardon. It was competent for the President to annex to his offer of pardon any conditions or qualifications he should see fit; but after those conditions and qualifications had been satisfied, the pardon and its connected promises took full effect. The restoration of the proceeds became the absolute right of the persons pardoned on application within two years from the close of the war. It was, in fact, promised for an equivalent. "Pardon and restoration of political rights" were "in return" for the oath and its fulfillment. To refuse it would be a breach of faith not less "cruel and astounding" than to abandon the freed people whom the Executive had promised to maintain in their freedom.

The court said that the restoration of the proceeds became the absolute right of the pardoned. Now, that is an absolute right. Why do we, simply because we have the power of the sovereign, deny these men the opportunity to assert their absolute right?

In the Armstrong case the court said:

> We have recently held, in the case of the United States against Klein, that pardon granted upon conditions, blots out the offense if proof is made of compliance with the conditions, and that the person so pardoned is entitled to the restoration of the proceeds of captured and abandoned property, if suit be brought within "two years after the suppression of the rebellion." The proclamation of the 25th of December granted pardon unconditionally and without reservation. This was a public act of which all courts of the United States are bound to take notice, and to which all courts are bound to give effect. The claim of the petitioner was preferred within two years. The Court of Claims, therefore, erred in not giving the petitioner the benefit of the proclamation.

They were passing upon this very identical question. It was a suit to recover the proceeds of property captured and abandoned, which was sold and the proceeds paid from the Treasury.

In the Carlisle case the court said:

> After these repeated adjudications, it must be regarded as settled in this court that the pardon of the President, whether granted by special letters or by general proclamation, relieves claimants of the proceeds of captured and abandoned property from the consequences or participation in the rebellion, and from the necessity of establishing their loyalty in order to prosecute their claims. This result follows whether we regard the pardon as effacing the offense, blotting it out, in the language of the cases, as though it had never existed, or regard persons pardoned as excepted from the general language of the act, which requires claimants to make proof of their adhesion, during the rebellion, to the United States.

In the Young case the court said:

> We have decided that the pardon closes the eyes of the courts to the offending acts, or, perhaps more properly, furnishes conclusive evidence that they never existed as against the Government.

These decisions, Mr. Chairman, establish the absolute right of these claimants to the restoration to them of the money which represents the value of their property.

Now, to show you how unjustly these claimants have been treated I call your attention to the fact that after the Supreme Court had clearly established their right to this money in the Treasury which is the proceeds of their property taken and sold, and after their right to sue was barred by the original act, nothing was done to authorize those from whom property was taken to sue for or recover the proceeds of their property until March 3, 1883, when Congress passed what is known as the Bowman Act. To avoid the effect of the decisions in the Padelford and other cases the Bowman Act provided that in every claim for stores and supplies taken during the Civil War the claimant must allege and prove loyalty as a jurisdictional fact, and that if the court should not find him loyal it should have no further jurisdiction and dismiss the petition. Under this provision unless the claimant first showed his loyalty the court would not proceed to determine his case, and thereby the decisions in the Padelford and other cases were overridden and made of no avail. I fail to appreciate the magnanimity of a Government which would thus circumvent the decisions of its highest court. As I have said before, I think this bill should make the same provisions for recovery of property taken prior to June 1, 1865, that it makes for the recovery of property taken after June 1, 1865. The author of this bill, Mr. WATKINS, of Louisiana, informs me that he did not make such provision because he did not believe it could be passed if he had. So I suppose we will have to take this on the principle that a half loaf is better than no bread at all.

Now, why would it be impossible to pass the bill had it provided for the recovery of property taken prior to June 1, 1865? Because some are clinging to the prejudices of the past. In the name of justice is it not time that this prejudice should die out? The Supreme Court, composed of men not in sympathy with the South in that unfortunate conflict, have held that all southern men were fully restored to all their property rights in this property, and that the Government was holding it as a trust for the owners and their heirs. These owners and their heirs for nearly 50 years have been asking that this trust be faithfully accounted for, and all this time Congress has turned and continues to turn a deaf ear to their just demands. It is an outrage, for which no justification or palliation can be offered.

We are now one people, actuated by one common impulse—the glory and upbuilding of our common country. During the Spanish War the blue and the gray fought side by side. To-day our fleet is being assembled to protect the dignity of our country. Upon those battleships are men and boys from Dixie land just as willing to risk their lives to protect the honor of our flag as are those from other sections of our land. Is this not a fitting day to say to all our people everywhere that they may enter our courts to recover their rights without being asked any questions as to their loyalty? Is it not a fitting day to blot that word from American jurisprudence and legislation?

Mr. WATKINS. Will the gentleman from Illinois use some of his time?

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from Louisiana propose to use any more time?

Mr. WATKINS. I expect to use half an hour to close.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman expect to close in one speech?

Mr. WATKINS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman to whom I was to yield has stepped out temporarily. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN].

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, one of the biggest problems now pending in this country or which this country has ever had to confront is the subject of railroad rates. For a long time we have struggled with the problem of regulating railroads. We have reached out, step by step, determined to lessen the high cost of living by reducing the tremendous income of railroads. There can be no other logic of the fight we have been carrying on, no other reason can be given, except that we wanted to reduce the high cost of living, that we wanted to bring some kind of relief to the toiling masses of the country, to the people that were paying the tremendous toll of the railroads.

Finally we got control of them to a certain extent. We got them subject to the interstate-commerce law, made the Sherman Act apply, and it seemed that we were about to have our innings. The present administration came into power and announced the Panama Canal was going to reduce the railroad rates. The time has come when the people's servants were to make good on their behalf.

On the eve of this resolution we have the practical announcement that the administration is favorable to a judicial decree or a governmental order that the railroad rates are already too low. We are just about to be informed that it is necessary in order that these railroads may be permitted to live, to keep the speculators who exercise a usurped prerogative of ownership from starving, to raise the freight rates.

According to the figures, the capital of the roads in the district that is to receive this rate increase amounts to $1,386,073,429, and a 5 per cent increase is approximately $70,000,000. If we increase the railroad rates in that district $70,000,000, thereby increasing the dividends—profits on stock—$70,000,000, it will be equivalent to increasing the principal more than a billion and a half dollars. A stock which yields a Government guaranteed dividend of $70,000,000 is worth $1,550,000,000, figuring on a 4 per cent basis, and the natural effect of such increase will be to take up a billion and a half dollars' slack out of the limp and watered stock of the railroads in that particular district. If that kind of a proportionate increase is extended all over the country, it will equal about three times that much, and the amount of stock of the railroads which bear the face value of about $20,000,000,000, but are worth not more than $15,000,000,000, will be increased about $5,000,000,000. And if they get the increase in one district, they will want it everywhere.

The people of the country finally succeeded in revising the tariff, and thought they had done something wonderful. Many of us helped to do it and everybody pretended to want to help. We thought we had done something in reducing by a few millions the tariff duties on dutiable goods. And then immediately it is proposed to raise the railroad rates on the articles that are principally placed on the free list. When you raise railroad rates, you put the principal tax on the heavy articles like sugar, rice, lumber, and all those things on the free list. The man who toils and fills his dinner pail day by day is the man who pays the tremendous increase in freight rates. The increased freight on silks and luxuries will be so low proportionately as not to be noticed.

Seventy million dollars in this district is equal to the entire income tax that will be received by the Government over the whole Nation. So if such an order goes into effect, if the Interstate Commerce Commission, as it is said the President favors, does issue a certificate or order requiring the people to raise the rate that they pay the railroads by a sum equal to $70,000,000, it will be equivalent to compelling the consumers of articles on the free list, in the main, to pay into the coffers of the railroads a sum as great as the entire national income tax, and away goes your claim that you have compelled the rich of this country to pay in any greater proportion than the poor.

For my part I would rather let the tariff go on and pay that sum to the Government. It surely is not so offensive to pay a few millions as tariff on the dutiable articles as to compel the rank and file to pay many more millions to the railroads. I would rather pay the tariff to the Government than to pay freight rates to the railroads.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. COX. I want to put a question for information. Can the gentleman from Washington give the committee any facts as to how much of a burden the increased wages to railroad employees has entailed upon the railroads within the last two years?

Mr. BRYAN. I can not give the definite figures.

Mr. COX. Can the gentleman approximate it?

Mr. BRYAN. They claim, and of course it is true, that the increase of wages has caused an increase of the expense of maintaining and operating the lines.

Mr. COX. I saw a statement that it amounted to $50,000,000.

Mr. BRYAN. I do not believe that, especially in this district. The figures do not justify it. There are about 1,750,000 employees on all the railroads in the United States. Testimony before the Interstate Commerce Commission—extracts of which I am proposing to put in the RECORD—show, for instance, that in regard to the Pennsylvania Railroad the agent or representative the other day admitted, in testimony brought out by the matchless cross-examination of Mr. Thorne, that in the last year they had made 9¼ per cent dividend on the capital stock. The result of the cross-examinations that have been carried on show that the Pennsylvania Railroad has been investing in a large amount of property and has made permanent stock issues; that the dividends that would have gone to stockholders had been used to make permanent improvements, and then they complain that on these extra added shares of increased capitalization they do not receive sufficient return, and they say the cost of maintenance has been increased. It is very much a matter of bookkeeping, as the testimony will show.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. How does the gentleman explain the contradiction in the fact that we are about to raise the railroad rates in the United States, and that Canada within the last week issued an order through a commission reducing her rates? How does it come that Canada can do that when the United States is going to increase them?

Mr. BRYAN. It is because Canada has gone more thoroughly into the railroad proposition and has nationalized the great part of her lines. Instead of attempting to control railroads at long distance she is controlling them at short distance, so that she knows the details more thoroughly and she knows the bookkeeping more thoroughly. She has had one bureau in complete authority all over the Dominion of Canada. Canada is committed to the doctrine of government ownership of all its railroad lines, and when the Canadian Government talks about its railroad it is talking about itself to a great extent.

In this country we have one Interstate Commerce Commission, and then we have 48 different States, with their separate railway commissions, and they criss-cross and fight each other, contend with the railroads at one time, and with other jurisdictions at another time. Sometimes they engage in sham battles, sometimes in real battles. Then we have an Attorney General that will not let the New Haven operate unless Mr. Morgan resigns. As fast as the Interstate Commerce Commission gets the railroads to working together under uniform system and uniform accounting the Attorney General goes after them to make them compete and keep fighting each other. The commission tends to lower and the Attorney General to raise rates. The result is that we get nowhere, we accomplish nothing. We ought to have one great nationalized line here belonging to the Government.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman believes the facts do not warrant an increase in these rates?

Mr. BRYAN. I certainly do not believe the facts warrant an increase in the rates.

Mr. MURDOCK. And that if we could get at the real facts a decrease would be in order?

Mr. BRYAN. There are a number of lines where the evidence showed the rates ought to be decreased, quite emphatically so. I think it is right and proper that a little publicity should be given to that side of the case, in view of the reports that are being published generally in the press, and the attempt to intimidate, if possible, the Interstate Commerce Commission and force it into a raise in rates.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. Does the gentleman from Washington favor Government ownership rather than Government regulation?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I think Government regulation has proved a farce. I think the time for playing with this has passed, and that the fiction of ownership ought to be wiped out, and the Government ought to own and run these railroads for the people at cost. There should be no profits or dividends on transportation any more than on the Postal Service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRYAN. In extension of my remarks I call to the attention of the House the fact that the Alaska railroad is the beginning of Government ownership of railroads in the United States. There is no real difference in Alaska and elsewhere so far as the principle of the thing is concerned. Of course the argument was made that in Alaska the Government owns the land, the mines, and the resources; therefore the Government should own the railroads. I agree with that argument that ownership of all these resources should carry with it ownership of the railroads, and since the people own the resources of continental United States, the people should own the roads—the wagon roads and the railroads.

The railroad kings attempt to apply the rule this way: Whoever owns the railroads should own the resources; therefore give us the timberlands, the coal, the mines, the lands. But they have the thing reversed. The people will not give them any more in a wholesale way the resources of this country; the people will own these resources, and we demand the railroads.

The people are going to take the railroads, too. Transportation is a governmental function. All the nations of the world are recognizing that. England has permitted the Rothschild syndicate and the Bank of England crowd to monopolize the railroads, and the result is that Germany, with her nationalized lines, enjoys a very much better rate, and is putting the English manufacturers to all sorts of trouble in trade competition. Why should the Rothschilds levy toll on all the product of all the labor of England? Why should that condition obtain in this country? It is against justice, it is wrong in principle, and must come to an end.

GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP BEING UNIVERSALLY ADOPTED.

Many do not realize that Government ownership of railroads has been accepted by the verdict of practically all the civilized nations of the world as essential. The soundness of the principle that railway transportation, just as the Postal Service, is a Government function has been recognized by 50 out of 54 nations. Only 4 civilized nations refuse to recognize the principle. These are England, Spain, Turkey, and the United States.

In England it is admitted that public sentiment is strongly in favor of Government ownership, and a royal commission has just been appointed to study the matter. In commenting on the situation in England, the Railway Age Gazette of December 5, 1913, says:

> The growing interest in the subject of railway nationalization is strikingly illustrated by the recent appointment in Great Britain of a royal commission to inquire into the relationship between the railway companies and the state in respect of matters other than safety of working and conditions of employment and to report what changes, if any, in that relationship are desirable. The announcement comes almost simultaneously with that of the National Civic Federation in this country of its intention to undertake a national survey of social progress, which will include a study of the question whether regulation of railways and other public-service corporations is a failure, and whether State ownership should be substituted for that of private capital.

Carl S. Vrooman makes the following comment on the progress of Government ownership of railways in England:

> That a similar state of affairs exists in Great Britain, the only other first-class power which still holds firmly to the policy of private ownership and management of transportation facilities, is borne out by a statement which was made to the late Frank W. Parsons not long ago by Mr. W. M. Ackworth, the most conservative railroad authority in England, to the effect that nine out of every ten people in Great Britain would vote for public ownership if the question were submitted to a vote to-morrow.

In other foreign countries there were in 1910, 218,358 miles of government-owned railroad to 98,786 miles of private owned. Just recently Spain has taken steps to build a line across that country to be owned and operated by the Spanish Government.

In speaking of unlocking Alaska, in his recent message President Wilson said:

> One key to it is a system of railways. These the Government should itself build and administer, and the ports and terminals it should itself control in the interest of all who wish to use them for the service and development of the country and its people.

"These the Government itself should build and administer." Is not that strong enough? But President Wilson goes further and tells you the reason why, "in the interest of all who wish to use them."

William Jennings Bryan, good Democratic authority, said in 1906, just after returning from a trip around the world, where he rode most of the land portion of the journey on government-owned railways, said he had despaired of Government regulation and stood personally for Government ownership. After giving splendid reasons for his view, he added:

> Another reason which has led me to favor Government ownership is the fact that the people are annually plundered of an enormous sum by extortionate rates; that places are discriminated against and individuals driven out of business by favoritism shown by the railroads. You say that all these things can be corrected without interference with private ownership. * * * Is there any Democrat who is not willing to go as far as President Roosevelt and admit the necessity of Government ownership in case the people are convinced of the failure of regulation? I can not believe it.

A week or two later, in commenting on his utterances advocating public ownership of all railroads in this country, Mr. Bryan, at Louisville, Ky., in September, 1906, said:

> In my speech at the New York reception I made a brief reference to the Government ownership of railways, and I thought I had expressed myself so clearly that my position could not be misconstrued even by those who desired to misconstrue it. The New York speech was prepared in advance. It was not only written, but it was carefully revised. It stated exactly what I wanted to state, and I have nothing to withdraw or modify in the statement therein made.

The purpose of the present argument is to protest against raising rates and tremendously increasing the value of all railway securities which are held in private hands. So far as the advice not to express opinion while the Interstate Commerce Commission is at work on this delicate judicial matter is concerned, I can simply say that however much I regard the givers of such advice it does not appeal to me at all. Such advice is almost absurd when applied to courts, for the interests always manage to get their view expressed and the courts are always able to decide a case on the merits without regard to such expressions, and in very many cases they do so decide; but when it comes to a trade commission or a commerce commission, I do not lay any stress whatever on the argument. I think the time has come for the people of this country, the Joneses who pay the freight, to come to the relief of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I think the members of that commission have been rendering a great patriotic service to the country. They have been abused and censured at every turn by the great interests and many newspapers for not handing down an order favorable to the railroads. A tremendous campaign has been waged. Yet the commission has held fast to its duties and has refused to be driven into a position that would be an outrage against the plain people of this country, who must in the end pay every cent of the three billions now collected annually by the railroads. Later I intend to present to Congress some of the details of this campaign of intimidation. I wish the people could have the assistance that would come from a compilation of such facts, and I will make the facts public if they are furnished to me. It is impossible to make thorough compilations and at the same time discharge other duties.

I now present for the thoughtful consideration of those who have been reading these fairy tales of starving railroads the following excerpt from the voluminous testimony taken by the commission. Mr. Thorne's cross-examination of Mr. Rea, of the Pennsylvania, is illuminating both as to bookkeeping and as to actual admitted profits:

Mr. THORNE. Mr. Rea, during the past year, 1913, you sold several large blocks of securities of the Pennsylvania Railroad?

Mr. REA. Not very much.

Mr. THORNE. What was the first rather large one sold?

Mr. REA. I do not recall; but we made a stock allotment to our shareholders.

Mr. THORNE. What volume—how much?

Mr. REA. It was a 10 per cent allotment. It realized about $45,000,000.

Mr. THORNE. Did you make any sale to the public?

Mr. REA. That was the public.

Mr. THORNE. Of any other securities?

Mr. REA. That was to the public.
Mr. THORNE. I say, of any other securities?
Mr. REA. Yes; we have sold a number of treasury assets to bankers.
Mr. THORNE. What prices did any of your securities bring that were not allotted to your stockholders?
Mr. REA. The current prices.
Mr. THORNE. What were they?
Mr. REA. I could not tell you offhand.
Mr. THORNE. You do not remember of any large sale of securities that you made last year?
Mr. REA. I do not think we made any.
Mr. THORNE. Did you make any at all last year?
Mr. REA. No. We have sold about $15,000,000 worth of securities since the 1st of January, various kinds of bonds that were in the treasury.
Mr. THORNE. Had you sold any bonds or stocks last year except by stock allotment to the public?
Mr. REA. Car trust certificates, yes; sold through bankers.
Mr. THORNE. How much?
Mr. REA. I think there were eighteen or nineteen millions.
Mr. THORNE. What month was that?
Mr. REA. It was sold, I should think, about a year ago.
Mr. THORNE. Was it about the 1st of April?
Mr. REA. I don't know. There was a report made to the commission about it.
Mr. THORNE. Do you know how long those car-trust certificates run?
Mr. REA. Ten years, payable in annual instalments.
Mr. THORNE. At what price were those sold, at what basis?
Mr. REA. I could not tell you off hand.
Mr. THORNE. Can you state it approximately?
Mr. REA. No.
Mr. THORNE. Is there any man in the room who can state it for you?
Mr. REA. Probably about a 5 per cent basis, although I do not recall it. Judging from market conditions at that time, I should say, if they sold on a 5 per cent basis, it was a favorable sale.
Mr. PATTERSON. That statement will be filed if the commission desires to know.
Mr. THORNE. You are familiar with conditions of the market; you follow that, I presume, closely?
Mr. REA. Very closely.
Mr. THORNE. And you study at what rate people can dispose of their securities, large companies, so as to know the trend of business conditions?
Mr. REA. Yes, sir; that is a part of my duty.
Mr. THORNE. Can you name any other company, in any other line of business than the railroad business, that sold securities, running 10 years—by the way, were there payments to be made annually on those 10-year certificates?
Mr. REA. Yes; all of car trusts are made in that manner.
Mr. THORNE. Can you name any other company that was able to sell securities due within one year, in the form of notes or otherwise, that were able to sell during the month of April, of last year, at a better rate than you did?
Mr. REA. No; I don't know of any. Perhaps I would be modest in mentioning that.
Mr. THORNE. Was there any other company, in any other line of business in the United States, that was able to sell any securities payable 10 years from date, that sold the same, at any better rate than yours were sold, during the month of April, 1913?
Mr. REA. Not that I know of.
Mr. THORNE. When was the next large lot of securities or notes or bonds, sold during the year 1913 by your company, the Pennsylvania Railroad?
Mr. REA. I do not think we sold any, the Pennsylvania Railroad. As I say, we realized $45,000,000 on our capital, on the stock allotment.
Mr. THORNE. That was an allotment at par?
Mr. REA. At par.
Mr. THORNE. About what was the market at that time?
Mr. REA. I suppose about 110 per cent or 115 per cent.
Mr. THORNE. For that stock?
Mr. REA. The par is 50 of Pennsylvania stock, and that would make it about $55 a share or $54—I don't remember at the time.
Mr. THORNE. Does a stock allotment have any effect of depressing for a time market values of your outstanding securities?
Mr. REA. It generally does.
Mr. THORNE. It is a sort of a redivision, is it not?
Mr. REA. It is an enlargement of the shareholders.
Mr. THORNE. And naturally must have that effect?
Mr. REA. Yes; that is the tendency.
Mr. THORNE. Another thing. During the year 1912 did you make any sales of notes, bonds, or stocks, aside from stock allotment?
Mr. REA. Nineteen hundred and twelve?
Mr. THORNE. Yes.
Mr. REA. I could not recall. We generally do some financing each year.
Mr. THORNE. I notice an increase of your property investment of something over $200,000,000 since 1910. Do you know how much of that represents new capital and how much is built out of surplus and income?
Mr. REA. Well, my statement explains the addition of the New York tunnel extension.
Mr. THORNE. I do not mean the details. Do you know as to the whole?
Mr. REA. That is a very large sum that went into the account in that year, and it is explained in the statement.
Mr. THORNE. Do you know the total amount of new capital put into property—not out of earnings or income, but out of new capital?
Mr. REA. When?
Mr. THORNE. Since 1910.
Mr. REA. We could furnish it to you.
Mr. THORNE. I would like very much to have that. Do you know during the last five years any time you made any sales of bonds that any other company in any other line of business in the United States was able to sell their bonds at a better rate?
Mr. REA. It seems to me that is tantamount to asking me whether the credit of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. is not about at the top.
Mr. THORNE. That is just exactly what I am asking.
Mr. REA. Well, if you want my opinion, I should say that it is.
Mr. THORNE. I understand that one of the main propositions upon which you rely is the return on the property investment, which you claim is inadequate. Am I correct?
Mr. REA. Yes, sir.

Mr. THORNE. I desire to call your attention to this sentence from the annual report of the Interstate Commerce Commission of 1908:
"It is a well-known fact that no court, or commission, or accountant, or financial writer would for a moment consider that the present balance-sheet statements, purporting to give the 'cost of property,' suggests, even in a remote degree, a reliable measure either of money invested or of a present value."
Do you have any modification or correction of your statement you have made as to relying upon return on your property investment?
Mr. REA. After hearing that?
Mr. THORNE. Yes.
Mr. REA. No, sir. I do not see the relation myself.
Mr. THORNE. Do you approve of what I have just stated? Do you agree with it?
Mr. REA. With that?
Mr. THORNE. Yes.
Mr. REA. Well, it is a mere declaration.
Mr. THORNE. Do you believe that is correct?
Mr. REA. In part; yes.
Mr. THORNE. That the property investment, the cost of property accounts of the carriers, do not suggest even in a remote degree a reliable measure, either of money invested or of present value?
Mr. REA. I should think they must have had the Pennsylvania in mind when they wrote that, because I have stated here that our property investment account, as shown on the balance sheet, is far, far below the actual money that has gone into it.
Mr. THORNE. Is it a measure of the money that has gone into it from the owners of the property or from earnings?
Mr. REA. What is the difference between money appropriated from earnings, withheld from dividends, legally and morally distributable, and money raised on the issuance of new securities?
Mr. THORNE. I do not desire at this time to take time to argue that question. It is a matter of argument before the commission. I was merely asking, to find out, if I could, fairly, what your position was in regard to it. And I do again ask, Is it your idea that you are entitled to a return upon a property investment which does not represent or suggest in the remotest degree either the value or investment?
Mr. REA. I think that is a straining of the commission's declaration, Mr. Thorne, if you will pardon the expression. In other words, I think if you put that construction on it it would be equivalent to saying that all of our accounts are inaccurate and wrong.
Mr. THORNE. It has reference to only one of the accounts—in regard to your cost of property.
Mr. REA. I have told you that our own is far, far below the actual money that has gone into property.
Mr. THORNE. And gone in from outside sources or from earnings?
Mr. REA. No matter where it came from, it is money.
Mr. THORNE. Can you tell me what amount of money has gone in from outside sources into your property? Would you be able to give that figure to the commission?
Mr. REA. I think we have.
Mr. PATTERSON. It is already in the record.
Mr. THORNE. No; from outside sources?
Mr. REA. From outside sources?
Mr. THORNE. Yes.
Mr. PATTERSON. You mean the capital of the company?
Mr. THORNE. I mean no investment from earnings or income.
Mr. PATTERSON. That is from inside sources.
Mr. REA. We have already stated that our capital stock of the Pennsylvania is fully paid in cash. That is $500,000,000, in round figures.
Mr. THORNE. I notice an increase of $30,000,000 in total capitalization since 1910. Would it be your judgment from outside sources and not from the earnings of the property?
Mr. REA. I don't know. I don't know to what you refer. Where do you get that $30,000,000?
Mr. THORNE. That applies to the property east and west, the system.
Mr. REA. That is probably correct, if it is on that statement.
Mr. THORNE. That would represent approximately the investment, then, from outside sources; is that the answer?
Mr. REA. If that is the figure. I should want to verify it.
Mr. PATTERSON. Whatever figure is stated in the 10-year statement is believed to be correct.
Mr. REA. On page 5 of my statement I said:
"For these purposes the property investment account of the system, I have stated, increased in the last 10 years $530,000,000; of this about $366,000,000 were provided out of new capital and $164,000,000 of surplus."
Mr. THORNE. That does not answer my question. My question was for 1910.
Mr. REA. Why not?
Mr. THORNE. My question was for 1910. You are making some comparison between 1910 and 1913.
Mr. PATTERSON. What does the 10-year statement show?
Mr. BUNTING. It indicates about $31,000,000.
Mr. PATTERSON. Then I think there is no doubt Mr. Rea will say it is correct.
Mr. REA. I have no doubt that is correct, sir.
Mr. THORNE. There has been considerable testimony in this case tending to show that the carrier can adjust its maintenance allowances somewhat in accordance with the policies of the company, rather than being controlled by the absolute needs of the property; that from year to year you decide how much you can do, considering the resources available, and adjust your maintenance to a large extent in accordance with that. Do you coincide substantially with that statement?
Mr. REA. I do not think that is quite the view that I got or that I have.
Mr. THORNE. Would you state what that is?
Mr. REA. In the first place, there is very little leeway given to the carriers with respect to their charges to maintenance, either of equipment or maintenance of way. A company can, if it takes the chances, allow its property to depreciate and run down. It can, as was formerly the custom in years gone by, work with a very close margin on maintenance of way and maintenance of equipment in lean years and then in good years pile it on strong.
Now, with the new rules of the Interstate Commerce Commission as promulgated June 30, 1907, a new condition of affairs came about. I believe generally that all of the railroad companies are endeavoring to live up to those rules and orders as rigidly as it is possible for them to do it.
Among other things, it requires depreciation of equipment. They made no order at that time with respect to maintenance of way.

although I asked them some years ago for that, and they have since given us permission to adopt a program of depreciation for maintenance of way and equipment.

Now, then, a corporation is not unlike an individual. You must at the beginning of every year look forward to what your possible income will be and the extent to which you can make your expenditures for various items.

We on the Pennsylvania under present conditions provide for our depreciation for equipment based on our experience of past years, and then we charge it out in accordance with train-miles, which gives us a measure of the charge in relation to the business actually done. We expect to do that with respect to our maintenance of way. The property will depreciate materially, due to the elements, whether you run trains over it or not; and if you defer in one year you must make up in the future.

In other words, if you do not do your full duty by your maintenance of way this year you may not be able to do it; but it will follow you, and it must be done in the future. So that in years that have gone by, prior to 1907, anyhow, the method of charging out expenses was more or less irregular by all carriers. I think, however, since that date there has been much more uniformity, and it is steadier and better all the time.

Mr. THORNE. You say it has been steadier all the time. The attention of Mr. Rogers was called this morning to this fact, that in 1909, as compared to 1908, there was a decrease in your maintenance of way and structures; the next year, in 1910, an increase of 27 per cent; the next year a decrease in way and structures; the next year an increase of 2⅔ per cent; the next year an increase of 29 per cent—that is, 1913. I asked Mr. Rogers to state what peculiar circumstances existed in those two years that there should be that remarkable increase compared to the other years, and the only statement that he finished, because of other interruptions, was that there had been considerable extensions and additions, and the rules of the commission permit the charging of replacement in kind to operating expenses in such cases.

Are there any other facts than I have just stated peculiar to the two years which I named that caused that rather remarkable variation from the per cent of increase of the other years that occur to you?

Mr. REA. I do not think, if you will pardon me for saying so, you have fully explained Mr. Rogers's answers. I have read them all over very carefully and indorsed them fully. I do not think there is very much else to be said.

Mr. THORNE. Read them over?

Mr. REA. Yes; he presented his testimony here and gave you the reasons.

Mr. THORNE. Well, it was just this morning. You say you have read them over.

Mr. REA. Well, presented here in an exhibit.

Mr. THORNE. I was referring to his answer in respect to a question I put to him on this particular point. There was not anything with reference to that in the exhibit.

Mr. REA. Has not he explained the figures?

Mr. THORNE. He said it was substantially constant. You have said you thought they were more constant and regular since the change of the rules in 1907 and 1908.

Mr. REA. Yes.

Mr. THORNE. I have just called your attention to these large variations, and I simply ask you if you have any other important facts, other than what I stated to you, to account for that variation.

Mr. REA. No; except the financial panic of 1907, which is a very important fact.

Mr. THORNE. I call your attention to the fact that the commission in the 1910 case held that the company should be entitled to 5 per cent on its common stock after paying all fixed charges and have 2½ per cent for surplus, or 6 per cent on its common stock and 1½ per cent for surplus. I notice by the exhibit filed by your representatives in this case that one of the factors relied upon is the return on investment.

Mr. PATTERSON. There is no statement to that effect.

Mr. THORNE. These exhibits are put in; you are relying on these exhibits——

Mr. PATTERSON. To give the facts. I will explain to you the theories.

Mr. THORNE. Do you consider, Mr. Rea, the return on capitalization, as of any significance, in view of what I have just stated, in regard to the ruling of the commission in 1910?

Mr. REA. I think the return on the property investment is a safer guide.

Mr. THORNE. Do you consider this other guide of any significance that was suggested by Mr. Commissioner Prouty in the unanimous opinion of the commission?

Mr. REA. All the elements should be considered.

Mr. THORNE. Should that element be considered?

Mr. REA. Well, that is a matter of opinion.

Mr. THORNE. In your judgment is it fair to consider that as one of the elements in analyzing the——

Mr. REA (interposing). Not as stated by Mr. Prouty, or whoever made that statement.

Mr. THORNE. You do not agree with that statement?

Mr. REA. No, sir; I do not.

Mr. THORNE. I call your attention to the fact that the exhibits filed by your representatives in this case, covering the Pennsylvania system east and west, shows after paying all operating expenses, and all taxes, all fixed charges, a return of 9.64 per cent for the year 1913.

Mr. PATTERSON. Return on what?

Mr. THORNE. Capital stock outstanding. Is that correct or not?

Mr. REA. That is correct.

Mr. THORNE. Now, Mr. Rea, I will ask you this question: What, in your judgment, ought that percentage to be in order to be adequate?

Mr. REA. I don't know.

Mr. THORNE. Have you any suggestion what it ought to be?

Mr. REA. Yes, sir; I have.

Mr. THORNE. What is it, in your opinion?

Mr. REA. In 1903 that same figure was 14.07 per cent.

Mr. THORNE. Do you think it ought to be 14 per cent?

Mr. REA. It has been gradually receding ever since, until in 1913 it reached 9.64 per cent, which was lower than any year in the 10-year period.

Mr. THORNE. Mr. Rea, can you show me any other instance in that entire series of years when the maintenance was as large as it was in 1913?

Mr. REA. No. We never did anything like the volume of business and we did not have $500,000,000 of capital stock.

Mr. THORNE. Do you know how much your maintenance would have been if it had been the same percentage of gross, which represents the volume of business, in 1913 as it was in 1912?

Mr. REA. No; I could not; but I don't think that would have been a guide unless you knew what was going on in 1912.

Mr. THORNE. Supposing 1912 was the largest maintenance in your history up to that time. Can you show me another year in that entire table when your maintenance charge was larger than in 1912?

Mr. REA. No; I would not expect it to be.

Mr. THORNE. If your maintenance in 1913 had been the same per cent of gross as in 1912, you would have had a return of 14.1 per cent on your capital stock outstanding above all your fixed charges and taxes.

I will now ask you, is it your claim that 9.64 is too small and that it ought to be that 14 per cent which you had in 1913 above all fixed charges and taxes?

Mr. REA. I will not say what it ought to be.

Mr. THORNE. Do you care to give us any light as to what you think it ought to be?

Mr. REA. Not any more than I have already stated.

Mr. THORNE. That is all.

Mr. REA. Based upon our experience, a substantial margin above the amount to be distributed is necessary to maintain the property and give the proper service.

Mr. BRANDEIS. In connection with that question, I asked you to submit figures as between the passenger and freight——

The CHAIRMAN. Just a minute. Is that all with Mr. Rea?

Mr. LYON. I have a few questions yet.

Mr. BRANDEIS. In that connection I would like to call this to the attention of Mr. Bunting and the commission. Mr. Bunting, I understood you to say there was a readjustment of the division in 1907, and that that would prevent the figures being comparable.

Mr. BUNTING. I think that was the year; it was about that time.

Mr. BRANDEIS. I merely wanted to call the attention of the commission to the fact, and also the attention of Mr. Bunting to the fact, that it perhaps would not have a very important bearing on the adjustment, from the report of the Pennsylvania as to the net earnings. The net revenue from passenger service decreased per passenger mile from 4.91 in 1907 to 1.46 in 1913; that is, the great decrease in passenger revenue took place from 1907, as it had taken place also from 1903. It was then 4.60. It was 4.90 in 1907 and fell to 1.46 in 1913, whereas the decrease in the freight returns per ton per mile was from 1.76 to 1.64 in 1907 and to 1.55 in 1913. That is, even if there was some adjustment, we should be very glad to have the details.

Mr. BUNTING. I merely mentioned it because it was quite a large one. Taxes are also in there.

Mr. BRANDEIS. But it did not very seriously affect the results in the figures so far as presented.

Mr. BUNTING. It was a pretty large amount, somewhere about $3,000,000, I think. Taxes had also increased since 1908. But I will furnish the figures on a comparative basis.

Mr. BOND. Won't you state how much that is divided on a train-mile basis and how much the decrease in freight-train miles has thrown onto the passenger service? In the case of the Baltimore & Ohio it threw more than 4 per cent by saving three millions in freight, that increased the expenses of the passenger more than 4 per cent.

Mr. BUNTING. I am inclined to think that when you get these figures they will be absolutely valueless.

Mr. BRANDEIS. We assume the Pennsylvania, in giving these figures to us, as well as to the public, have done the best they could.

Mr. BUNTING. For purposes of comparison one with the other they are valueless.

Mr. BRANDEIS. We assume not only for purposes of comparison, but we assume also actually they have done the best they could in presenting the facts, and that the estimates are the best judgment they could form. Is not that the fact, Mr. Bunting?

Mr. BUNTING. They have done the best they could.

Mr. BRANDEIS. That is all we can ask.

Mr. LYON. Mr. Rea, in your statement, on page 3, you say the cost of the New York tunnel was $108,000,000, which was charged into the property investment account for the year ending June 30, 1913. Is it reasonable for a railroad to expect a return upon such an investment immediately after it is made?

Mr. REA. No; we do not expect it. As I explain in my statement, none of these large expenditures can be expected to be immediately productive to their full value.

Mr. LYON. These expenditures by the Pennsylvania, as you have clearly set forth, have been very large in the last three years, amounting to $500,000,000—10 years.

Mr. REA. You will observe nearly half of it is due to New York tunnel extension being brought into the account on account of the commission's ruling

Mr. LYON. The operation of that tunnel, I see by Poor's Manual, shows a deficit of $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 a year.

Mr. REA. Well, the Pennsylvania operates it, and assumes that.

Mr. LYON. Was it reasonable to expect your net operating revenue to increase immediately after putting into your property investment account—and I mean the return upon the property investment—such large sums as for the New York Terminal?

Mr. REA. The actual expenditure there was spread over a period of 9 years.

Mr. LYON. I understand that.

Mr. REA. It did not appear in the operating account until 1911. Of course, we had to furnish the money as we went along.

Mr. LYON. But the actual increase in property investment was not made for the year ending June 30, 1911, but made during a period of 10 or 11 years?

Mr. REA. Quite right.

Mr. LYON. And on your books it appears as though it were made for the year ending June 30, 1911?

Mr. REA. No. I understand it is only in the operating account, is it not?

Mr. BUNTING. No; property-investment account for the year ending June 30, 1911.

Mr. LYON. In other words, $108,000,000 was thrown into the property-investment account——

Mr. BUNTING. There was no property-investment account for the Pennsylvania tunnel and the terminal prior to 1911, because the commission does not prescribe a property-investment account for a road under construction. The minute it is open for operation, then it is the property-investment account, and that company goes into the combined statement of all the roads of the Pennsylvania Railroad system.

Mr. LYON. In other words, it was suddenly increased by that amount, in one year; that is correct, is it not?

Mr. BUNTING. Yes.

Mr. LYON. And now you do not show a return upon that suddenly-increased amount, growing out of a large passenger terminal. Is it reasonable to expect the return to show——

Mr. REA. Take it out, and the result is not so very much different.

Mr. LYON. Maybe not; but $108,000,000 is quite a sum of money, about 10 per cent of the property investment.

Mr. PATTERSON. If you take it out, Mr. Rea, you would still have no return upon the remaining $100,000,000?

Mr. REA. Quite right.

Mr. LYON. Are there any other large sums that have been spent by the Pennsylvania in rebuilding this line almost completely from Pittsburgh to Trenton?

Mr. REA. Not rebuilding; building an additional line. We are passing from a four-track to a six-track railroad between New York and Philadelphia and Pittsburgh.

Mr. LYON. Has not the Pennsylvania Railroad track been substantially rebuilt in the last 10 or 15 years?

Mr. REA. In many places.

Mr. LYON. Through the mountains almost completely rebuilt?

Mr. REA. Rebuilt and we have improved it.

Mr. LYON. When those improvements are going on it is a fact that your operating expenses are rather abnormal?

Mr. REA. It tends to increase the operating expenses oftentimes. In our case, as you know, these lines were built away from the main lines and they did not interfere with them. From Harrisburg to Trenton it was an entirely new location, and so over the Allegheny Mountains, and it did not interfere with main-line traffic.

Mr. LYON. A good deal of the money was expended on account of places where it did interfere?

Mr. REA. I am sure that is going on everywhere—on every railroad. That is one of the things we have with us always.

Mr. LYON. In the statement you have filed here I find your transportation account has run along parallel lines with your operating revenue substantially since 1898. I have diagramed it from the reports which have been furnished by the systems, and I have it for the Pennsylvania lines.

The maintenance of way and structure practically proceeded along the same lines until the year 1913, when it suddenly crossed your income and mounts up very high.

The same is strikingly true of your equipment in 1913, and to a large extent also true in 1912, although strikingly so in 1913.

Would you think in a year of that kind, showing your net income, it would be fair for the commission to consider your net income in a year of such conditions, as to the maintenance account, in determining whether there should be an increase of rates on your system?

Mr. REA. I think it is entirely proper, in view of the explanation we have made through Mr. Wallis and Mr. Rogers, which are indorsed by me.

Mr. LYON. The explanations which they made?

Mr. REA. They have given you the reasons for this increase and the probability that it will continue.

Mr. LYON. They were not very emphatic about their continuing.

Mr. REA. How are you going to change it? You are not going back to the small car, the light rail, the small railroad. Their testimony is on file. I think it substantiates what I say.

Mr. BUNTING. It certainly does.

Mr. LYON. Then your opinion is the maintenance account of 1913 would be the normal maintenance account for the Pennsylvania for the future?

Mr. REA. I regard that as pretty nearly as near as you can judge.

Mr. LYON. Have not the New York Central Lines——

Mr. REA. Of course, based on the business. If the tonnage goes down, the traffic goes down; the maintenance account may be reduced somewhat. You can not cut off your depreciation.

Mr. LYON. I find that your maintenance account has increased much more rapidly than your tonnage for the year 1913.

Mr. REA. And for the reasons stated in their testimony.

Mr. LYON. If you were to take the years 1910 to 1912 and add to that a percentage based upon the increased business which you did in 1913, and from that get your maintenance account, you would have had $11,000,000 more net than you actually showed through the expenditure you made in 1913.

Mr. REA. That is a very short method of reaching a conclusion, and I do not think it is at all satisfactory or accurate. It is mere assumption. Based on business done, I think there is very little variation.

Mr. LYON. What is little variation?

Mr. REA. But, after all, gentlemen, in comparing one year with another you must look at the standard of the property. How can you sit here and determine a comparison between 1913 and 1910 unless you knew what the property was then and the conditions surrounding it in that year? These comparisons are very fallacious.

Mr. LYON. The commission has got to do the best it can. It does not know this property, and can not see all those things which you can see. All they can do is to judge the future by the past. Of course, merely to say that what you have done in 1913 is all right if it shows a large increase, I can not think it would be the basis of the commission's opinion.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to detain the committee in reference to the bill, and had not intended to say a word. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] has been discussing the question of whether the Interstate Commerce Commission is to permit a raise in rates on the different railroads of the country. I have no opinion upon that subject. The Interstate Commerce Commission was created in the belief and the hope that a commission wholly outside of political activity, in a way representing the legislative end of the Government, not under the influence of either the railroads or the shippers, standing between the two, hearing evidence and argument, might reach a conclusion which would be accepted by the people as just or as nearly just as there is any method of reaching justice. All decisions of the Supreme Court, I take it, are not correct, and yet we have to leave matters to the Supreme Court. So far as railroad rates are concerned the Interstate Commerce Commission is the Supreme Court. I do not believe those intimations which have appeared at some times in the newspapers that the President has intimated to the Interstate Commerce Commission that he favors an increase in rates. I do not believe that any of the officials of the Government would express directly or indirectly such an opinion to the Interstate Commerce Commission or seek in any way whatever to influence the action, the judgment, or the orders of that commission. After all, in these controversial questions somebody must reach a determination. For years we kept on increasing the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission with much hesitancy on the part of the legislative body of the country, feeling it was being granted too great a power; but from time to time, with the experience that we had, we have increased the powers of that commission. That increase in general was asked for by the shippers, and at times was objected to by the railroads. That commission has these powers now. I believe it to be an honest body, an intelligent body, a body wholly apart, in my judgment, from political considerations in the way of partisan politics, at least, a body which will endeavor to reach and will reach, as well as finite nature can reach, a just determination of this and other questions relating to railroad rates; and I am quite content to keep to myself any opinion on the subject I might have and let the commission render its judgment, and accept the judgment of the commission. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman not believe that this matter is so important that the commission ought to be the best judge of what time it will take them to properly investigate and arrive at a decision?

Mr. MANN. If I did not so express myself, I failed to make myself plain.

Mr. SIMS. I so understood; but there has been much talk of rushing the commission through, pell-mell, and I think the commission ought to have all of the time necessary, and ought to be the judges of that, and it is altogether out of place for us on the outside to try and rush them one way or the other.

Mr. MANN. I fully agree with that statement.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Has the commission finished the taking of testimony in the case?

Mr. MANN. I am not able to inform the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. They were taking testimony a few days ago. If the testimony is concluded, it certainly has been concluded within the last two or three days.

Mr. BRYAN. It has not been concluded; but if the gentleman will allow me just a brief interruption, it has been published in all of the papers that the President has an opinion on the matter, and great publicity has been given to that. Just the other day, on press day, there was issued from the White House, or at least published, after the reporters had left the White House, in the Washington Star and other papers the following statement:

> The President to-day declined to publicly express himself about the proposed increase of freight rates, as he does not wish to be placed in the position of influencing the Interstate Commerce Commission, but he did not denounce or deny any of the stories printed that he privately hopes to see the request of the railroads given favorable consideration by the commission.

That statement has been published repeatedly in practically all of the press of the country—that the President has a positive view on the matter, and hopes that the increase will be made.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the President, I believe, invites the newspaper correspondents to meet him twice a week, and permits any of them to ask him any kind of a question. It is a somewhat difficult position in which the President places himself, whether he answers or does not answer, and some correspondent may honestly print a story as to what the President privately believes, while the President publicly states that he will not express an opinion. I do not for one moment believe that the President, or that any man who could be elected President of the United States, would endeavor to influence the opinion of the Supreme Court on a question pending before that court, or that he would endeavor to influence the judgment of the Interstate Commerce Commission on questions pending before that commission. [Applause.]

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. FOWLER. The gentleman was interrogated about the time of taking the testimony. I ask the gentleman if it is not currently reported that at least a portion of the hearings is to be concluded on the 28th instant?

Mr. MANN. I do not know, I will say to the gentleman. I have nothing to do with the question, and do not concern myself with it because I have no desire to form an opinion on a matter concerning which I ought not to have an opinion. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, agreeing fully with the gentleman from Illinois, I would like to ask him one further question, and that is, if in his judgment the determination of whether existing rates are reasonable or unreasonable, or the proposed increase is reasonable or unreasonable, that to pass on such a question is to exercise quasi judicial power, and that the commission should be given all the consideration and respect that we would give to a court under such circumstances?

Mr. MANN. Oh, while the commission is designated as the legislative commission, practically it is a court. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has three minutes left.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, in that time I can not do more than reiterate the opinion which I expressed in this House two years ago, when this bill was under consideration. At that time I had given the matter a good deal of attention and made some examination of the very voluminous records of the Treasury Department, and, I think, had read all the Supreme Court cases that had any bearing whatever upon the matter involved here. I said then:

> These parties have not sued in time. They have been guilty of laches. They have sinned away their day of grace. They had the opportunity under the act which allowed them to sue within two years of the time the war closed. They had their remedy under the act of 1872. Now it is proposed not only to change the doctrine that has been absolutely the unbroken policy; but, mark you, sir, it is proposed to amend the law so as to take away from the Government of the United States the defense as to requiring proof of loyalty by claimants, which its own attorneys are making now in the cases pending in court.

It seems to me, from what I have heard of the arguments here to-day, that the case is going off on a misunderstanding of the facts involved. The facts are that substantially the only property that can be reached in this bill is property which was owned by the Confederacy at the close of the war. Now, in order that there can not be any doubt about that, I quote from a circular issued from the Treasury Department on the 9th day of January, 1900, Circular No. 4, copies of which can be obtained. Remember this fund reached, originally, something like $25,000,000. It has been paid out from time to time under various acts of Congress; the Government has been just as well as generous, and out of that fund from time to time amounts have been paid until it is reduced to something like $5,000,000. Now, here is the conclusion the Secretary of the Treasury reached after a most careful investigation. He says in this circular:

> It follows, therefore, that the balance of the fund in the Treasury received from the sale of cotton represents the proceeds received from the sale of cotton that belonged to the Confederacy.

Now, the argument that is made here concerning the rights of individual claimants is entirely beside the mark. The fact is that these claimants have already had their day in court; the fact is that this cotton was sold to the Confederacy—not confiscated by the Confederate Government, but sold to the Confederate Government, a perfectly bona fide commercial transaction in every respect. The representatives or officers of the Confederate Government went into the open market and bought this cotton in competition with other buyers and paid for it.

Mr. MURDOCK. With what?

Mr. WILLIS. With the only money in circulation in the Confederacy—Confederate currency; and I submit it was not an act of confiscation.

On July 1, 1912, I addressed a letter to the Attorney General making inquiry as to the nature of these claims. The reply which came from his office appears in full in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 4, 1912, and from that reply I quote the following:

> Most of the claims were rejected on the ground that the cotton had been sold to the Confederate Government by the original owners, as shown by bills of sale. In the case of Whitfield v. The United States (92 U. S., 165) the Supreme Court held that such bills of sale passed title, and no recovery could be had by the original owners for cotton so disposed of.
> The object and legal effect of the bills referred to by you are to amend section 162 so as to dispense with proof of loyalty, to nullify the bills of sale to the Confederate Government, and to make judgments in this class of cases free from the claims of assignees in bankruptcy or insolvency.
> The policy of enacting such legislation is a matter entirely for the consideration of Congress.
> The reports from the Treasury Department in the cases that have been filed since the 1st of January under said section 162 of the new Judicial Code mostly show that the cotton had been sold to the Confederate Government and bills of sale given by the original owners. The reports in another class of cases show that cotton had been bought by the Confederate Government and resold or contracted for to individuals, who now make claims to the proceeds thereof.
> In view of the fact that section 162 of the new Judicial Code did not go into effect until the 1st of last January, and, furthermore, that the various questions which the Government have raised under this act have not been passed upon by the court, and, in addition to this, the fact that in no instance have the claimants' attorneys who are now seeking to recover under this section presented a case in which they are ready for trial, it would seem that before further legislation time should be given for adjudication of some cases under the recent law.

The Confederate Government was the purchaser of this cotton, and in a great many cases the Confederate Government followed the policy of leaving this cotton in the hands of the vendor, constituting him, as it were, the bailee. Now, it is claimed by some that title to this cotton did not pass to the Confederate Government, but remained in the original vendor. In the last Congress bills were pending, and I think they have been reintroduced in this Congress by gentlemen who contend that inasmuch as the Confederacy fell and this currency became worthless that therefore these sales were null and void, and therefore these people who, in order to aid the Confederacy by enabling it to hypothecate stores of cotton, actually sold their cotton to the Confederate Government and got the money for it and spent the money are at this late day, by removal of the requirement of proof of loyalty, to be allowed to come in and present their claims, have the charge of disloyalty removed, and get a portion of this $5,000,000. I repeat, that nearly every penny of this $5,000,000 was the proceeds of the sale of property of the Confederate Government; that these claimants are not entitled to it; and that this bill ought not to pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Thirty minutes.

Mr. WATKINS. I thought I had more time, I thought the gentleman from Texas did not consume all of his time.

The CHAIRMAN. He did.

Mr. WATKINS. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON].

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman from Mississippi begins I desire to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting certain matter to which I have referred.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SISSON. Gentlemen of the committee, the statement just made by the gentleman from Ohio was a statement which was thrashed out between the gentleman and myself in the debate which occurred when this bill passed the House by an overwhelming majority before. Here is a list of the names of the parties whose cotton was taken and to which the Confederate government had no shadow of a claim. However, I did not intend to go into a legal discussion of the rights of a private citizen, for that question is not involved in this bill, for all the decisions of the Supreme Court hold that even when cotton was taken from a private citizen, even during hostilities, if he was restored to citizenship by act of Congress, that he was restored to all the rights of any other citizen.

But this is not involved in this question at all. Take the bill and read it and you will find that the only cotton that can be recovered for is cotton which was taken in the fall of 1865, which was produced by the citizens during the year 1865 or held by them at that time as their own private property. A great deal of cotton was actually taken which was produced in 1866; that is, it was actually planted and gathered during that year. In fact, all of the cotton taken as covered in this bill is cotton that was taken after hostilities had ceased. If we were called upon to rest our case upon the decisions of the Supreme Court, then we would have the right to ask that the bar that has stood against our people all these years be removed. Why, I stated to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] in the debate—and I am not in accord with many of my southern colleagues—that I took the position then, and I take the position now, that when a citizen of the South sold his cotton to the Confederate Government the title to the cotton passed into the Confederate Government, and when that government failed the Government of the United States had the right to that cotton.

Mr. GREGG. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. SISSON. I will.

Mr. GREGG. I want to state to the gentleman that we have in the Committee on War Claims a list of the cotton that it was claimed by the Treasury Department was sold by individuals to the Confederate Government, and we allow no bills for any of that cotton at all.

Mr. SISSON. And every bale of cotton that can be identified as having been the property of the Confederate Government is listed as property of the Confederate Government on the books of the Treasury Department, and this list which has been furnished here is the list of cotton for which the Confederate Government never had a claim; and to show you that they recognize the justice of this claim, every man whose cotton was taken under like conditions who was loyal to the Federal Government in the South, and many of them, by the way, whose wives had no opportunity to show disloyalty, went into the courts, and I expect they stretched the blanket just a little bit as to their loyalty, and recovered cotton claims identically like these. But the unfortunate situation was that a limitation as to time within which to file suit was placed in the first bill after the Civil War. That time was two years. In the law there was a provision that the claimant should make oath and prove that he had always in the past been loyal to the Federal Government. This he could not do. That bar has been against him from that day to this. Those men, after the Confederate Army surrendered in 1865, and after all active hostilities ceased, went back to a destroyed country and into their cotton fields and gathered the cotton in the fall of 1865, which was ginned and baled. This was their property. The Government had no right to it. Then in 1866 they stepped into the furrow and planted a crop and worked and gathered it. This was also theirs, and the Federal Government had no right to it. These Government agents, or most of them, were not altogether as honest as they might be, and this cotton was taken irrespective of the claims of many of the people of the South. The honest Government agents, when there was no Confederate tag or mark upon it, and when the evidence was that it was cotton that was gathered in 1865 and produced in 1866, sold the cotton, and, taking the expenses of the sale out, covered the money into the Treasury to the credit of those people, and it is there now, according to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury. It stands there to the credit of these people.

Now, it has been urged here that it has been a long, long time. One of the most distinguished lawyers that ever served in this House was the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Moon, and he is literally a Philadelphia lawyer. When he, with his Republican colleagues, in majority in this House, and with Republicans in majority in the Senate, on the joint committee, revised the civil laws, they believed they had removed the bar so that these people could prove their identity and could prove that they were entitled to the money that was put to their credit in the Treasury. And they believed that they had removed the bar. While I was a member of that committee, I was not a member of the joint commission. We had to go through 17 volumes of the acts and boil them down to this little act here which I now hold in my hand, and when all the work was done and assembled it was found that the right to recover was given, but they realized when it was too late to change it that they had failed to amend the procedure. Those of you who will examine it will find in section 159 this clause—this is in reference to your right to go into court with your petition, omitting that part of the section which has no bearing on this issue—and I will read only that. It says:

SEC. 159. * * * that the claimant, and where the claim has been assigned the original and every prior owner thereof, if a citizen, has at all times borne true allegiance to the Government of the United States, and, whether a citizen or not, has not in any way voluntarily aided, abetted, or given encouragement to rebellion against the said Government, and that he believes the facts as stated in the said petition to be true. The said petition shall be verified by the affidavit of the claimant, his agent or attorney.

Now, the man who had fought in the Confederate Army had taken the oath of allegiance, had come under the flag in good faith, and, as has been contended by many of the great statesmen of the country, was never out from under the flag, but was only in rebellion under the flag, can never recover from the Government any claim, however just, if that clause applies to him, even though the claim arose after the war. We in this bill are only asking that the Confederate soldier be dealt with according to the terms laid down by Mr. Lincoln—lay down your arms, resume your former relations to the Union, and you shall have all the rights that all the citizens of these States have.

They accepted the terms at Appomattox; they did it in good faith; and since that time they have borne the burdens with you of the North all these years. They have borne the burdens of war with you; they have defended the flag as loyally as you have. In addition to that, if the United States Government should get into trouble to-day they would prove their loyalty with their blood. Yet to recover what was theirs they have waited all these years, because even that which they produced with their labor was denied them, even though produced after they had surrendered in good faith, because the law required that they must swear that they had always borne true allegiance to the Government. Therefore, under this act, any citizen who has a claim against the Federal Government, if it arose out of a transaction only a few weeks back, the old Confederate soldier would have to so swear to-day, if the Government did not pay his claim without suit, before he could recover, and it would be a bar to an old soldier, even though he fought in the Spanish War for the flag. Is the time not here to do him justice and give him what he labored for after the war was over?

But I am not insisting here that you shall change the law in reference to the claims occurring during the Civil War and where the cotton was sold to the Confederate Government, but I do ask you in the name of justice, in the name of fairness, to say to these people whose cotton was taken after the war and was sold by the Government and the proceeds paid into the Treasury and is there now to their credit, that that money shall be paid to them. It is theirs. The war was over, hostilities had ceased and peace was restored. The Government had no right to this cotton. Be just and fair is all that I ask. Say to the old Confederate soldier and his children that our Government does not want a penny of money which it took from them unjustly after the war. For certain purposes of administration they did not remove the laws of war until 1866, when Gen. Grant was sent down into all the southern capitals and made an investigation to ascertain whether those States had in good faith abolished slavery by law, and whether or not they were contracting with the erstwhile slaves, then freedmen.

Gen. Grant makes a most glowing report. I wish all of you could read the report that the great general made when he went through the South and pictured the conditions there, horrible as they were, showing how heroically and how courageously and how in good faith the white people of the South were endeavoring to live up to their obligation; how they went back and gathered their crop, were laboring to rebuild their homes and to overcome the ravages of war. Prior to that time, with no courts open to them, the Government agents in the preceding fall had gathered up all the cotton, making no distinction as to whose cotton it was, but took it all.

Now, what we ask you to do is not to pay for the cotton that was taken by an agent that did not go into the Treasury, but to pay these people that money that now stands to their credit in the Treasury of the United States. Why, you say, has it not long since been paid to them? The only reason is this bar of loyalty. The Republicans of the House, with Judge Moon of Pennsylvania, the chairman of the Codification Committee, believed that this money should be paid, and so does Mr. SHERLEY, a distinguished Democrat on that committee at that time, and Judge HOUSTON, of Tennessee, another distinguished Democrat; Judge BARTLETT, of Georgia, though not a member of the Revision of Laws Committee, first discovered that the committee had failed to complete its work. It was not discovered until it was too late to remedy it.

In clause 176 the right of recovery is given, but before you can avail yourself of that right you have to swear that you were always loyal to the Federal Government. The procedure clause was overlooked. Judge BARTLETT discovered that that was overlooked, and it was amended here in the House, as you all will recollect; and you will recall, also, that the bill passed by a great big majority. In the Senate, however, for some reason—I do not know why, either from pressure of business or otherwise—this amendment did not pass. This whole bill involves, according to the Treasury report, less than a million dollars of money. I do not believe that all the claimants will ever be able to prove that they are the individuals who are entitled to recover, because a great many of the people have died, and the proof will be hard to get.

This request on the part of us in the South is that you will simply remove the bar and allow these claimants to go into court. If they can show that they are the parties entitled to the money, they should recover it. It will be the duty of the court to ascertain the facts as to whether the cotton gathered in 1865, after the war was over, or cotton produced and gathered in 1866, was the property of the claimant. Congress will take absolutely no chances. It certainly can trust its own courts.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I had a letter from a party in Georgia somewhere—I think, near Atlanta—a day of two ago, saying that the grandfather of the writer had lost in the summer of 1865 a very large amount of cotton. The party did not know what had been done with it. He thought it had been destroyed. Would the provisions of this bill cover claims for that sort of thing?

Mr. SISSON. Oh, no. The only thing covered in this bill—the only thing that can be covered in this bill—is the money which appears, according to the Treasury report here—which appears in this volume to the credit, we will say, of Mr. CAMPBELL, if you are living and your cotton was taken in 1865 or 1866 and the net proceeds of the sale thereof covered into the Treasury, and you can establish the fact that you are the PHIL CAMPBELL who lost the cotton. In that case you could get the money under this bill, as shown by the itemized list here.

Now, there is an entirely different class of claims where the cotton was sold to the Confederate Government. As I said before, where a man sold his cotton to the Confederate Government and the Confederate Government hypothecated that cotton and with the proceeds bought munitions of war, then I think that title to the cotton has passed from the individual to the Confederate Government, and I do not believe that the Congress of the United States will ever pay one single penny for that cotton. I want to be fair and honest not only with the House, but with myself and my constituents.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Take a case like that I have mentioned, where the cotton was taken some time in the summer of 1865.

Mr. SISSON. It would not be touched by this bill at all. If the claimant was loyal to the Government——

Mr. CAMPBELL. But the war was over.

Mr. SISSON. It was over in 1865. They were at peace in all portions of the South. The actual hostilities ceased at Appomattox, and legally hostilities ceased on June 1. All those people recover if the cotton was captured after that date.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. SISSON. I do.

Mr. WILLIS. There is no question in my mind about the gentleman's fairness or loyalty or anything of that kind. This is merely a legal question, as I understand it.

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman's contention is that these people who sold their cotton to the Confederate Government and received pay for it and, so far as we know, spent the money, do not have any claim against the Government of the United States?

Mr. SISSON. Yes. That is my contention.

Mr. WILLIS. That is my opinion. But how does the gentleman know that that will be the opinion of the claimants? Can he point out anything that will prevent any of these men from presenting their claims?

Mr. SISSON. They can not present any claims unless the money has actually gone into the Federal Treasury as the proceeds of their cotton, because all the Confederate cotton has been listed and a careful investigation made of it, and that cotton that was sold to the Confederate government will never be paid for. But when the cotton was taken during 1865 and 1866 from private citizens and sold as their cotton and the money actually paid into the Treasury as their money, that money is due them. That money has not been appropriated. It is true, we understand that moneys are mixed and mingled in the Treasury, but the books show that that money is there now to the credit of those individuals or their heirs who are included in this list of claimants.

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman has not yet answered my question. If you pass this bill, what is there to prevent any of these men who do not take the view that the gentleman so fairly takes, but who take a contrary view, coming in and having their cases adjudicated?

Mr. SISSON. Simply because they have absolutely no title to the cotton and there is no money to their credit.

Mr. WILLIS. But that is only the gentleman's opinion and mine. The claimants may not take that view. If you pass this bill, you open up that question.

Mr. SISSON. Suppose my friend WILLIS had lived down South and his cotton had been taken, and he wanted to go into court to prove that he was the Willis whose cotton was taken. You could only recover the Willis credit in the Treasury. You could not recover any other credit. You could only recover the amount of money which was placed there to your credit. That is all you could recover. You could not recover for anybody else; and where the Government has decided that issue, where the Government has decided that it was WILLIS's cotton and not Confederate cotton, then WILLIS is certainly entitled to it, and that is all there is in this issue.

Mr. GREGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GREGG. In answer to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] I wish to state that this bill does not authorize the payment of any particular money. It simply authorizes a suit. Right at the threshold of the suit the plaintiff would be met with the question of title. Now in the suit it is not the question of our construction, but the court would pass upon the question of title, and the plaintiff would have to show his title; and if it was shown that it was cotton sold to the Confederate Government his title would fail, and he would have no right to recover.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. SISSON. I will yield.

Mr. WILLIS. Does not the gentleman admit that these people to whom he has just referred had a right to sue under the act that was passed in 1865 and also under the amendatory act of 1872? They have had this right twice, and have been guilty of laches, and they sinned away their day of grace.

Mr. SISSON. But the gentleman must realize that the very act to which he refers required that they make an affidavit that they had always been loyal to the Federal Government. This they could not make. The court of justice was closed in their faces. They had rights, but were denied the opportunity to assert them.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. I understood the gentleman to say that some cotton was taken in 1866.

Mr. SISSON. Yes; it was.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Will the gentleman give any explanation of the reasons for taking it at that time?

Mr. SISSON. I will have to go into an explanation which carries us back to some time when the feeling was rather bad. Now, the truth is that the agents of the Government, going around and collecting the cotton of the Confederate Government, would go to a ginhouse or go to a warehouse where the cotton was stored. They would take with them the books showing the sale of the cotton to the Confederate Government, and if there was other cotton there they were not very particular about whose cotton it was, and they rolled it all onto the wagons and onto the trains and sent it to Yazoo City, or Vicksburg, or Greenville, or New Orleans, or Galveston, and other ports and sold it. At that time you sold the cotton to commission merchants at the ports. Now the rules are entirely different. The Government charged that cotton with the expense of sale, and the remainder of the proceeds was then covered into the Treasury. Frequently when the agents of the Federal Government would segregate this cotton they would find a certain number of bales of cotton belonging to the Federal Government, and they would turn the money for that into the Treasury; but where the cotton belonged to a private citizen they did not turn it into the Treasury, but turned it into their own pockets. That happened to private cotton in 1865 and 1866.

But many of these agents were honest men. Many of them did exactly what was right. When they found that there was cotton belonging to private persons, they reported that fact. If I had the time I should like to explain to the gentleman how they tagged their cotton. I will state it briefly. When the Confederate Government bought a bale of cotton they had a long iron rod with barbs on it, and you could shove it into the center of the bale, but 20 oxen could not pull it out, because the barbs would catch. So the only practicable way to get one of these rods out of the bale after driving it in with a sledge hammer was to tear the cotton to pieces. Then on the end of that iron rod there was a flat piece with the number of the bale of cotton and the letters "C. S. A." stamped upon it.

Now, the records would show the date of the sale of that cotton to the Confederate Government. Upon that evidence the cotton was sold and the money was turned into the Treasury for the Confederate cotton. There is no claim for that. The only thing that is being asked now is that something like $900,000 in money remaining to the credit of the people who were not able to show loyalty, whose cotton was taken in 1865 and 1866, be made subject to suit, that they be permitted to go into the Court of Claims and show that that was their cotton. That is all there is of it. If they can not show that this was their cotton, they can not recover under this bill.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield for a question? I want information.

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. FESS. The cotton belonging to the Confederate Government does not come under this bill at all.

Mr. SISSON. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. FESS. The cotton that was taken from people who were loyal does not come under it.

Mr. SISSON. No; because all those people who could prove loyalty have long since recovered.

Mr. FESS. This relates to the cotton owned by the people who could not prove their loyalty?

Mr. SISSON. Yes. Now, there is no contention that these men are not entitled to it. After the Civil War they went back and took the oath of allegiance, in good faith, to become good citizens. These men whose property was wrongfully converted to the use of the Government after 1865 were back at home working for their wives and babies, poverty stricken, in a desolated country. This tort was committed on them after they had laid down their arms. When the Government accepted them back into the Nation the Supreme Court, going even further than I am now contending for, said if private property was taken even during the Civil War, and a man was a Confederate general, that after he was taken back he recovered all his rights; and, except for the existence of this statute, he had a right to recover against the Government, but you took it away from him by the statute. We only ask you to allow him to go into court and have his rights adjudicated. You certainly will not deny us this boon at this late day.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, as shown by the unanimous report of the Committee on Revision of the Laws on this bill, its sole purpose is to dispense with the necessity of alleging and proving loyalty in those claims arising under section 162 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911, in which act provision is made for the repayment of the money paid into the United States Treasury, the proceeds of property taken by the Federal authorities after June 1, 1865, under the act of Congress approved March 12, 1863.

When the judicial code was enacted into law it was not contemplated that sections 159 and 160 should be construed together with section 162, as the law which gave origin to sections 159 and 160 is entirely separate and distinct from all the law and the principles of law giving rise to and involved in section 162. The principles of law enunciated in section 162 gives an entirely new feature of law not found in any other law extant, and was intended primarily to protect noncombatant citizens of the United States in the enjoyment of their property which on account of the contingencies of war they had abandoned, and it was the intention of the law that this class of property should be taken in charge by the United States Government as custodian and as trustee for the owners of the property and converted into proceeds and held in the United States Treasury as a trust fund for the original owners, their heirs and assigns.

The act of Congress approved March 12, 1863, section 1, provided that such property shall not include any kind or description which has been used, or which was intended to be used, for waging or carrying on war against the United States, and describing that character of property which is used in carrying on war, not including cotton in the description. Section 2 provides for the sale of the property and for the depositing of the proceeds thereof into the Treasury of the United States, and section 3 of the act allows the claimants two years after the suppression of the rebellion to assert their claims in the Court of Claims and to recover on proof of loyalty.

In the case of United States against Klein, reported in Thirteenth Wallace, page 128, the Supreme Court of the United States in a most able and exhaustive opinion decides that under the various proclamations of the President of the United States granting amnesty to those who were engaged in rebellion against the Government the question of loyalty was eliminated from that class of cases arising under the act approved March 12, 1863, as amended by act approved July 2, 1864, and going so far as to hold that although there was incorporated in an appropriation bill a statement by Congress that no pardon nor amnesty granted by the President shall be admissible in evidence on the part of any claimant in the Court of Claims, still, as the pardon granted by the President had already become operative, this act of Congress was not applicable to the cases arising under the act of March 12, 1863. In that case the court expressly and explicitly declares that the proceeds arising from the sale of this property was a trust fund held by the United States Government in the Treasury in a fiduciary capacity for the benefit of the claimants.

Bear in mind that under the act of March 12, 1863, there were two prerequisites to the institution of a suit in the Court of Claims for the recovery of the proceeds of this property under the captured and abandoned property act of Congress. One requirement was that the suit should be instituted within two years after the suppression of the rebellion, and the other requirement was that the claimant should have always been loyal to the Government. The Klein case having definitely and explicitly decided that the President's amnesty proclamations dispensed with the necessity of alleging and proving loyalty, it was not necessary, in the opinion of the lawmakers, to deal with the question of loyalty in enacting section 162 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary approved March 3, 1911. Hence, in enacting section 162 in this codification, it was only provided that time should be eliminated, permitting the owners of the proceeds of the property to assert their claims without reference to the statutes of limitations. This enactment removed every bar and enabled the owners to present their claims to the Court of Claims, and had it not been for the fact that a controversy arose as to whether sections 159 and 160, which preceded section 162 in the act of revision, did make a requirement for the allegation and proof of loyalty, and which contention was asserted on the part of the United States Government in cases pending before the Court of Claims, it would not have been necessary, or even advisable, for this present amendment, now under consideration, to have been offered.

In a former presentation of this same bill during the last Congress it was seriously contended that the Haycraft case, reported in Twenty-second Wallace, page 81, overruled the case of the United States against Klein and required the allegation and proof of loyalty. Nothing is more remote from the decision in question than this contention. On page 85 the grounds upon which the Court of Claims dismissed the petition are clearly set forth in the statement of the case by the court, in which it is held, first—

> That no action for proceeds of captured and abandoned property would lie, except under the provisions of the act of March 12, 1863.

And—

> That such action, to be maintainable, must be brought within two years after the suppression of the Rebellion.

That is, the court stated the Court of Claims had held as a basis for its decision that it was required that the suit be brought within two years; otherwise the court would not have jurisdiction or right to try the case, and this was the sole basis for the decision in this case, as is clearly shown by the expressions of the Chief Justice in delivering the opinion, on page 92, where the language "within two years" is expressly used, as also on pages 93, 94, 95, 96, and 97, and this repeated use of the expression that the case must have been brought within two years, and no statement anywhere that it was the decision of the court that loyalty was necessary to be alleged or proven. In other words, it was clearly the opinion of the court in that case that while primarily the court would be without jurisdiction to try the case unless it was brought within two years from the suppression of the Rebellion and the allegation and proof of loyalty, still their affirmance of the doctrine of the Klein case, as clearly announced on page 95, shows that it was not the intention of the court to base their decision upon the question of loyalty. On page 96 the court expressly declares that—

> Pardon and amnesty have no effect, except as to such as sue in time.

A careful reading of this decision can convey no other idea except that the claimant had not instituted the suit until after the lapse of two years.

The existing law, as incorporated in section 162 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911, clearly eliminates the requirements of the court in that decision, and the question of time is no longer an essential element in the prosecution of these cases. However, as the Court of Claims, in deciding the case of Lincoln, administrator of Joseph A. Harvey, deceased, against United States, on February 9, 1914, stated—

> In the delay likely to be created to meritorious suitors there is cause to regret that section 162 does not contain a limitation of time within which all suits must be brought—

it is deemed advisable to provide in this amendment a time in which all litigants may present their cases to the Court of Claims, so there may be an equitable distribution of the proceeds, and for that reason two years is stated in this bill as the time in which parties may be permitted to file their claims.

In this most able and exhaustive decision of the Court of Claims dismissing the defendant's motion, the court, Judge Howry being the organ, collates the various decisions upon the subject of loyalty and the necessity of alleging and proving it under those cases arising under the captured and abandoned property act of March 12, 1863, and shows conclusively that it is not necessary in the light of these decisions to allege or prove loyalty, and draws a clear distinction between the class of cases intended to be covered by sections 159 and 160 of the Judicial Code and section 162.

The principles of law, as well as the elements of jurisprudence involved in these separate and distinct enactments, are so clear-cut and distinct and separate in their intendment and purpose it is clearly evident that the lawmaker never intended that section 162 should be construed with or governed by the provisions of sections 159 and 160.

It would not at all be necessary to go into this elementary discussion if it were not for the fact that in a previous presentation of this bill before the Congress these questions were raised, and it is for the purpose of making an explanation which may eliminate all such foreign matters from this discussion in this instance that these matters are reverted to.

Under the act approved March 12, 1863, known as the captured and abandoned property act, as amended by act approved July 2, 1864, it was provided that agents of the Government should take charge of abandoned and captured property in any State or Territory in the United States designated as in insurrection against the lawful Government of the United States, and that this property should be sold and the net proceeds paid into the Treasury of the United States, and the claimants allowed two years after the suppression of the rebellion to reclaim the proceeds.

This bill now being considered has for its purpose the repayment to those claimants from whom this property was taken the proceeds of the property which was taken after the cessation of hostilities. As a matter of fact, the war as waged between the contending forces had closed in April, and there had been entire cessation of hostilities prior to the 1st of June, 1865, and it is for that property which was taken by the agents of the United States Government after the 1st of June, 1865, from noncombatants that this bill provides relief; and it is for this Congress to determine as to whether, after a lapse of nearly half a century, it shall still be contended that after the war was over and the people had gone to their peaceful pursuits it shall be required of them to prove that they were loyal to the Government before they can recover the proceeds of that property which was taken from them by the United States Government in trust and placed in the vaults of the Treasury of the Government to their credit, as shown by Senate Executive Document No. 23, Forty-third Congress, second session. This document is a report from the Secretary of the Treasury giving the bales of cotton which were taken from the individuals, their names and residence; stating when and where and for what amount the cotton was sold, and giving the net proceeds which were placed in the Treasury in trust for the claimants; and showing that there is now in the Treasury a net balance to the credit of the owners of the cotton of $4,886,671.

This money has been in the Treasury to the credit of the persons who are explicitly designated for about half a century without any interest, and having been taken under a law which was an anomaly, and as stated by the Supreme Court of the United States to be different in its character to any other law of any nation in allowing the property of noncombatants to be taken even during hostilities, and this property, the proceeds of which is sought to be recovered through the instrumentality of this bill, was taken after the war had closed and after the people had gone back to their peaceful pursuits, having been led to believe by the proclamation of the President of the United States that they would have restored to them that property which had been taken under the provisions of the law, the guise of which led them to believe that this great Government of ours, acting for them in a fiduciary capacity, had taken charge for their protection and would make restoration when called upon to do so. But now when these claimants seek to procure from the representatives of this great Nation the proceeds of that property to which they are legally and justly entitled, these representatives interpose technicalities and endeavor by dilatory measures to hamper and hinder the restoration of the proceeds of this property to which these claimants are justly entitled. This, too, after the sword of Lee is sheathed forever; the martial spirit of Stonewall Jackson has gone to its long, long home; the immortal soul of Jefferson Davis has taken its eternal flight, while his name has been restored upon the arch of Cabin John's Bridge; the boys of the North and the boys of the South marched shoulder to shoulder with little Joe Wheeler and Fitzhugh Lee in the Spanish-American War; the Sherwood pension bill has passed the Democratic House of Representatives, and the reunion at Gettysburg has heralded to the world that the North and the South are a Union, one and inseparable, living as a nation united in heart and sentiment, forgiving the past and looking to the future for the divine blessings of a benignant Providence, all glorying in one flag, under the folds of which the forces of this great Nation shall be marshaled for its future welfare and grandeur, to rise still higher in the galaxy of nations and inspiring the world with confidence in our honor, integrity, and heroism.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 162 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 162. The Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction of any claim therefor filed within two years from the date of the passage of this bill, of those whose property was taken subsequent to June 1, 1865, under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 12, 1863, entitled 'An act to provide for the collection of abandoned property and for the prevention of frauds in insurrectionary districts within the United States,' and acts amendatory thereof, where the property so taken was sold and the net proceeds thereof were placed in the Treasury of the United States; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall return said net proceeds to the owners thereof, on the judgment of said court, and full jurisdiction is given to said court to adjudge said claims, any statutes of limitations to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided, That no allegation or proof of loyalty shall be required in the presentation or adjudication of such claims."

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it a committee amendment?

Mr. WATKINS. No; it is not.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 10, after the word "any," insert the word "prior."

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, the object of that amendment is simply to make the expression more explicit and definite. I want to make it so that it can be definitely understood that this statute of limitation refers to previous acts of limitation. There are several statutes barring claims, and one of them, the statute of limitation, provides that claims of this kind shall be barred by a lapse of six years' time. This will make it perfectly clear that it refers to prior statutes on the subject.

Mr. GREGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATKINS. Yes.

Mr. GREGG. There is a limitation in this act, and this makes it definite that it refers to previous acts.

Mr. WATKINS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the following language at the end of the bill:

Provided, That no allegation or proof of loyalty shall be required in the presentation or adjudication of such claims.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, lines 12 and 13, strike out the following language:
"Provided, That no allegation or proof of loyalty shall be required in the presentation or adjudication of such claims."

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Illinois is not going to make any remarks in support of his amendment, I want to be heard. I wish to state to the Members of the House, those who favor the passage of the bill, that they should vote against this amendment for the reason that it is striking out the very object of the bill; the very language which is used there is the amendment which has been incorporated in this bill for the purpose of making section 162 in the codification of the laws give the right to those to recover whether they were loyal or not loyal.

I will repeat what I have said before, that the purpose of section 162 was to grant the right to these people from whom this cotton was taken to prove their claims without the question of loyalty being considered. That is the very purpose we are seeking by this bill.

The purpose of section 162 was to grant a right to these people from whom the cotton was taken, as shown by Senate Document 23, but on account of the construction which had been placed by the United States attorney, claiming that sections 159 and 160 governed section 162, although the Court of Claims has decided recently that they are not analogous propositions, not in the same line of thought, not on the same subject matter, still the attorney for the United States made that contention. Judge MOON, chairman of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, made it perfectly clear that it was the intention to pay this amount. He afterwards, in a conservative speech, emphasized his ideas to the House, although he was on the other side of the House, and spoke in favor of the bill passed by the majority. He showed his purpose to stand by the declarations made in that speech and by the declarations he made at the time the question was in conference and under consideration, and it would be a violation of faith of the most flagrant kind to vote in favor of this amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Louisiana is correct in stating what would be the effect of this amendment if adopted. The whole purpose of the bill is to evade a provision of the law requiring proof of loyalty as it now stands. The rest of the bill is practically a reenactment of existing law. This provision which I have moved to strike out proposes to allow the proof of claims against the Government by those who were not loyal during the Civil War. I do not think it is a good practice to enter upon, and therefore I have made the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were 20 ayes and 74 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with amendment to the House with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. ALEXANDER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. BARTLETT, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5850) to amend section 162 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911, and had instructed him to report the same back with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendment to final passage.

The motion was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were 84 ayes and 21 noes.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. WATKINS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

THE JUDICIARY CODE.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 15578) to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this bill is on the Union Calendar. Under the rules of the House, it being called up by the committee, the House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The parliamentary inquiry is, When is it in order to raise the question of consideration on the bill? I will say to the Chair that Mr. Speaker Cannon ruled under this same rule that it was in order in Committee of the Whole to raise the question of consideration. It must be in order some time, and I make the parliamentary inquiry as to whether it is in order now in the House or whether it would be in order in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MURDOCK. Would that permit two-thirds in Committee of the Whole to dispense with the day?

Mr. MANN. Oh, this is a question of consideration on this bill only. When this rule was first adopted, the first question that arose under the rule was whether it would require a motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on a Union Calendar bill, or whether the House would automatically resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole. Mr. Speaker Cannon ruled that under the provisions of the rule, it being in order under the rule to call up a Union Calendar bill, and the committee having that right, and the rules requiring that the bill when called up should be considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, therefore it was not necessary to make a motion to that effect, but that the Chair would declare the House resolve into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and call a chairman to the chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As the Chair understands, the rule provides that the House shall automatically resolve itself into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; I am suggesting to the Speaker now how that ruling arose. The rule does not determine that. The rule authorizes the calling of Union Calendar bills on Calendar Wednesday on call of committees, and the rules of the House require that all Union Calendar bills shall be considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; but the committee having the right to call up the bill, and the other rule requiring that the bill shall be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. Speaker Cannon held it was not necessary to make a motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and that the Chair would automatically resolve the House into the committee; but at the same time the House having the right to determine whether to proceed with a particular bill, that the question of consideration might be raised in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, which can not be done ordinarily. Subsequently the same ruling was announced when we had under consideration the bill to codify the laws relating to the judiciary, of which this is a companion bill. It is immaterial to me when we can raise the question of consideration.

Mr. FOSTER. Having called up this particular bill in the House, would it be competent to raise the question of consideration now in the House?

Mr. MANN. I am making a parliamentary inquiry of the Speaker. The rulings heretofore have been that the question of consideration could not be raised in the House, but that it could be raised in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman has concluded his remarks, I wish to state to the Speaker that it is a well-recognized rule and invariably adopted by the Speaker, as was done during the consideration of the bill which we have just passed, that the House shall automatically resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and in view of that fact, and partially for the purpose of allaying any fears of the gentleman who has raised the point, I will state that as soon as this bill is reached in Committee of the Whole and the consideration of it has begun and I obtain the right of way on the calendar for the bill to be considered my purpose is to ask unanimous consent—which I believe will be granted—to postpone the further consideration of the bill and give my reasons for it at the time. It is not my purpose to crowd out other legislation or to retard the progress of other bills which really deserve earlier consideration than this. This is a matter which can wait.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not understand how the gentleman is going to be able to do that after we go into the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GARNER. He can move that the committee rise.

Mr. MANN. Then we would not be any further along after the committee rose.

Mr. WATKINS. I do not want to waive any of my rights.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not understand that if the gentleman gets into the Committee of the Whole and then gets out, and some other bill is taken up and considered that that gives him any preference. He would lose his rights in that way.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, referring to the parliamentary status and the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois, construing these two rules together—one of them giving the right to the committee to call up a bill on the Union Calendar on Calendar Wednesday, and the other rule requiring a Union Calendar bill to be considered in Committee of the Whole, it has been universally held that the House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and if it does, no business can transpire between the time the bill is called up and the time the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole, because it would not be automatic if any business could be transacted between those times.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman will recognize that the gentleman from Louisiana can call up his bill and move to close debate. That permits business to occur.

Mr. GARNER. After we have had some debate?

Mr. MANN. Yes; but the gentleman to-day when he called up the former bill which was pending could have, pending that, moved to close general debate, so that the mere calling up of a bill does not mean that instantly the House is resolved into the Committee of the Whole, because that would foreclose the right to move to close general debate. Here is the situation: Suppose the House does not want to take this bill up, a bill of nearly 200 pages, and we automatically resolve the House into the Committee of the Whole, and it should be held then by the Chairman that we can not raise the question of consideration in committee, and some gentleman moved that the committee rise, which would be in order, and the motion should be agreed to and we would go back into the House, the Committee on Revision of the Laws still would have the call and could immediately call the bill up again.

Then the gentleman says that automatically we must go back into the Committee of the Whole, and some gentleman moves that the committee rise, and we might continue to do that the balance of the day. No gentleman will claim that that would be proper.

Mr. GARNER. I did not intend to convey the idea, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, that any business furthering the interest of this bill can not be transacted after the bill was called up, but I did intend to convey the idea that my construction of these two rules is that no business other than the consideration of this bill, either its defeat or the furthering of its passage, could be transacted.

Mr. MANN. I think that is right.

Mr. GARNER. I do not anticipate that any Chairman of the Committee of the Whole will reverse the precedents that have been set heretofore with reference to committees of the House——

Mr. MANN. My judgment, as I expressed before, is you can raise the question of consideration in the committee, and on that I desire to have a ruling of the Speaker before we went into the committee, so there could be no question about that.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. May I ask the gentleman if he is in accord with the ruling made by the former Speaker on the question of consideration?

Mr. MANN. Heretofore Speaker Cannon held——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I know what he held.

Mr. MANN (continuing). That you could not raise the question of consideration in the House on this automatic call, but when you got into the Committee of the Whole you could raise the question of consideration there. I am quite content to have it raised in either place, but I made the part of the inquiry as to whether or not it was in order now or in the committee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It has been my feeling about the matter—I do not know whether my impression is worth anything much—but my impression of the question of consideration is that even on Calendar Wednesday it ought to be raised when the bill is called.

Mr. MANN. Of course there is nothing you can raise the question of consideration on a bill that has to be considered in the Committee of the Whole House, because ordinarily that is done by a motion, and you can defeat the motion.

Mr. BARTLETT. And when in the Committee of the Whole it is the determination of the House to consider the bill ordinarily.

Mr. MANN. And ordinarily determined on a motion, but you can not determine by a motion here, because there is no motion made.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The rule is this, of course, when any motion or proposition is made—of course there is no motion made here, but there is a proposition——

Mr. MANN. I take it that it is perfectly clear——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. When any motion or proposition is made the question, "Will the House now consider it?" shall have to be put if it is demanded by a Member. This, of course, is a proposition, though it is not a motion. I am not quarreling with the decision of the former Speaker, and I have no doubt the gentleman has given more attention to it than I have.

Mr. MANN. The ruling of the former Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee, was made by consent on both sides as a mere matter of convenience.

Mr. MURDOCK. Might I inquire of the gentleman, is it not in the interest of time to adopt that ruling of Speaker Cannon?

Mr. MANN. I think that is true.

Mr. MURDOCK. And has not Speaker CLARK adopted that ruling?

Mr. MANN. I think he has never been called upon to pass upon it.

Mr. LLOYD. Is it possible to make an arrangement by which this bill might become a continuing order at some other time than on Calendar Wednesday?

Mr. MANN. I do not believe it is possible at this stage of the session. I think this bill ought to be considered and probably passed. I do not see how it is possible at this stage of the session to set down for a hearing in the House a bill that might probably take two or three weeks for consideration. I am not willing to stay here until next October for the purpose of passing this bill.

Mr. LLOYD. If it does not interfere with the appropriation bills or conference reports and matters of that character, which are privileged, what objection is there to making it the continuing business of the House?

Mr. MANN. Well, when we get the appropriation bills a little further along and out of the way we might consider it.

Mr. LLOYD. I want to state frankly that the Committee on the Revision of the Laws have no desire to monopolize the business of Calendar Wednesday if it can be avoided. That committee would like to have this bill, which is important to every Member of the House and the country, made a continuing order of business, when other matters of special importance are not being considered. We will certainly reach a time, after we get through with appropriation bills, when there will be nothing special to be done in the House, and we would like to have this bill made the continuing order, so that this particular bill might be taken up at such time.

Mr. MANN. Let me suggest this to the gentleman. We have got a long Private Calendar which, if it is taken up, will have to be considered probably after the appropriation bills are largely out of the way. The Public Lands Committee has a long list of bills on that calendar of importance which it desires to get up; the Committee on Interstate Commerce has quite a bunch of bills which it wants to consider; the Committee on the Judiciary is in the same fix. I do not know, but I suppose the Committee on Rules will give consideration to the respective merits of these propositions if necessary, and the length of time they will take. I am not willing, so far as I am concerned, to foreclose the right to consider these other bills by giving a right to a bill that will certainly take two or three weeks if it is considered in the House.

Mr. LLOYD. I have not any question at all but that this bill would take at least two weeks for consideration.

Mr. MANN. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to vote for the bill as it stands, without consideration.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will, if I have the floor.

Mr. MURDOCK. Is there not some virtue in the proposition of the removing of the rights of raising the question of consideration in the House or in the Committee of the Whole, because you can get a roll call in the House?

Mr. MANN. I do not think it makes much difference, I will say to the gentleman, on the Union Calendar.

Mr. MURDOCK. You get no record in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. That is true, but I do not think it makes very much difference on Union Calendar bills. The bill we would ordinarily want a roll call on, the bill by itself, is usually a House bill. We raise the question of consideration on those when they are called.

Mr. MURDOCK. Is it not in order to raise the question of consideration in the Committee of the Whole except in this instance?

Mr. MANN. No; it is not. Take an appropriation bill, and you move to go into Committee of the Whole. You can raise the question of consideration in a way by voting "no" on that motion.

Mr. MURDOCK. And that is equivalent to the question of consideration?

Mr. MANN. It is equivalent to the question of consideration.

Mr. MURDOCK. But it seems to me there would be some virtue in having a roll call on a question of consideration on a bill which you can not get in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. That might be; but that might make a very effective method of filibuster on Calendar Wednesday, also.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I recall very well the discussion on this floor with reference to the practice suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] with regard to automatically going into the Committee of the Whole on these bills. Calendar Wednesday was fresh. It had just been adopted by the House, and the object was to safeguard every moment of the day if it was possible. And the purpose, in a practically unanimous-consent agreement in the discussion upon this floor, that the House automatically go into Committee of the Whole, was to avoid anything like a filibuster that might be undertaken against the consideration of bills.

Mr. MURDOCK. But, if the gentleman from Kansas will yield——

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. In avoiding the possibility of filibuster you also took away from the House the right to go on record for consideration of the bill?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, the loss of that right was gained in the consent that the bill could be considered. There was practically a unanimous consent that the bill should be considered. The question of consideration, however, was reserved to the Committee of the Whole, and I do not recall of any case where the question of consideration has been raised on bills in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it the idea of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] that this bill ought to have consideration now?

Mr. MURDOCK. I am inclined to wait on this bill.

I would like to inform the Chair of this feature of the case. If the question of consideration is raised in the House—and I realize the Chair is about to rule—if the question of consideration was raised in the House, there would be an opportunity for a record vote. If the Chair rules, and follows the ruling of Speaker Cannon, that the question of consideration can be raised in the Committee of the Whole, there is no record vote. I think that has a bearing upon the proposition.

Mr. BARTLETT. Why?

Mr. MURDOCK. It puts the House on record.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, may I be heard on this point?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the rules governing proceedings in the Committee of the Whole limit the number of motions that can be made, and in that number the question of consideration is not included. I also understand that the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole can not be made except when there is a motion before the House for consideration, because it is a mere commitment of a matter to a committee—in this case the Committee of the Whole—and if the situation was not to go into the Committee of the Whole by automatic action, but by a motion in the ordinary way, it would be very clear that objection to the consideration of the motion would be in order when the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole is made. But not going into the Committee of the Whole by a motion, but by automatic action by virtue of the rules on Calendar Wednesday, then it seems to me that it is perfectly clear under parliamentary law that you can not object to the consideration of the question when the House goes into the Committee of the Whole automatically. If you could, it would be amending the rules of the House by mere motion. On the other hand, the rules limiting the motions made in the Committee of the Whole, which do not specify consideration as one of them, do not permit this motion in the Committee of the Whole. It is a case of one motion or a parliamentary situation shutting out another motion, just the same as the previous question would shut out the motion to amend or force the motion to a vote. If such a motion were allowed in the committee, its results would nullify the automatic procedure by simply reversing by vote of the committee an action in pursuance of the rules of the House.

Therefore, under our rulings, it seems to me, from the standpoint of parliamentary law—unless you have some rules here in the House that are not generally included in parliamentary law—that the objection to the consideration of the question when the House goes into committee by automatic action is neither allowed in the House nor is it allowed in the Committee of the Whole, but ruled out by the rules of the House as a motion not in order when a bill comes up for consideration in the situation now before this House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The rule, paragraph 4, Rule XXIV, provides:

After the unfinished business has been disposed of the Speaker shall call each standing committee in regular order, and then select committees, and each committee when named may call up for consideration any bill reported by it on a previous day and on the House Calendar, and if the Speaker shall not complete the call of the committees before the House passes to other business he shall resume the next call where he left off, giving preference to the last bill under consideration.

Paragraph 7, Rule XXIV, with reference to Calendar Wednesday, provides:

7. On Wednesday of each week no business shall be in order except as provided by paragraph 4 of this rule, unless the House by a two-thirds vote on motion to dispense therewith shall otherwise determine. On such a motion there may be debate not to exceed five minutes for and against.

On a call of committees under this rule bills may be called up from either the House or the Union Calendar, excepting bills which are privileged under the rules; but bills called up from the Union Calendar shall be considered in Committee on the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The unfinished business having been disposed of and the Committee on Revision of Laws having the right to call up bills reported from that committee for consideration, and that committee having called up a bill on the Union Calendar for consideration, it is the opinion of the Chair that it is the duty of the Speaker, under the rules, paragraphs 4 and 7 of Rule XXIV, to declare that the House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill and to call some one to preside in committee.

Whether or not the question of consideration may be raised in committee, the Chair does not feel called upon to decide. He is inclined to the opinion, however, taking the spirit of the rule and the purpose it was intended to accomplish into consideration, that it is very doubtful if such a motion would be in order.

The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WATKINS] calls up the bill (H. R. 15578) to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary. The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, may I make a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not catch the Speaker's ruling, whether or not the question of consideration could be raised in the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that it can not be raised in the House under this rule.

Mr. FOSTER. And it can be raised in committee?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Whether or not it can be raised in committee the Chair is not called upon to decide. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] will take the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15578) to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, with Mr. RUSSELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 15578, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15578) to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. I desire to raise the question of consideration of the bill. I suppose, properly speaking, the first reading of the bill should be had before that question is raised.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with——

Mr. MANN. Without affecting the right to raise the question of consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] raises the question of consideration. What does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD] rise to say?

Mr. LLOYD. I rise to ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. MANN. Of course, properly speaking, the bill should first be read before the question of consideration should be raised.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD] asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with without prejudicing the question of consideration raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I did not hear what the Chair said.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD] asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with provided it shall not prejudice the question as to consideration, raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, if the question of consideration should come now, why not follow the rule?

Mr. MANN. The rule requires the bill to be read before the question is raised.

Mr. BARTLETT. I think the bill ought to be read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BARTLETT. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] objects. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the laws relating to the judiciary be, and they hereby are, codified, revised, and amended, with title, chapters, headnotes, and sections, entitled, numbered, and to read as follows:

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. RUCKER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, the bill is being read, is it not?

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I have no amendment to offer to this bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. The bill has not been read. I raise the question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill has not been read and the reading has not been dispensed with.

Mr. BARTLETT. I make the point of order that the bill has not been read and there is nothing to be done until the bill is read.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I want to take further steps to postpone the consideration of the bill, and I want to give my reasons for it.

The CHAIRMAN. It can only be done by unanimous consent. The bill is now being read.

Mr. WATKINS. For that purpose, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, the reading of the bill can not be interrupted in that way.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WATKINS] moves that the committee do now rise. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BARTLETT. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee proceeded to divide.

Pending the division,

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the demand for a division.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RUSSELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 15578) to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have read the resolution which I hold in my hand, and I ask its adoption by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to have a certain resolution read.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, how far does the request for unanimous consent go? Does it go both to the reading and to the adoption?

Mr. WATKINS. For the present I ask unanimous consent that it be read, and then I will ask unanimous consent that it be adopted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the reading of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WATKINS moves that the consideration of H. R. 15578 (No. 170, Union Calendar) be deferred until the fourth Wednesday in May, 1914, to be then considered, unless there then be under consideration some bill on the Wednesday Calendar, in which case the bill H. R. 15578 shall be taken up for consideration upon the conclusion of the call of the committee then having a bill under consideration.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be adopted.

Mr. RUCKER. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WATKINS. Then, in view of that objection, and in deference to the gentleman from Tennessee, I move that the resolution be adopted.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that that motion is not in order.

Mr. FOSTER. That motion is not in order.

Mr. MANN. It is not a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is undoubtedly good, and is sustained. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry. Is not the regular order the resolving of the House into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. Yes. The House automatically resolves itself——

Mr. WATKINS. I call for the consideration of H. R. 15578.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. What was the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WATKINS]?

Mr. WATKINS. That we proceed to the consideration of H. R. 15578, No. 170 on the Union Calendar.

Mr. MANN. That is the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of that bill, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] will take the chair.

Mr. RUCKER. Oh, Mr. Speaker, I want to talk a little bit.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands, but the trouble is that under that automatic rule nobody can talk. [Laughter.]

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Then had we not better revise the rules?

The SPEAKER. The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. RUSSELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 15578.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. BARTLETT. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia objects.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RUCKER. If another bill should ever be reached, is there any way to prevent the taking away from gentlemen who want time to debate as much time as is consumed in this farce that we are playing here now?

Mr. MURDOCK. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rules this bill after it is read will be subject to general debate.

Mr. RUCKER. I want to serve notice that this time will be made up in some way. I think gentlemen are trying to put off the consideration of another bill that is coming, but there will be opportunity for debate on it. I serve notice on gentlemen now——

Mr. BARTLETT. I call the gentleman to order. He has no more rights than anybody else——

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman from Georgia ought not to make that statement.

Mr. BARTLETT. I will not consult you about it. I will not consult you about anything.

Mr. RUCKER. I will get my speech made, anyhow.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, I move that we order the fleet sent here instead of sending it to Mexico.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill..

The Clerk began the reading of the bill.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. ELDER. I object.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MOORE. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order. This is the first reading of the bill.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is a slow freight train. The bill has not been read.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE. Is it proper before the first reading of the bill is concluded to have any explanation of it by the gentleman in charge?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not. The first reading of the bill can only be dispensed with by unanimous consent.

Mr. MOORE. Another parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE. When may we have some explanation of the bill by the chairman of the committee in charge of it?

The CHAIRMAN. After the bill has been read.

Mr. MANN. The first of October.

The CHAIRMAN. After the bill has been read, when it is up for consideration and amendment.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. BARTLETT. I object.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. MOORE. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE. I made a motion a little while ago that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with. That was objected to, and the objection seems to have been held by the Chair to be a valid one. Have I not the right to move to dispense with the first reading of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. A motion of that sort is not in order. The first reading of the bill can only be dispensed with by unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can argue the point of order.

Mr. MOORE. Then the motion to suspend is not in order at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT. I object and call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is called for, which is the reading of the bill.

Mr. MOORE. Have I not the right to discuss the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the gentleman has not made any point of order.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The CHAIRMAN (after counting). One hundred and six Members present, a quorum, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the information which is being conveyed to the committee through the Clerk is very interesting, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point that no quorum is present.

Mr. FOSTER. And I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that that is dilatory.

Mr. MADDEN. It is evident to everybody that there is no quorum here.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, the truth can not be dilatory, and the truth is there is no quorum present.

Mr. FOSTER. The Chairman just counted a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and one Members present, a quorum.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, a great many clerks and messengers were on the floor, and I am afraid that the Chair was not able to distinguish between them and Members, and I therefore ask for tellers on the question of a quorum.

Mr. FOSTER. That is out of order.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is not in order to demand tellers on counting a quorum. The House is not dividing.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. MANN. I move that the committee do now rise, Mr. Chairman, and let us ascertain whether we have a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BARTLETT) there were—ayes 20, noes 47.

Mr. MANN. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. MANN and Mr. WATKINS.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 25, noes 58.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

Mr. FOSTER. The announcement of the vote by tellers does not demonstrate that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MURDOCK. I want to say that I did not vote.

Mr. FOSTER. That is what I am getting at.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Ninety-two Members are present, not a quorum, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Austin	Dunn	Key, Ohio	Porter
Bailey	Edmonds	Knowland, J. R.	Powers
Borchers	Estopinal	Kreider	Reilly, Conn.
Brockson	Farr	Lafferty	Roberts, Mass.

Thereupon the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RUSSELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 15578) to modify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, and the committee finding itself without a quorum had caused the roll to be called, and 302 Members had answered to their names, and he presented a list of the absentees.

The committee resumed its sitting.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I did not hear sections 37 and 38 read by the Clerk. Has he not made a mistake?

Mr. BARTLETT. Those are amendments to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands those are amendments.

Mr. BARTLETT. They are committee amendments, and it is not necessary for the Clerk to read them now.

Mr. MURDOCK. They will be reported later.

Mr. WATKINS. So that gentlemen may be properly advised, if they will look at the report on the bill they will see these places italicized are not committee amendments, but they are new enactments placed there by the commission appointed for the purpose of redrafting the law and a part of the original bill. There are no committee amendments in the bill itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state it is printed in italics, and that is the way amendments are usually printed in the bill, so the reading clerk had reason to believe they were amendments.

Mr. BARTLETT. On the first page of the bill it says "existing law is printed in roman; amendments and new sections are printed in italic." That is the reason I thought they were amendments.

Mr. WATKINS. There are no committee amendments whatever to the bill.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that these amendments be read for the information of the House. Some of us are trying to follow the reading of this bill. You have passed sections 37 and 38, which seem to be amendments. Why should not these amendments be read for the information of the Members?

Mr. MURDOCK. No; they are not amendments.

Mr. BARTLETT. The committee report says there are no committee amendments.

Mr. RUCKER. Regular order, Mr. Chairman. We want to hear this bill read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will continue the reading of the bill.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, what has become of my request?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk is going to read the italicized portion.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, are not we going to have sections 37 and 38 read?

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I understood the Chair to rule that they were to be read on the request made by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood they are to be read, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent, in order that there be no confusion about this, to begin at the first page and read it all over.

Mr. BARTLETT. I hope they will.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE. We have just read the paragraph relating to the salaries of district attorneys. It may be that there will be some amendments to that paragraph. May I ask when an opportunity to offer amendments will present itself?

The CHAIRMAN. Well, the Chair would think that when we commence reading the bill the second time for amendment——

Mr. MANN. Next Christmas.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is now being read for the first time.

Mr. MANN. The bill is now being read for the information of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, if that is possible.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is very much instructed by the reading of the bill and he wants to hear more of it. He may want to offer an amendment, and he is asking, in good faith, when an opportunity will present itself to offer amendments?

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman will have opportunity.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, this is subject to amendment when it is read a second time. When that date will be the Chair can not tell the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE. When the bill is read a second time there will be a chance to amend?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE. We have read now about 28 pages of this bill, of which there are 198 pages. At the rate at which the bill is being read it probably will not be finished until the end of next Calendar Wednesday. May I ask the Chair if it is likely the bill will come up for a second reading on that day?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not believe that is a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, is it not a parliamentary inquiry to ask when the bill will be read for a second time? We are now reading the bill for the first time. As a parliamentary matter, is it not proper to ask when the bill will be read for a second time?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not tell how much delay there will be in the reading of the bill.

Mr. MOORE. But assuming there is no delay in the reading of the bill for the first time, will we commence the reading of the bill for a second time immediately after it is read for the first time?

The CHAIRMAN. That must be determined by a mathematical calculation, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania is perhaps better qualified to do that than the Chair.

Mr. MOORE. I think the Chair has not yet answered the parliamentary question. The suggestion of a mathematical calculation is no answer to a parliamentary question.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to know when, under the rules, we would begin to read the bill a second time?

The CHAIRMAN. After it has been read the first time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Would it be in order for the Chair to appoint some one to privately conduct a school of parliamentary law for the benefit of our genial friend from Pennsylvania?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not know about that, but would suggest that the gentleman from Illinois give him his opinion. The Clerk will proceed with the reading.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the gentleman from Illinois seems to be dissatisfied with this procedure, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I am not dissatisfied.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes had it.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania demands tellers. As many in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Five gentlemen standing, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

So the motion to rise was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will continue with the reading.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. RUCKER (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the committee for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to address the committee for three minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I think if the gentleman from Missouri addresses the House for three minutes, filibustering to that extent, the gentleman from Georgia ought to have three minutes also in which to address the committee.

Mr. RUCKER. Very well; let him have it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. RUCKER. Oh, do not do that. In behalf of the American citizens who are sitting in the gallery, I want to explain that this farce does not take place every day.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia demands the regular order. The Clerk will read.

Mr. RUCKER. Did the Chair put my request?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia objected.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] ought to filibuster and take up the time of the committee in this way.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry..

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MURDOCK. During the long reading of this bill there have been frequent interruptions. In the printing of to-day's proceedings in the RECORD will those interruptions show that they occurred during the reading of the bill or at the end of the bill?

Mr. RUCKER. If the gentleman wants to get his speech in the RECORD, he will have to do it while the bill is being read.

Mr. MANN. It will appear in the RECORD that during the reading certain things took place.

Mr. MURDOCK. Then the RECORD shows, first, the reading of the bill entire, and at the conclusion of the reading of the bill that the following interruptions took place? Is that true?

Mr. MANN. I do not think the RECORD will show the reading of the bill entire.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I submit that is not a parliamentary inquiry, and that we ought to hasten on with the reading of this bill.

Mr. MURDOCK. Oh, yes; it is a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Georgia will give the gentleman from Kansas an opportunity to explain his position.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the custom has been for the Clerk to first begin the reading of the bill, and that fact is noted, and then the interruptions follow.

Mr. MURDOCK. So that all of these interruptions will come together to-morrow morning in the RECORD and they will not be comprehensive?

Mr. MOORE. For one, I have not been able to comprehend the gentleman's interruptions as yet.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Kansas concluded?

Mr. MURDOCK. I have concluded my inquiry.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry to make.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I understood the Chair to state that the custom is to let the RECORD show the reading of the bill in full, and then the interruptions follow the reading of the bill. I want to ask what is going to become of the speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, delivered here to-day, if we do not get through with the reading of the bill until next Wednesday?

Mr. MOORE. Oh, it would follow the paragraph immediately preceding.

Mr. RUCKER. That is what I was trying to explain to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. BARTLETT. Oh, put it in cold storage; it will keep.

Mr. MOORE. The speech will follow the paragraph immediately preceding.

Mr. RUCKER. Preceding the bill?

Mr. MOORE. No; preceding the speech. The gentleman from Kansas, for instance, interrupted, and, as I understand it, the paragraph immediately preceding his interruption will appear and then his remarks will follow that paragraph.

Mr. RUCKER. The explanation is entirely satisfactory, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia demands the regular order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I move that the reading of the remainder of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is not in order. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. Then I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TALCOTT] asks unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. DONOVAN. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut objects. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. RUCKER (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I notice that the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], who is responsible for this farce, is not here. I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Thirty-nine gentlemen are present, not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following-named Members failed to answer to their names:

Anthony	Caraway	Fitzgerald	Hoxworth

Thereupon the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RUSSELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill (H. R. 15578) to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, and finding itself without a quorum, he had caused the roll to be called, whereupon 290 Members had answered to their names, and he returned a list of the absentees.

The SPEAKER. The committee will resume its sitting.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, before that motion is put I would like to have the majority leader here. He wants to make a request.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not believe that that motion is proper at this particular juncture. The committee did not rise for any purpose whatever except to get a quorum. The committee will resume its sitting.

The committee resumed its sitting.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WATKINS] how long he expects to continue the reading of this bill to-night?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] moves that the committee do now rise. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. RUCKER. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 86, noes 37.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, what is the vote?

The CHAIRMAN. Eighty-seven ayes, 37 noes.

Mr. DONOVAN. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. It does not require a quorum for the committee to rise.

Mr. CAMPBELL. But, Mr. Chairman, there is a quorum of the committee present.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; there is a quorum present. The motion is agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RUSSELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 15578) to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, and had come to no resolution thereon.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. HART, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Benjamin Warner, no adverse report having been made thereon.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. SMITH of Idaho, the Committee on the Judiciary was discharged from further consideration of the bill (H. R. 12315) to prohibit the sale or gift of intoxicating liquors to minors and Indians within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States, and the same was referred to the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the chairman having in charge the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-night it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-night it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning. Is there objection?

Mr. RUCKER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. What is the purpose of that request?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I will state that the gentleman in charge of the bill is anxious to dispose of it early to-morrow, and we are anxious to get up the bill to follow it.

Mr. RUCKER. Is it to advance legislation?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; it is to advance legislation.

Mr. RUCKER. I had not supposed there was any disposition to advance legislation, judging from the character of the vaudeville performance—which nobody ought to tolerate—that has been indulged in in this House this afternoon. I want to congratulate the gentleman who is soon to grace another body, because he at least is in favor of expediting legislation.

I want to suggest to the gentleman, still further reserving the right to object, that if you, while you still lead us upon this floor, do not take the bit in your own teeth and put a curb on some gentlemen who live not far from you, I tell you I am afraid the Democratic Party will be damned by the people of this country [laughter] because of this wanton, reckless, unjustifiable waste of time in the transaction of the public business as it ought to be. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOSTER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. FOSTER. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. RUCKER. I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]?

Mr. RUCKER. I had not quite finished yet, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. RUCKER. "Time at last sets all things even." I await my time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, we are confronted with a situation in this House that we have been confronted with before. Whenever we get one of these long bills to codify the laws of the United States it is very difficult to pass it. Of course under the rules any bill must be read at the Clerk's desk before the question of consideration can be raised, and although a codification bill is very difficult and tiresome, it is for the House to determine whether it will take it up, and there is no way in which you can dispense with that tedious operation except to bring in a special rule.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. Can not you do it by unanimous consent?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. You can do anything by unanimous consent if it can be had.

Mr. RUCKER. What reason on earth can a Member have for not giving unanimous consent?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not know the reason.

Mr. RUCKER. Can the gentleman suggest any reason?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not know.

Mr. RUCKER. I do not think anybody else does.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much to be constrained to object to this request, but I am so engaged to-morrow at 11 o'clock that I can not be here, and there is a matter in the bill important to me and to the country. I desire to be present and therefore feel constrained to object.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I want to say that this is a great legislative bill. We must get these bills through if we expect an early adjournment. All of us ought to make our personal engagements conform to the work in this House. I think the time has come when we ought to expedite this bill. I understand there will be some debate on it, and an hour's time in the morning will probably carry the bill faster than an hour's work later. Of course this is a unanimous-consent proposition and one objection will carry it over, but I hope the gentleman from Illinois will try and make his personal engagements accord to the business of the House.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. If I had known of the desire on the part of gentlemen to begin to-morrow at 11 o'clock, I perhaps could have made my personal engagements conform to that hour, but I had no information of anything of that sort, and I have made my engagements in important public matters.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Is it not a fact that several Members of the House have important engagements at 11 o'clock to-morrow?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. That is the fact, and therefore I object.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask unanimous consent that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening for the further consideration of this bill to revise and codify the laws, which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] is so anxious to have disposed of. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRYAN. Reserving the right to object to the request of the gentleman from Missouri, this is a matter of great importance, and I hope there will be no objection to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, under the rules is it in order to take a recess on Calendar Wednesday? As a matter of fact, I claim it is not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct. The Chair had forgotten for a moment the fact that it is Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. RUCKER. That rule ought to be changed, too. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The request of the gentleman from Missouri is out of order.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 1829. An act for the relief of W. D. McLean, alias Donald McLean.

INTERSTATE TRADE COMMISSION.

Mr. COVINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 15613 on the Union Calendar, to create an interstate trade commission, to define its power and duties, and for other purposes, be made a matter of continuing order of business to be called up in the House as the Speaker may recognize.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

RETURN OF A BILL.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill S. 1689, passed by the House on March 9, be recalled from the Senate, for the reason that it has been discovered that the same item is carried in an omnibus bill already passed.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman a resolution to that effect?

Mr. SCOTT. I have not.

The SPEAKER. That is the modus operandi, to introduce a resolution asking the Senate to send it back. The Chair will recognize the gentleman in the morning after the reading of the Journal.

PENSIONS.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House bill 11269, to disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand that is a pension bill.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEY] asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 11269 with Senate amendments, to disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, does this bill pertain to the Spanish-American War veterans?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 11269) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. I was advised that that was a bill from the Committee on Pensions, and not from the Committee on Invalid Pensions. As this bill does not come from our committee, I withdraw my request.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 11269.

The SPEAKER. Is that the bill which was just called up?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes. I ask unanimous consent to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to take this bill from the Speaker's table, to disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. ADAIR, and Mr. LANGHAM.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 3863. An act granting land to the Grand Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, grand jurisdiction of Arkansas; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 2223. An act to authorize the use of the revenues in the Crater Lake National Park in the management of the same, and the construction, repair, and improvement of roads, trails, and bridges in the park; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 1943. An act in reference to the issuance of patents and copies of surveys of private land claims; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 4657. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 4553. An act to authorize the appointment of an ambassador to Argentina; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do——

Mr. RUCKER. Before the gentleman makes that motion I ask unanimous consent for one minute and a half in which to address the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks to address the House for one minute and a half. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I want to ask the House in all seriousness to vote down the motion to adjourn which is going to be made. Let us stay here to-night, as we ought to do, and try to dispose of some public business. This whole day has been absolutely lost. The season is advancing. Every gentleman here wants to go to his home. We have duties here which we ought to dispose of and which our constituents demand that we dispose of. Let us remain here and do it. If we have been guilty of folly this afternoon—and I am willing to take my part of the responsibility and let others take theirs—let us return here to-night and as Representatives of a great people see if we can not do something to make amends for the wanton, woeful waste of the public time which we have indulged in to-day. [Applause.] I hope that gentlemen on both sides of the aisle will agree to this. You do not have to stay here, because nobody will make the point of no quorum. We will have to yet consume three hours in the reading of that bill. Let the clerks read turn and turn about, and let us get through with that reading, because unless this is done at night sessions it will take all of one and perhaps two more Calendar Wednesdays to read the bill we have been reading here to-day. Public bills of great importance are pending——

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. I yield, but my time is very short.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. Will the gentleman inform us why he made the point of no quorum?

Mr. RUCKER. Only for the purpose of emphasizing the absurdity of the position occupied by some gentlemen in compelling the reading of that darned bill [laughter], because they know nobody wants to hear it. Now, I appeal to you to vote down the motion to adjourn. I want a big majority on the Democratic side, and I demand of all you self-confessed patriots on the Republican side to stand by us good Democrats over here and help us keep the House in session until this bill is read.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman is in favor of taking a recess, I will ask him why it is that he does not make a motion to that effect before I make the motion to adjourn.

Mr. RUCKER. I will answer the gentleman by saying that I tried to do that. I asked unanimous consent that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock to-night, and then to continue the reading of the pending bill; but I was told that could not be done under parliamentary law on Calendar Wednesday; hence I could not do it. It appears you can not do anything on Calendar Wednesday that certain folks do not want done. The rules need amendment, and need it badly——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, in view of the declaration of the gentleman——

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RUCKER) there were—ayes 81, noes 59.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. It does not take a quorum to adjourn.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Thirty-nine Members have risen in the affirmative. Those opposed will rise. [After counting.] One hundred and one in the negative. A sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. Where no quorum is present a demand for the yeas and nays has to be seconded by a majority of those present. There is no quorum of the House here.

Mr. PAYNE. That was not determined.

Mr. BARTLETT. The division has developed that there is no quorum present, and in order to have the yeas and nays the demand must be seconded by a majority of those who are present.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman is through, I desire to say that there was a quorum, presumably, present when the motion to adjourn was made, and the motion was in order. While we have been voting the gentleman has discovered, he thinks, that no quorum is present. No question was raised about a quorum before that time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think, although he will look up the authority, that the position the gentleman from Georgia takes applies only to where the point of no quorum is made and there is a call of the House.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 157, nays 74, answered "present" 5, not voting 195, as follows:

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. SENATE.

THURSDAY, April 16, 1914.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we seek Thy favor and blessing and such measure of Thy grace as that our lives may be pitched upon the plane where there is no law. We would no longer be bondslaves of sin or children tossed to and fro, but the sons of God, freemen having fullness of knowledge, depth of sympathy, and vision into the inner courts of life. We pray that we may understand the Divine program for us as individuals and for our great Nation, and that Thy will may be done in and through us. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR PENROSE—AFFAIRS IN MEXICO.

Mr. OLIVER. I have here a short address delivered by my colleague [Mr. PENROSE] in the Whitehall Baptist Church, at Tacony, Pa., last Sunday upon the Mexican situation. I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Armed intervention by the United States was held up yesterday by Senator PENROSE as the outcome of the present situation in Mexico, the inevitable solution of the problem, unless this Government changes its policy and takes steps to change conditions to suit the situation. In an address delivered in the Whitehall Baptist Church, Tacony, Senator PENROSE voiced vigorous criticism of the Wilson administration's policy with respect to foreign relations, with particular reference to Mexico.

Senator PENROSE addressed a small but enthusiastic audience. The Rev. Herbert Hargraves, pastor of the church, introduced him. After the address there was an impromptu reception for the Senator.

After his set speech, Senator PENROSE said he did not mean to indicate that we were actually in danger of war, but merely wanted to enlighten the people on the true conditions. The United States never participated in a war of aggrandizement, but always and only for either its own independence, for the maintenance of the Union, or for humanitarian reasons. The flag would never be carried to warfare, he concluded, for the personal advantage of any politician or set of politicians.

SENATOR PENROSE'S SPEECH.

Senator PENROSE said he was actuated in taking up a public discussion of the Mexican situation because of "less information and more misinformation in the minds of the people." This lack of information, he added, "has also been true of the statesmen who are now guiding the destinies of the Nation." The people had kept quiet, he said, because they did not want to embarrass the administration and its policy. He continued:

"The fundamental error in our attitude toward Mexico is that we have undertaken to deal with that country as we would with Denmark or Spain or Italy. We have assumed not only that Mexico is a nation in the political sense of the term, but also that the Mexicans are a people more or less homogeneous and certainly more or less animated by social and political motives which we would recognize as of the same category as our own political ideals, even if somewhat modified in form or application.

"No greater mistake could have been made. In the first place, Mexico within its political borders contains three distinct races. The migration which took place on this continent during the centuries while the Normans were conquering England was a migration consisting of various tribes of our own North American Indians. They pushed down from the North until they had reached the site of the present City of Mexico, about 200 years before Cortez landed on the Mexican shores of the Gulf.

"To give a better idea of what happened, it is well to remember that Mexico may be described as a long V-shaped high tableland, with the point roughly in the neighborhood of Mexico City. A narrow strip of low coast land lies on both the Pacific and the Atlantic sides of this V. From Mexico City to the extremity of the peninsula of Yucatan is nearly the same distance as it is from the Rio Grande to the City of Mexico. This country beyond the city is relatively low and is what is described as the tierra caliente (hot lands). The migratory Indians from the north, who are the Aztecs of Mexican history, pushed off the high plateau their predecessors, who are known as the Toltecs. They also are Indians. All the races in Mexico are Indians, and most of the inhabitants of Mexico are Indians to-day.

"Mexico is an Indian country. There are some 15,000,000 people in the country, according to the census of 1910. The census does not include racial statistics, but conservative students of Mexican conditions consider that of these 15,000,000 people, 13,000,000 are so nearly of pure Indian blood that such admixture of Caucasian blood as may flow in their veins is a negligible quantity, from a scientific standpoint. It is certainly negligible from a moral standpoint. Of the remaining 2,000,000, it is doubtful if there are 250,000 Mexicans of absolutely undiluted Caucasion blood, and the remainder are crossbreds between the Spanish settlers and the Indians in varying proportions of European and native blood.

"Too much emphasis can not be laid on this condition. The problems which Mexico has to face are problems based on the same mental and moral characteristics, the same racial peculiarities, as the problems which we had to face in the winning of the plains and the Rocky Mountain country in the third quarter of the last century.

"The conditions were somewhat modified. The Spaniards, when they conquered Mexico, followed a policy which was different from that of our pioneers. The result of that policy was that the Indian lost something of his nomadic characteristics and became imbued in varying degrees with the characteristics of an agricultural instead of a hunting race. This change brought with it, however, no degree of homogeneity. There are some twenty-odd distinct tribes among the inhabitants of Mexico and an equal number of Indian tongues, with more local dialects.

"The same intertribal hostility which was the motive of the wars constantly going on when Cortez came to Mexico first has persisted to this day, although its outward form has been somewhat modified by the control of civilization. It persists in the form of resentment and hostility on the part of district against district, and most especially the north against the south.

"The Spanish colonial rule did nothing to overcome this. I believe that our conception of that period of colonial rule has been that of one in which the Viceroy of Mexico was the regal representative, with all the pomp and stately trappings which accompanied royal delegates in those days, and who ruled more or less directly over the whole region which we now know as Mexico.

"As a matter of history, the various lieutenancies—or intendencias, as they were called—when Mexico was divided were ruled as independent satrapies, and the intendents, or King's lieutenants, in the different sections of the country reported directly to the court and the King at Madrid, having no dealings with the Viceroy at Mexico for administrative or political purposes, their relations with him being purely fiscal and confined to the remission, through him, of the taxes and tribute to the court. This governmental organization naturally contributed to the maintenance of regional and tribal peculiarities, and even hostilities. At no time until the days of Porfirio Diaz can there be said to have been any sustained attempt to consolidate the unorganized and widely differing tribal units of Mexico into a homogeneous people.

TRIBAL CHARACTERISTICS.

"President Wilson wrote in one of his books that constitutional government was not a thing which could be given to a people. A very great part of the difficulties of our present situation with Mexico is due to his attempts to give constitutional government, not even to a people, but to a collection of Indian tribes whose racial characteristics are still painfully in evidence.

"If you have been reading the dispatches from the correspondents following the campaign in Mexico, you will notice in these last few days that the reports of the fighting in the vicinity of Torreon have all reflected the Indian character. There have been many incidents related of physical bravery and of truly Indian stoicism in the face of death and agony. This is the more admirable side, but the same dispatches, if read between the lines, also display the other characteristics which the records of a century of our expansion on this continent have compelled us to recognize as equally characteristic of the Indian. I mean cruelty—barbaric cruelty—and revenge that is nothing less than pagan.

"I say when read between the lines, because the returning correspondents tell by word of mouth details regarding incidents to which they merely referred in their letters, which make one doubt that this can be the continent of America in the dawn of the twentieth century. These tales of mutilation and torture sound like the barbarities of the Middle Ages.

"It is bad enough to know that these cruelties are inflicted by Mexicans on Mexicans. When, however, we realize that they have also been inflicted on American citizens and on American women and children, it is difficult to display that patience which is asked for with the action of an administration whose policy has fomented the conditions of anarchy and reversion to primitive instincts which permit such things to be.

"When the homes of American citizens are raided by bandits, and American men bound to trees in the good old Indian way of binding the victim to the stake, and the daughters of the house are assaulted, it is hard to restrain our human instincts as men and brothers and subordinate them to the political expediency which is demanded to uphold a course avowedly based on the highest principles of political morality.

LONG SCORE OF BARBARITIES.

"This is no composite picture, no exaggeration, of merely disagreeable incidents. I have referred to an actual case in the terms in which it actually occurred, and in which it is actually on record with the Government at Washington. There is a long score of barbarities of this and other kinds, some of which can not be even mentioned in this presence—most of them fully recorded in reports in Washington; and it seems to me that not only the expediency but also the morality which it has been announced is to be the basis of our policy toward our neighbors to the south has not only failed to demonstrate its expediency, but what the ordinary citizen understands as morality, both of object and of procedure, has been more distorted than one should expect from such high professions. A policy which requires constant suppression of fact in order to retain even the possibility of public support is not conducive to the spread of ideas of public morality.

"An incidental feature of our Government's policy, which finds it necessary to furnish weapons and ammunition to a bandit chieftain who has been clever enough to label himself a 'Constitutionalist,' is the loss and personal peril incurred by the faithful missionaries who have been laboring in the field of Mexico.

"The work of these missionaries has a wide field. There are Indians to-day in the middle of the peninsula of Yucatan who are worshiping the stone idols of their ancestors of a thousand years ago, and in whose villages back in the midst of the tropical jungle there is no sign of Christianity, and the name itself is nearly unknown. The field of the missionaries reaches from the Indians in this condition to the schools which have been maintained for the free education of the young men of the largest cities, fitting them for commercial, industrial, and professional life.

"It is a curious commentary on the morality of our policy that it has been vigorously protested against by these very missionaries and ministers of the gospel as contrary to humanity and subversive of order and civilization.

"These men, who have lived in that country, know that the pretensions of bandits and the political spoilsmen masquerading together as prophets of a new freedom for the downtrodden Mexican, by which the President has been misled, are nothing but the veriest farce. There is little basis for the theory that the label of 'Constitutionalist' will change the hearts and the habits of men who have grown to maturity with the instincts of their race, and in the practice of brigandage and outlawry, restrained only by such limits as are set by the feebly effective administration of law and order.

EXHIBITION OF CUNNING.

"In the recent campaign the outward manifestation of these habits has been largely checked by the constant admonitions of the authorized representatives of this Government who have accompanied the leaders of the constitutionalists in their campaign about Torreon. Constant reiteration of 'Don't do this,' 'Don't do that,' 'Washington will not approve of this,' 'Washington will not stand for that,' has produced a modification of the outward usual demonstrations of native instinct. With the cunning which we have also come to know is a racial characteristic, the lesson has been easily learned, that professions of love and devotion to the principles of justice, morality, and freedom are absolutely necessary to retain the support of the great neighbor to the north.

"Promises to reform and be good are the payment for rifles and ammunition with which to be brutal. It seems to me that our heroes of the Indian wars—Crook, Miles, and others—could furnish us with some parallels from the history of their own Indian campaigns. There is something that would be humorous, if the whole situation were not so fraught with danger, in the picture of the head of this Nation, who has possibly never seen an Indian except on full-dress exhibition, lecturing a nation which has ruled some 14,000,000 of them with at least sufficient success to keep them alive and most of them doing some little useful agricultural work.

"As a matter of fact, it is not seemly for us to give many instructions to the Mexicans on the theory and practice of handling Indians, unless it be considered of greater morality to exterminate them than it is to subjugate them and mold them into some participation, however imperfect, in the machinery of social and industrial life.

MOST PRESSING PROBLEM.

"I have referred to the danger of the situation. I am not referring to the suffering or loss of American citizens in Mexico, nor to the danger of incidental complications on our southern frontier. I have in mind the fact that Mexico is not the only troublesome question in our foreign relations. There is a serious question confronting us on the Pacific Ocean. There are other questions confronting us on the south, though none so pressing as those of Mexico.

"It is a maxim of ordinary common sense that if a man or a nation has a difficult and delicate problem to handle with a neighbor he can give it more intelligent attention and secure better results in his negotiations if he is free to devote his attention to the matter in hand. If he is embarrassed at the same time by complications in other directions, he is not in as good a position. If complications can be tangled up with the first question, so that he is encompassed on all sides with difficulties, the prospect of a satisfactory result are considerably diminished.

"If we were to be forced into intervention in Mexico, it is perfectly clear that other countries who had any questions at issue with us, whether in Europe or Asia, would find it an opportune time to press their claims. It is only a step further to the conclusion that some one of these countries might undertake to assist Providence to modify the course of events to such an extent that we would be driven into intervention, notwithstanding our reluctance.

"It appears to be sure that this administration will endure untold suffering and loss on the part of American citizens and others under our protection rather than take any action which might be construed as hostile or even mildly corrective toward Mexico. But there is a point at which cumulative effect of outrages on American men, women, and children, if called to the attention of the people as a whole by some spectacular incident, would arouse them to such an extent that the sentiments of horror at barbarity and the protection to one's own people would result in an uprising of sentiment which would force corrective measures.

"This mental attitude on the part of the American people is sufficiently well known to some of our neighbors to set them considering on how it may be turned to their advantage.

MAY REPEAT MAINE TRAGEDY.

"Local conditions in several parts of Mexico make it no idle dream, but an actual and real danger, that if the Mexicans themselves should not be guilty of some spectacular outrage, the stage setting and the actors would be manipulated for them in such a way that the hand behind the scenes would not be discovered, and the desired result of another 'blowing up of the Maine,' figuratively speaking, would be secured.

"It is because we want to eliminate this danger and alter a course which is so likely to drag us into a costly intervention and possible war that the real facts about Mexican problems should have the greatest publicity. True constructive statesmanship will seek for a way to restore order in a country in which its own mistaken policy has fostered anarchy and bloodshed.

"The imposition of inapplicable standards of government to a people who have not even the word 'government' in the language of a large number of them is so preposterous an error that common intellectual honesty demands its acknowledgment and retraction.

"The theory that the chiefs of the constitutionalists are a saving remnant in Israel to lead their people out of the wilderness of oppression and barbarism, and that Villa is the prophet, is about as true as that the gunmen of the East Side of New York are the bulwarks of law and order.

EXPULSION OF SPANIARDS.

"The expulsion of the Spaniards from Torreon is but the first step in their application of justice and morality. The Spaniard represents to the Mexican Indian and the Comanche and Apache who compose an important part of Villa's army the visible embodiment of the Caucasian dispossessors of the soil, the man who drove the Indian from the happy hunting grounds of his fathers, the man who has held those happy hunting grounds for 400 years and who has compelled the Indian to work instead of lying comfortably on the ground and letting ripe bananas drop into his mouth, or the fruit of the cactus bush, and in the more rigorous climates of the highlands putting enough grains of corn into holes in the ground made with a stick and then leaving them to the rains and sunshine of Providence to enable him to eke out a precarious and squalid existence between the seasons.

"This is the feeling which is at the bottom of the expulsion of the Spaniard. This is the manifestation of the true sentiment and intention of the revolution. There is an agrarian problem. There is the same problem of getting the Indian to use an allotment of land made to him, and to prevent the counterpart of 'squawman' from getting away from the Indian all that belongs to him, that this country had to face on its Indian reservations and in Oklahoma.

"There has been much land allotted to the Indian and sold for a mess of pottage. And the land problem in Mexico does exist. But if all the great estates were wiped out to-day and the land divided at the rate of 3 acres and a mule to every patriot who has fought in the constitutionalists' army, the problem would be no nearer solution by that act than it is to-day. On the contrary, it would be setting back progress for half a generation, for the land, inside of 5 or 10 years, would all be in the hands of a new group of harpies and speculators, and in the meantime such organization of the forces of production as there is in the country would have utterly disappeared.

"This is no place nor time to enter into a discussion of the extremely difficult and complex problem presented by land tenures in Mexico. But the vital and pressing feature of the situation to-day is the restoration of order and the reestablishment of a condition which will permit these problems to be dealt with with some intelligence, instead of great passion.

ESSENCE OF REVOLUTION.

"The essence of the revolution conducted by Villa and his associates, with the exception of a very few genuine reformers with no experience, is the restoration of the land to the Indian. The restoration of the land to the Indian means the restoration of the Indian race as a race to its own in the possession of that part of this continent.

"The question which is presented not only to Mexico but to the United States and to all the powers of Europe is whether either civilization, Christianity, or humanity demands that the Caucasian race shall draw back from its expansion and from its mission as the bearer of civilization and turn Mexico over again to the Indian race, to go back to the human sacrifices of the Aztecs, the squalor and poverty of the hill Indians, and the paganism of the jungle, for just so surely as the first step is taken in the expulsion of the Spaniards, the Indian will try to take the next step, which will be the expulsion of the Germans or the Americans or of all other Caucasians.

"Does morality or expediency counsel turning back the march of progress and the denial of all the Caucasian civilization has accomplished in the last 400 years on this continent?

"An assertion frequently made by the President is that the clamor for intervention comes from the 'interests' which have large investments in Mexico. This is wholly untrue. The large corporations would prefer to deal with a less highly organized Government than that of the United States and with one also that displays a livelier appreciation of efforts for the development of an enormously rich and industrially backward country.

"The administration involves itself in a contradiction on this point. In one breath it charges that the Governments of these countries to the south of us are weak and unsophisticated in their dealings with the wily representatives of large foreign investors, and it alleges that these foreign interests make large and improper profits out of this condition. Then when a clamor arises at the ineffective and badly conceived policy of the administration in Mexico, and many calls are heard for the intervention, the administration promptly accuses the interests just referred to of being responsible for this agitation.

"Both charges can not be true, although they are both as true and as consistent as most of the positions taken by the administration about Mexico. If it is true that the Mexican Government is granting improper favors to capitalists, certainly the capitalists who are profiting by them are not clamoring for intervention to put an end to this satisfactory condition. On the other hand, if this charge is not true, the alternative is that the Mexicans are intelligently administering their own affairs and our dictation to them and interference with them is an unwarranted piece of intrusion in the affairs of a neighbor.

CALL FOR INTERVENTION.

"Where the call for intervention really comes from, when it comes at all, is from the individual American citizen whose little all is at stake.

"If the big interests suffer in Mexico, they can recoup in South Africa or other mining countries or in Canada on power plants, as is actually happening to two of the principal so-called 'interests' in Mexico. But take the specific cases of one or two American citizens that have come to my knowledge.

"One was a dentist, a man of perhaps 45, who had lived in Mexico long enough to build up an excellent practice. Severe illness and expensive surgical treatment had encroached heavily on his savings. On his recovery, just as he was about to get back his losses from his practice, this administration warned all Americans to leave Mexico, and emphasized it by sending Government transportation for them. This man left in obedience to the orders of his Government. When he went he left his all. You can not carry a professional practice with you from one country to another. It is hard to have to start in at middle life to build up a new practice in a community from which one has been absent for many years. This would be hard under any circumstances, even were the cause the act of God. It is doubly hard when the cause is the weakness and lack of wisdom of high officials of one's own Government.

"I cite this case because it is typical. There are hundreds of Americans who have lost their all in the same way. Doctors, professional men, planters, farmers, electricians with small repair shops, miners with promising and paying little mines, tie contractors, engineers, mechanics—these are the great body of Americans in Mexico.

"Many of these have been ruined at one blow by the action of their own home Government. Who will pay them indemnity? Not Mexico. She has no responsibility. She did not turn them out. Does this administration expect to reimburse all these Americans that it has ordered out of Mexico?

"Take the case of a small planter in the State of Vera Cruz. After working for other people as employee and manager for some years he got hold of a piece of land. It was not clear of debt, but he got enough out of his first crop on it to increase his area under cultivation, and this present crop would have put him fairly out of debt on his land. The attitude of this administration has forced him to abandon his place, and unless he can make some apparently impossible arrangement he loses all he had put in.

PLAIN CITIZENS RUINED.

"These are the people who are suffering by the policy of this administration—not the interests. For every American hurt who is working for the big financial corporations in Mexico there are scores of plain citizens who have been almost quite ruined. This condition breeds resentment.

"This resentment extends to foreign powers. Great Britain may remain quiet during one Benton affair. Will she during four or five? And the result of the present policy of the administration is to foster conditions which tend daily more and more to increase the danger and the probability of more Benton affairs.

"And there will be German Bentons and French Bentons. The Spaniards are being treated more tenderly. They are sent out of the country.

"This condition is what makes forced intervention loom up as a probable result. The only way to insure its not happening is to change the conditions.

"Anything that can be done to hasten this change is a patriotic step, as it removes by just so much the danger of costly and maybe bloody intervention.

"An unprejudiced review of the situation warrants the conclusion that there would to-day be no organized revolution, at least outside the Pacific States of Sonora and Sinaloa, in the extreme northwestern corner of Mexico, across the mountains, had Huerta been recognized.

"There are sound reasons for this opinion. Consider what Huerta did in four months of last year, after taking possession. Starting with half the States of the country in the hands of hostile governors and administrations, he had established order in more than half of those and put his military provisional governments in nearly all the rest. His generals had marched straight through the middle of north Mexico and rolled the revolutionary forces back against the Chihuahua Mountains in the west and scattered them entirely in the east.

"Had it not been for the moral support given the revolutionists by this administration and the hope of material support in arms and munitions (which they afterwards actually got), is there any reason to suppose they could have kept up an important organized military force?

HUERTA'S TASK.

"Is it not a reasonable conclusion that there would have been a fair measure of peace and order in the country if Huerta had been given the support which was given to Mr. Villa, inasmuch as Huerta has been able to maintain himself for over a year not only without such support but actually in the face of just the moral disapproval of our administration, then the active and successful financial boycott which has prevented it from raising any money abroad, and, lastly, an open source of supply of arms and ammunition for his enemies?

"The mistake was made doubtless from high motives. But it is fairly obvious now, even to a partisan supporter, that the man most likely to secure peace in Mexico was the one who was rejected.

"And it also seems clear that the price we are forcing Mexico to pay in bloodshed, rapine, pillage, and anarchy is not warranted by the reasonable expectation of the establishment of social justice and free government through the instrumentality of the man who has lied brazenly and officially to the Government of the United States in the matter of the Benton murder, flouting not only our Government but ordinary human honesty, and illustrates his sense of economic justice by the wholesale deportation of hundreds of residents of Mexico without a fair hearing or any trial, even a farce, simply because they are members of a given race."

THE CALENDAR.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed, and the calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. BRYAN. I ask unanimous consent to proceed with the consideration of Order of Business 269, the bill (H. R. 7967) to amend the act approved June 25, 1910, authorizing a Postal Savings System.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If we are going to proceed with the consideration of the calendar, I think we ought to proceed to the business upon the calendar that has been discussed and is the unfinished business. While I have no objection at all to the consideration of the bill to which the Senator from Florida refers, I have an objection to sidetracking the other matter. I shall object to any unanimous consent to recur to the calendar except to take the calendar up just where we left it off.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill the Senator from Florida wishes to call up is on the calendar at the point where it was left off when last under consideration.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yesterday I was at home sick, and I do not know what occurred; but what became of Order of Business 101, Senate resolution 156, that was the unfinished business on the calendar?

Mr. BRYAN. I will state to the Senator that yesterday unanimous consent was given to begin on the calendar where we had left off on the last day we devoted time to the calendar, and the bill amending the law authorizing a Postal Savings System was the bill under consideration.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The last day we devoted to the calendar Senate resolution 156 was called up, and it was afterwards displaced by a motion to take up the grain-inspection bill, but it did not lose its place as unfinished business on the calendar. Of course if unanimous consent was granted yesterday, it was displaced again yesterday; but it would take unanimous consent to displace it again to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Day before yesterday the calendar was taken up, and, upon objection, Senate resolution 156 went over. Yesterday, by unanimous consent, the further consideration of the calendar was resumed at the point which had been reached, at Order of Business 269, House bill 7967. Now, the Chair understands the request is to begin on the calendar at the point where it was concluded upon yesterday instead of returning to the first number on the calendar.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And that requires unanimous consent?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It requires unanimous consent.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I shall object.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. GALLINGER. Regular order!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first bill on the calendar will be stated.

The bill (S. 1240) to establish the legislative reference bureau of the Library of Congress was announced as first in order upon the calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 655) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to survey the lands of the abandoned Fort Assinniboine Military Reservation and open the same to settlement was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRYAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 2651) providing for the purchase and disposal of certain lands containing kaolin, kaolinite, fuller's earth, and other minerals within portions of Indian reservations heretofore opened to settlement and entry was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

TELEGRAMS OF SENATORS.

Senate resolution 156 limiting expenditures for telegrams sent or received by Senators was announced as next in order on the calendar.

Mr. BRYAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, this matter has reached the final stage of its consideration. Of course the Senate is not going to escape a vote upon the resolution sooner or later. Most of the Senators have walked up to the line and have voted to dispense with the franking privilege. I have nothing to do with their motives in casting that vote. I cast it with them. Now, they either meant it or they did not mean it. They have adopted the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], and if they meant their vote they are willing to do what they said they wanted to do when they voted for the Kenyon amendment. If they did not mean it, then they are playing with the country and playing with themselves and playing with the resolution.

Of course at this stage of the proceeding I can not help one objection carrying the resolution over, but at 1 o'clock I shall move to take it up, and I hope that the Senators who voted for the Kenyon amendment will join me in bringing the matter to a final consideration and disposition.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I understood the Senator from Mississippi to say that the Senate adopted the substitute offered by the Senator from Iowa. My understanding of what the Senate did is that it adopted the substitute offered by the Senator from Iowa as an alternative for the proposition submitted by the committee. The effect of the vote of the Senate was to say that it preferred as between the two propositions that submitted by the Senator from Iowa, but it has in no manner bound the Senate to adopt it as the final rule upon the subject. I said myself in speaking upon it that I preferred to provide that no telegrams should be paid for at all rather than impose the limit upon the expenditure which was suggested by the committee. But I do not want to be understood by saying that that I in any manner bind myself to support the proposition in its final form. Speaking for myself I wish to say that I do not intend to do so; I intend to vote against this whole proposition because I think it is absurd. I think if telegrams sent by Senators are official, that they ought not to be paid for by the individual Senators, but ought to be paid for by the Government because they are governmental business. I think also there ought not to be any limitation put upon the amount which can be spent for that purpose, and I intend to vote that way when the time shall come.

Mr. SMOOT. Regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I do not know of any such parliamentary procedure as the adoption of a resolution as an alternative.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a call for the regular order; there is objection to the present consideration of the resolution. The Secretary will proceed to call the calendar.

The resolution (S. Res. 84) providing that any Senator upon his own request may be recorded and counted as present in order to constitute a quorum was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution goes over.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The SECRETARY. On page 13, after line 20, it is proposed to strike out the following clause:

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

TRAFFIC IN OPIUM.

The bill (H. R. 6282) to provide for the registration of, with collectors of internal revenue, and to impose a special tax upon all persons who produce, import, manufacture, compound, deal in, dispense, sell, distribute, or give away opium or coca leaves, their salts, derivatives, or preparations, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be read for amendment, the amendments reported by the committee to be first considered.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I have received some letters suggesting amendments to this bill which I have not at hand now, which I should like to consider and compare with the bill. Therefore I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We have all those amendments, and they can be offered from the floor.

Mr. THOMAS. And a great many of them have been accepted by the committee.

Mr. OLIVER. I am willing to let the bill go on and be read, with the understanding that it shall not be acted on to-day, so that I may have time to look into it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is all right. Several Senators want to offer amendments, and we will consider all of the amendments, of course. I now renew my request for unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will proceed to read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Finance was in section 1, page 2, line 1, after the word "thereof," to insert "or hypodermic syringes or needles adapted to administer any of the above drugs."

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, it seems to me that is a very severe regulation. It means a compulsory requirement, does it not, for the registration with the collector of internal revenue of every hypodermic syringe or needle adapted to administer any of the drugs referred to in the bill? These hypodermic syringes or needles are in very general use for the alleviation of pain. Would not this provision require every physician or surgeon who uses one to register with the collector of internal revenue "his name or style, place of business, and place or places where such business is to be carried on"?

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, it seems to me that it certainly would, and without any reference to whether he ever would use it for any of the prohibited purposes.

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. SHIVELY. It is based on the word "adapted." The adaptability of a hypodermic needle or syringe to the use of the particular drugs mentioned would require the application of these regulations.

Mr. BURTON. A practitioner might never employ the articles the use of which is prohibited or limited by this bill. He might employ other substances which are in very general use and which are innocuous.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I will call his attention to a proposed amendment to the amendment which has been suggested to the committee by the National Drug Trade Conference, and which, so far as I know, is acceptable. After the word "drugs," in line 3, add the words:

Except veterinary hypodermic syringes and needles, and hypodermic syringes and needles designed and used for the administration of serums, vaccines, toxins, and analogous products.

Would not the added words suggested by this body, which has given very great consideration to this measure, meet the criticism of the Senator?

Mr. BURTON. I am inclined to think it would. I should like to ask by what body was this amendment suggested?

Mr. THOMAS. By the National Drug Trade Conference of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator will permit me a moment, I will move to amend the proposed Senate committee amendment by the addition of the words which I have just read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment of the committee on page 2, line 3, after the word "drugs," by inserting the words "except veterinary hypodermic syringes and needles, and hypodermic syringes and needles designed and used for the administration of serums, vaccines, toxins, and analogous products."

Mr. THOMAS. Now I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I only desire to say with regard to the amendment that I gave a good deal of attention to this bill when it was before the committee, and I think the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado meets the objections which I have received against the provision as reported by the committee. The objection made to the provision was that it was so broad that it covered the hypodermic syringes and needles used for the administration of serums, vaccines, and other harmless substances, by not defining them; and it seems to me that the proposed amendment to the amendment meets the objection entirely.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to ask the Senator from Massachusetts how he distinguishes between a hypodermic needle used for cocaine and similar substances and one used for antitoxins. The same kind of needle is employed, is it not?

Mr. LODGE. No; I think not.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not know, but I can not see why the same needle can not be used for both purposes.

Mr. LODGE. I understand that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado has been suggested by the people who deal in these syringes, and that they consider it completely covers the distinction.

Mr. THOMAS. It is fair to say on behalf of the National Drug Trade Conference that it objects seriously to the proposed Senate committee amendment, but its suggestion is that if that amendment is to be adopted it should be adopted with this modification. Their explanation to me, in part, is that a great many of these syringes are attached to rubber bulbs and small bottles or vials containing the substance to be injected by the syringe, the motive power being furnished by squeezing the bulb.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. As I understood, the objection raised by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] was that the amendment reported by the committee would render subject to registration under the penalties of the bill the selling of hypodermic needles where they are used in the regular practice of medicine for the alleviation of pain, as is often very necessary. I do not understand from the reading of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado that that amendment covers that objection.

Mr. THOMAS. It does not, if it is an objection we should consider. The difficulty is that if you make such an exception you may practically defeat the purpose of the amendment. I see no objection nor harm in requiring a registration of these instruments wherever used.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. THOMAS. I simply desire to make one more statement and then I will yield. If any class of people should be excepted or exempted from the operation of this registration requirement, it might easily defeat the purpose of the amendment. Now I yield to the Senator.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, the National Drug Trade Conference appear to have suggested a number of amendments to this bill, and it seems to me that the general tenor of those amendments is in the direction of helping the bill in a reasonable and legitimate way. I will ask the Senator from Colorado if I am not right in that?

Mr. THOMAS. I think so, although there are one or two suggestions which might be excepted from my commendation.

Mr. OLIVER. I will read what they say in regard to this amendment. They suggest that the amendment be entirely eliminated, and they say:

> If the bill is effective with reference to the drugs coming under its operation, the provision respecting hypodermic needles, etc., is not needed. If the bill is not effective, the provision is useless. The victim may be absolutely deprived of the hypodermic syringe and yet take morphine by the mouth in pill or tablet form. Indeed, this is now the customary method, while cocaine and heroin are usually "snuffed."

Mr. President, I do not think that the amendment reported by the committee is essential to the object aimed at by this legislation, and I think it ought to be defeated.

Mr. THOMAS. It seems to me to be equally true, Mr. President, that the victim might be deprived of the power to obtain morphine simply to take it by the mouth in pill or tablet form, and yet at the same time be able to use it by means of the hypodermic syringe; so that we certainly, by seeking to cover all methods of use, subserve the purpose for which the bill is to be enacted into law, if it is to be enacted at all.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in answer to the question asked by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], I will state that the hypodermic syringes employed for injecting serums are not the same as hypodermic syringes used for administering opiates of all kinds. The hypodermic syringe for serums is hermetically sealed. Not only is the serum itself sealed, but the needle is sealed as well, and never opened until it is used.

Mr. McCUMBER. And never used again, as I understand?

Mr. SMOOT. And never used but once. I understand that the National Drug Trade Conference takes the position that this class of needles be excepted. I also believe they recommended that hypodermic syringes or needles adapted to administer any of the drugs named in the bill, such as cocaine, morphine, or any of that class of drugs, should be excluded, unless the use of them is in the practice of medicine, and then the person using them must be registered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, all that is required here is that a person having one of these instruments shall register with the collector of internal revenue his name, place of business, and the place or places where such business is to be carried on. That is no great hardship. I suppose you have all seen—I have—the drug fiend sitting around with his hypodermic syringe and now and then poking it up his sleeve and giving himself a dose. It starts by the physician prescribing it, and then later on telling the patient that he can go to the drug store and buy one of these little instruments for 50 cents, I believe, and that he does not need to send for a doctor whenever he wants to use it.

It will act as a deterrent to have this man register his name and place of business and conform to the requirements of this act. There is no great hardship at all involved in it, and to that extent it is a deterrent of the opiate and "dope" habit.

I hope the committee amendment, together with the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado, may be adopted.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, along the line of the suggestions made by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], I will state that some time ago I received a letter from Prof. J. H. Beal, who is the chairman of the committee that has in charge the revision of the United States Pharmacopœia, and is also the editor of the Journal of the American Pharmaceutical Association, and one of the ablest chemists in the country. He writes as a friend of this bill, but he is opposed to the amendment which has been offered in the Senate.

With the permission of the Senate I should like to read just a paragraph or two from his letter. He says:

> I write as a friend of the bill, and would rather see it enacted in its present form than to have it defeated. Nevertheless, there are some small changes which I think should be made before it becomes a law, and I shall be very much pleased if you can see your way clear toward advocating the changes I shall suggest.
> The following references are to the print known as calendar No. 213, report No. 258:
> On page 2, lines 1, 2, and 3, is found the language, "or hypodermic syringes or needles adapted to administering any of the above drugs." This language should, I think, be stricken out. If the drugs can not be kept from habitues, the clause is useless, since the drugs are usually taken by the mouth or by snuffing. It is mainly in popular novels and on the stage that the hypodermic syringe is important. The average "coke fiend" has no use for it.
> It is common nowadays for manufacturers to inclose serums, antitoxins, etc., in a vial which is converted into a syringe by the attachment of a needle, and this practice is very desirable since it greatly lessens the chances of contamination. I think it unwise, therefore, to place a restriction upon this very proper use of the hypodermic syringe, which is to the advantage of countless thousands of worthy citizens, in order to place a purely imaginary restraint upon users of habit-forming drugs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HITCHCOCK in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is upon agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, on page 2, line 16, after the word "drugs," I move to insert——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That point has not yet been reached, and the Senator will suspend. The Secretary will state the next amendment of the committee.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 12, after the word "drugs," the committee proposes to insert the words "or articles."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Colorado to line 16, page 2. I think the words "or articles" should go in after the word "drugs."

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; when I interrupted before it was with the purpose of suggesting the insertion there of the identical words which appear in line 12, the words "or articles."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 16, after the words "aforesaid drugs," it is proposed to insert the words "or articles."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 20, after the word "section," the committee proposes to insert the following proviso:

> Provided further, That officers of the United States Government or the State government or the State governments who are lawfully engaged in making purchases of the above-named drugs or articles for the various departments of the Army and Navy and for Government and State hospitals shall not be required to register and pay the special tax as herein required.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the committee suggests an amendment to this amendment, beginning after the word "required," and reading as follows:

> Provided further, That officers of the United States Government who are lawfully engaged in making purchases of the above-named drugs and articles for the various departments of the Army and Navy and for Government hospitals and prisons, and officers of any State government or of any county or municipality therein who are lawfully engaged in making purchases of the above-named drugs or articles for State, county, or municipal hospitals or prisons, and officials of any Territory or insular possession of the United States who are lawfully engaged in making purchases of the above-named drugs for hospitals or prisons therein, shall not be required to register and pay the special tax as herein required.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inquire whether that is offered as a substitute for the committee amendment?

Mr. THOMAS. No, sir; as an addition to the committee amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think it ought to be a substitute for the amendment of the committee. It covers all that the committee has in its amendment and also additional matter suggested by the drug trade.

Mr. THOMAS. I think the suggestion of the Senator from Utah is most pertinent. It should be a substitute instead of an addition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, offered by the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 5, after the words "drugs," it is proposed to insert the words "or articles."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, what was done with the amendment offered just a moment ago?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The substitute offered by the Senator from Colorado was adopted.

Mr. CUMMINS. I could not hear all that was said by the Senator from Colorado when he read the substitute. I did not know that the question had been put on it.

Mr. THOMAS. I will reread it if the Senator desires.

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes; I should like to hear the addition that was made, as compared with the committee amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. I inadvertently stated it as an addition to the amendment. The Senator from Utah very kindly called my attention to the fact that it should be offered as a substitute. I will now read the substitute:

Provided further, That officers of the United States Government who are lawfully engaged in making purchases of the above drugs and articles for the various departments of the Army and Navy and for Government hospitals and prisons, and officers of any State government or of any county or municipality therein who are lawfully engaged in making purchases of the above-named drugs or articles for State, county, or municipal hospitals or prisons, and officials of any Territory or insular possession of the United States who are lawfully engaged in making purchases of the above-named drugs for hospitals or prisons therein, shall not be required to register and pay the special tax as herein required.

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire to ask the Senator from Colorado a question with regard to the meaning of the paragraph that has just been read.

Mr. THOMAS. The purpose is to exempt the officials and institutions named from the requirements of the section or paragraph.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understand that; but I thought it contained something else. I will ask the Senator from Colorado whether it is intended that a regularly admitted practitioner of medicine who compounds for a patient a prescription in which opium is used shall register and pay the fee that is here provided?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, that subject is covered subsequently in the bill; at least, that is my recollection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is covered in subdivision (a), on page 4.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think it there says that there must be special employment.

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator will turn to page 4 of the bill, he will find upon that and succeeding pages certain exemptions made which, I think, include the class of people to which his question refers.

Mr. CUMMINS. I read now what I suppose the Senator from Colorado refers to:

Nothing contained in this section shall apply—

(a) To the dispensing or distribution of any of the aforesaid drugs to a patient by a physician, dentist, or veterinary surgeon registered under this act in the course of his professional practice only: Provided, That such physician, dentist, or veterinary surgeon shall—

And now I read the proposed committee amendment—

have been specially employed to prescribe for the particular patient receiving such drug or article: And provided further, That such drug shall be dispensed in good faith and not for the purpose of avoiding the provisions of this act.

That seems still to imply that it can be done only by a physician who is registered under this act.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, one of the amendments which will be proposed when we reach that part of the bill will be to eliminate from it the words "registered under this act," on line 20.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am very glad to have that information. I raised the question now because it seemed to me the paragraph under consideration did bring into the scope of the act every doctor who compounded a prescription for a patient.

Mr THOMAS. Without the exceptions subsequently appearing in the bill, perhaps it would have had that effect.

Mr. CUMMINS. When we come to paragraph (a) I shall ask the Senator from Colorado just what is meant by the words "specially employed"; but I shall not do so at this time.

Mr. THOMAS. I thought there was a copy of the House report attached to the bill, but I find there is not.

Mr. OVERMAN. A copy of the House report is included in the Senate report. The Senator will find it in the file.

Mr. THOMAS. I am much obliged to the Senator.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, is the substitute in print which the Senator from Colorado sent to the desk and which was agreed to, as I understand?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is in print, in pamphlet form.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to see it, in order to know what we are discussing.

Mr. THOMAS. I did not understand the inquiry made.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from Colorado will allow me, I will state that the amendment relating to Government officers was simply redrafted and reframed in the form of a substitute so as to exempt officers of States, counties, and municipalities from the special tax and the registration, including them in the exemption with Government officers who are purchasing for hospitals and prisons. All it does is to exclude Government officials from the provision.

Mr. THOMAS. And State officials.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. Before proceeding with the bill beyond line 5, I should like to suggest to the Senator that there ought to be an amendment in line 3.

Mr. THOMAS. I was just going to propose it.

Mr. SMOOT. That is necessary on account of the substitute that was adopted by the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS. I send the amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 3, after the word "person," it is proposed to insert the words "obliged to register under the terms of this act."

Mr. THOMAS. That is the amendment to which the Senator from Utah refers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 20, after the word "drugs" at the end of the line, it is proposed to insert the words "or articles."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 1, after the word "drugs," to insert the words "or articles."

The amendment was agreed to.

RADIUM-BEARING ORES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the special order for the day, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 4405) to provide for and encourage the prospecting, mining, and treatment of radium-bearing ores in lands belonging to the United States, for the purpose of securing an adequate supply of radium for Government and other hospitals in the United States, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There was an appeal taken by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. WALSH. I move that the appeal be laid on the table.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I did not hear the statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana moves that the appeal be laid upon the table. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. WALSH. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, as a parliamentary inquiry I desire to ask that the exact status be stated to the Senate. What is the question to be voted upon? As the Chair has just stated it, I understand that a point of order is made, but I am not able to gather as to what is the point of order made and what was the ruling that is to be sustained or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The ruling of the Chair is printed in the RECORD this morning in full. It was to the effect that the Senate having by a two-thirds majority decided that a certain bill should be made a special order for a certain day at a certain hour that bill remains the special order for that hour on every succeeding day until disposed of. From that decision an appeal was taken by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] now moves to lay that appeal upon the table. The yeas and nays are called for on the motion of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a moment. I hope the Senator from Montana will not insist upon that motion.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not debatable, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. I know it is not debatable.

Mr. LODGE. Debate will go on afterwards. It will not cut off debate. We shall debate the decision.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to say to the Senator from Utah that under ordinary circumstances I would not feel bound to make a motion of this kind; but this question has been debated on three successive days and the whole hour lost——

Mr. GALLINGER and others. Regular order!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are demanded on the motion of the Senator from Montana to lay the appeal upon the table.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	Norris	Simmons
Bankhead	Hitchcock	O'Gorman	Smith, Md.
Borah	Hughes	Oliver	Smoot
Brady	James	Overman	Sutherland

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce for the day the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. CULBERSON] and to state that he is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question recurs upon the motion made by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to lay upon the table the appeal of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BANKHEAD (when his name was called). I will transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I am among the number who were absent when the question was put. I should like to have the Chair state the question before the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. LODGE, and others. Too late.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll call can not be interrupted. The Secretary will proceed.

The Secretary resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "nay."

Mr. DU PONT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. As he is absent from the city, I withhold my vote.

Mr. FALL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH]. Not knowing how he would vote, I refrain from voting.

Mr. KERN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY] to the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "yea."

Mr. McLEAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] and withhold my vote.

Mr. WALSH (when Mr. MYERS's name was called). I announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. MYERS] on account of illness.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). Has the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Then I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] which I transfer to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is absent on important business. He is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I desire this announcement to stand for all votes to-day.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] who is absent. On that account I withhold my vote.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] and vote "yea."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (after having voted in the negative). In transferring my pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], I did not observe that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] is in the Chamber. Conscious of my error in that regard, I now withdraw my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] and vote "nay."

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA]. As he is absent I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY]. He has a general pair with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN]. I wish also to announce that the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] has a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. I will allow this announcement to stand for the day.

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 32, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to lay the appeal on the table is lost. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Vice President yesterday, in ruling as he did, gave his opinion upon, first, a ruling by the Vice President, Mr. Breckinridge, in 1858; and, second, upon a ruling by Senator Frye in the year 1890. I call particular attention to the precedent of February 16, 1858, the ruling by Vice President Breckinridge, which was cited.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. CHILTON. Unfortunately, I was not here when the proposition that is before the Senate came up. I should like to have the Senator state what the question is. I was detained in a committee. I should like to know what is the question on which the Senator is addressing the Senate.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I should like to have order in the Chamber. We can not hear anything that is being said on the other side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. SMOOT. In answer to the Senator from West Virginia, I will say that the question is whether a special order made for a certain day, if not disposed of upon the day set for the special order, has a right to be presented at the same hour of the day following the day for which it was set.

The Vice President has held that the special order comes up automatically the following day at the same hour of the day for which it was set upon the first day. He pointed, first, to a precedent in the year 1858, the ruling made by Vice President Breckinridge, and cited a part of the rule; but I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the vital part of the rule the Vice President did not call to the attention of the Senate. I want to read the rule that was in force in 1858:

When the hour shall have arrived for the consideration of a special order, it shall be the duty of the Chair to take up such special order, and the Senate shall proceed to consider it, unless it be postponed by vote of the Senate.

That is what the Vice President called attention to, but in paragraph 4 of that rule it is specifically stated:

Special orders shall not lose their position on account of intervening adjournments, nor shall they lose their relative position on the calendar, except by vote of the Senate, until finally disposed of.

Mr. OVERMAN. That rule has been changed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if that rule were in force to-day in this body, there would be no question that the ruling of the Chair on yesterday was right, but the rule has been changed. Rule X now covers this question. I am not going to take the time to read it, for all Senators are familiar with it.

Mr. President, in a short statement I made the other day I said that the practice of the Senate ever since I had been a Member of it had been that whenever a special order had been made for a certain day it was taken up upon that day, and if not disposed of on that day it lost its place and went to the calendar under special orders. It has not thereby lost any of its rights other than that of a special order, but it has had its day in court; it has been before the Senate, and if not finally disposed of, of course, goes to the calendar.

I wish to say that if a special order was being considered at the time of adjournment, the following day it would become the unfinished business of the Senate. That, however, was not the case in this instance. Let me call attention to one precedent—and I shall not go through all the others that I have here—and I believe that nearly every Member of this body will remember the circumstances under which the precedent to which I shall refer was established. On August 16—and this was in the second session of the Sixty-second Congress—a special order was made, as shown by the following debate:

Mr. KENYON. As the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] has been successful in securing unanimous consent, I desire to ask that Calendar No. 838, being the bill (S. 4043) to prohibit interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors in certain cases, be made a special order for December 16, to be taken up and considered after the morning hour, not to interfere with the Archbald case. I do not believe the bill can receive consideration at this session, and hence I do not want to impose it upon the Senate, but I do want a hearing on this bill. It is a bill to regulate the shipment of intoxicating liquors into prohibition States.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the request, as I understand, is that the bill be made a special order for that day?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so understands. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. President, this, I repeat, was in the Sixty-second Congress. A special order was made to take up the bill on December 16, during the first session of the Sixty-third Congress. Now, let us follow that special order and bill and see what became of them.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. WEST. The Archbald case was the unfinished business?

Mr. SMOOT. The Archbald case was an impeachment trial, which, of course, is a privileged question.

Mr. WEST. Oh, yes. I did not understand what was referred to.

Mr. SMOOT. We find by an examination of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that the bill made a special order by the request of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] was never mentioned until the 16th day of December, at the following session of Congress. On that day, under the special order, the Senator from Iowa addressed the Senate on the bill made the special order. He did not conclude his remarks on that day, but what did he do the following day? The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] had given notice that he intended to call up the omnibus claims bill, and immediately after the conclusion of morning business the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] moved to take up the claims bill. The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

After the bill had been considered for some time, the Senator from Iowa asked if the Senator from South Dakota would not consent to have the bill temporarily laid aside to enable him to conclude his remarks. Mind you, the bill of the Senator from Iowa had no right in the body; it was not laid before the Senate, but the Senator asked unanimous consent to continue its discussion. That was granted, and the Senator from Iowa proceeded with his remarks. He did not finish his remarks on that day. The next day the omnibus claims bill was again taken up immediately after morning business; the Senator from Iowa again asked unanimous consent to conclude his remarks, and the request was granted. That was on the 18th day of December.

We never again heard of that bill until January 10; it was never laid before the Senate; no motion was ever made in reference to it, and no preference was given to the bill until January 10, when the then Senator from Tennessee, Mr. Sanders, asked that, by unanimous consent, an order be entered to vote upon the bill at a certain hour upon a certain day. The Senate will remember that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] was then in the chair. He said, "Hearing no objection, the request is granted." I immediately arose in my seat and said that my attention had been diverted from the business of the Senate by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], otherwise I would have objected. We discussed that matter for a couple of days, and the Senate then decided to reconsider the order agreed to by the Senate. After that, there was still another unanimous consent asked that the bill be voted upon on a certain day. That unanimous consent was agreed to, and the bill was voted upon some time in January.

Mr. President, how many of us can remember the vocational-education bill of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE], Senate bill No. 3, and how many times that bill was made a special order? It had its day in court; the Senator from Vermont spoke upon it; but the bill was not voted upon. It never secured any right whatever other than on the day for which it was made a special order.

Mr. President, the other precedent pointed to by the Vice President was the ruling made by Senator Frye. I have gone through the entire record in that case, and I do not see how any Senator can read it without realizing that there were peculiar circumstances attending it. Senator Morgan was interested in the Nicaragua Canal bill. As every Senator knows, the ambition of his whole life was to get that matter before the country and have it acted upon, but he found that measure blocked by the unfinished business from the 10th day of December until the 26th day of February, in a short session of Congress, Congress having to adjourn on the 4th day of March.

In order to get that bill before the Senate, Senator Frye held in this very decision that the unfinished business, which was the oleomargarine bill, was displaced because of the adoption of a motion of Senator Hale to take up another bill after 2 o'clock, although the bill so taken up was disposed of within one hour and the consideration of the oleomargarine bill was resumed. I think it clear that the motion of Senator Hale did not displace the unfinished business, although in his decision Senator Frye held that it did. The Nicaragua bill could not have been brought up unless the oleomargarine bill had been displaced, and I have no question in my mind, Senators, that the oleomargarine bill was displaced for that purpose only.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator has called attention to the fact that the rule on this subject was changed, and, as I understand his contention, it was changed to prevent a special order from having precedence on the second day. Has the Senator examined and can he bring to our attention the debate in the Senate in connection with the change of the rule?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have looked up the RECORD when that rule was reported to the Senate, but there was no debate touching that point that I can find.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, after the adoption of that amendment to the rules did not the practice of making bills special orders fall into absolute disuse, and since that time has it ever been resorted to until the last session, I think, when the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] had a bill made the special order? The Senator from Utah has been here 10 years or more, and I will ask him if within his recollection any measure has been made a special order except in the two instances which have been cited? Since the rules were amended on motion of Senator Hoar extending the morning hour from 1 o'clock to 2 o'clock we have always considered the unfinished business after that hour and never a special order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. In a moment I will yield to the Senator. Now I want to call the attention of Senators to the fact that in more than one case a special order has been made for a certain day, the bill discussed upon that day and then the bill has gone to the calendar under special orders and remained on the calendar to the close of the session; it was never called up or acted upon or discussed after the day for which it was set as a special order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is it not probably true, then, that all of the precedents cited which permit a special order to be heard on the day following and continuously thereafter were under the old rule, and that unless attention is called to the fact that the rule has been changed those precedents might be misconstrued as applicable to the present rule?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the only precedents pointed to fall under Rule XXXI.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the old rule.

Mr. KERN. When was the rule changed?

Mr. SMOOT. In 1884.

Mr. KERN. Before or after the Frye ruling?

Mr. SMOOT. Before the Frye ruling.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah would extend his investigations a little further he would find that at one time during the Sixty-second Congress there were two special orders on the calendar at the same time under the heading of "Special orders," which never were laid before the Senate at a particular hour and which never were called up, as I remember, during the entire session.

As I recall the matter, it happened to be my privilege to preside over the Senate about that time, in conjunction with the distinguished Senator from Georgia, Mr. Bacon, who has passed away from us, and certainly I never thought of laying a special order before the Senate at a given time and neither did the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will venture to state that a special order has never been laid before the Senate except on the day fixed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is, since the change in the rule.

Mr. SMOOT. Since the change in the rule.

I want to impress upon the mind of the Senate what that rule was.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Is the Senator referring to the old rule?

Mr. SMOOT. To the old rule which was in force in this body when Vice President Breckinridge rendered his decision.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I hope the Senator will read it.

Mr. SMOOT. I will read it. I read from paragraph 4 of Rule XXXI:

> Special orders shall not lose their position on account of intervening adjournments; nor shall they lose their relative position on the calendar, except by vote of the Senate, until finally disposed of.

Mr. CHILTON. From what is the Senator reading?

Mr. SMOOT. From the old rules. I sent to the library and got a copy of the old rules.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. KERN. I understand the present rule was adopted in January, 1884?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. KERN. The Frye ruling was in 1901.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. KERN. Seventeen years afterwards.

Mr. SMOOT. I have so stated, Mr. President. I thought the Senator, in asking me a moment ago the question, referred to the prior ruling of Vice President Breckinridge.

Mr. KERN. No; I was referring to the Frye ruling.

Mr. SMOOT. But the Frye ruling, I will say to the Senator, was made under the circumstances which I have explained, and I have stated the reason why I believe that ruling was made.

Mr. KERN. The Senator has discussed the motive for the ruling, but the ruling was made since the present rules were adopted.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator certainly knows, however, that the present Vice President has held time and time again that where unfinished business comes up at 2 o'clock, if a bill is taken up on motion after 2 o'clock and is disposed of before adjournment, it does not displace the unfinished business.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course not.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course it does not, and yet under the ruling of Senator Frye it was held that such a motion did displace the unfinished business.

Mr. GALLINGER. To fortify the position which the Senator is so ably advocating I will ask does it not follow, as a matter of fact, that if the ruling which the Vice President made is a sound one the Senate acted foolishly in changing the old rule which exactly carried out what the Vice President contends should be the procedure of the Senate?

Mr. SMOOT. And a rule could not be framed in more specific language to carry out that idea than did the old rule.

Mr. GALLINGER. Exactly.

Mr. SMOOT. And the very reason it was changed was to get rid of special orders which might be held as a buffer against all other legislation.

Why, Mr. President, if this ruling is held correct, if a special order is made to take up a bill upon a certain day at 12.30 o'clock and that special order has to come before this body every day thereafter at 12.30 o'clock until disposed of, what would we do with the morning business; what would we do with the calendar; what would become of the business of this body?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Utah whether the remedy for that situation of affairs is not in the action of the Senate in refusing to make a bill a special order, and whether, since the rule requires the vote of two-thirds in order to make a bill a special order, it is not presumable that no bill will be made a special order unless it is some matter of very vital and urgent consequences?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I have seen bills made special orders here upon which Senators never expected any action. They wanted to make speeches upon the bills—they thought their particular States were interested in them—and it gave them a chance to make the speeches. I desire to say to the Senator now, however, that if I had had any thought whatever that the Vice President would have held that the special order asked for by the Senator from Montana would result in the bill being brought before this body every day at 1 o'clock, of course I never would have consented.

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator will pardon me further, I did not ask about possible abuses; I asked about the consideration that induced the adoption of the rule. I asked him whether, when the rule was adopted providing that a bill could not be made a special order except by a vote of two-thirds, the rule did not contemplate that only bills of special urgency would be made special orders?

Mr. SMOOT. The rule contemplated just what the practice of this body has been ever since the adoption of the rule. That is that a special order, when granted by a two-thirds vote, has a right to its day in court, and if not disposed of upon that day it ceases to have any right over and above any other bill that may be upon the calendar at that particular time.

Mr. President, it would be far better for the Senate to amend its rules, if it thought the present rule is not plainly expressed, than to have a rule adopted now that is absolutely out of harmony with all the practices of this body since January, 1884, when the present rule was adopted.

There is more to this matter than the consideration of this particular bill. So far as I am personally concerned, I wish to say to the Senator from Montana that I would vote to take up his bill at any time after morning business is concluded. It is not a question of retarding the consideration of that bill. There is a greater question involved here. It is whether or not this body will respect its rules. If the rules are not right, the only proper thing to do is to amend the rules, and not to violate them.

I believe that is all I have to say upon this subject. I do not see how the Senate of the United States can vote any other way than to disagree to the ruling of the Chair as long as the rules remain as they are.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah a question. His contention, as I understand, is that under all circumstances no special order has any existence here outside of the day on which it is brought up?

Mr. SMOOT. Absolutely, unless the special order is being considered at the time of adjournment. If it is being considered at the time of adjournment, it automatically becomes the unfinished business.

Mr. WALSH. Then it has its place by reason of its being unfinished business, and not a special order?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly; and that has been the practice in this body ever since the present rules were adopted.

Mr. WALSH. So, in answer to the question of the Senator from Georgia, the Senator from Utah says it has a preference only on that day?

Mr. SMOOT. On that day, unless it becomes the unfinished business by being under consideration at the time of adjournment.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to speak very briefly on this question, simply because the result of the ruling of the Chair goes so very far. It will either create a situation in which all business will be clogged, because we shall do that worst of all things, mortgage the time of the Senate from day to day, and special orders will be piled up one on top of the other, or it will result in stopping all special orders. I think the latter will be the probable result.

If this ruling is to prevail, I can not imagine that the Senate will take any measure out of its usual status in that way and clothe it with a continuous privilege, taking away from the calendar and from all other business the time now allotted to it before the unfinished business is reached.

The case of 1858, which has been so much discussed, may be easily set aside. That ruling was made under entirely different conditions. Those were the days when there was no unfinished business, and special orders took the place of unfinished business, enabling the Senate to take up from day to day a specific measure.

I was in the Senate when Senator Frye made the ruling in regard to the Nicaragua resolution, which Senator Morgan had had made the special order for December 10. I have looked over the ruling since, and have followed its course after the day on which the ruling was made, in order to refresh my memory. I say it with all respect, but, in my judgment, Senator Frye's ruling has no relation to the point under consideration here.

Senator Frye's ruling went simply to the point that a special order retained that character until it had once been dealt with; that is, that being fixed for December 10 it never lost its privilege until it had its day in court. The proposition of the Vice President now is that when we make a bill a special order we not only give it a privilege for the day for which it is asked but we clothe it with a continuous privilege like the unfinished business, and that it is to come up automatically, as this is coming up automatically now, at 1 o'clock, cutting out the calendar and everything else.

That certainly has not been the practice of the Senate. The practice of the Senate ever since I have been a Member of this body has been that a special order exhausted its privilege when it had its day in court—that is, it exhausted its privilege except that it then went to the Calendar of Special Orders, which under the rules of the Senate has no particular meaning that I have ever been able to discover—but it had no continuous privilege. That has been the practice of the Senate, and it has always been placed on the ground that we must not mortgage the time in this way from day to day. Anyone can see how easy it would be to clog the whole business of the Senate by having the unfinished business come up at 2 o'clock and a special order at 1 o'clock or half past 12. In a little while we should have all the time of the Senate mortgaged for days or for weeks ahead.

The rules are silent as to what becomes of a bill after it goes on the Calendar of Special Orders; but, Mr. President, I am very clearly of the opinion that the practice of the Senate has been wholly against the ruling of the Chair, and I am quite certain that Senator Frye's ruling proceeded only as far as the privilege for the day. The next day, which was not cited here, Senator Morgan brought up the matter again and claimed privilege for his resolution, and asked the Chair—Senator Frye—if his ruling did not give him that privilege. Senator Frye said, "It does not."

It will be remembered that the time fixed for Senator Morgan's resolution was 2 o'clock, so that at 2 o'clock his special order was taken up; and by taking it up at 2 o'clock it was transformed into unfinished business. Senator Frye said that it became unfinished business; and then, by motion of the Senate, it was set aside by taking up the fortifications bill. In other words, Senator Frye held that this special order, adopted by a two-thirds vote, was set aside by a majority vote.

If the privilege was continuous, of course that could not have been done. The privilege which the two-thirds vote gives is that the bill, whether at the time first named or not, shall have its day in court. There the privilege ends.

You may parallel it with the case of a conference report. A conference report has the highest privilege. It can be called up at any time, but when it is called up the privilege is exhausted. It has no further privilege. The question of consideration can be raised upon it. It has no continuous privilege from day to day. The privilege is exhausted, and in the same way the privilege of the special order is exhausted. I am speaking of the practice of the Senate, and I am speaking in accord with Senator Frye's rulings. The privilege is exhausted when it has had its day before the Senate.

Mr. President, recognizing, as I do, the gap that there is in the rules in regard to what shall become of the Calendar of Special Orders, it seems to me that is one of the many things that ought to be dealt with in a revision of the rules. I think it would be wise to abolish special orders altogether. They have ceased to be useful; and if this ruling is enforced, in my judgment it will be many a long day before you will see another special order. All Senators have many bills in which they are interested. Senators are interested in the calendar. They are not going voluntarily to cut themselves off for a single measure.

Under the old system the special order amounted to very little. It was often used, as the Senator from Utah has pointed out, where a Senator desired to make a speech.

I wish simply to lay these considerations before the Senate in regard to the results of this new ruling. It is a very vital change in the practice of the Senate. Personally I hope the Committee on Rules, or a special committee appointed by this body, may be authorized to take up the question of the rules and cover some of these disputed points on which there is a chance for great differences of opinion, and which I think can be cleared away without changing the great body of the rules, which I think are very wise, and under which we do business very well.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The ruling of the Vice President ought to be distinctly understood by the Senate. It is that this bill, having been made the special order for a particular hour of a particular day, continues thereafter to enjoy the same privilege and to come up at the same hour of every subsequent day until it has been finally disposed of.

Whatever may be the status of a bill which has been made the special order, or whether it has any status at all different from that enjoyed by any other bill upon the calendar, it is apparent, upon a moment's consideration of the rules of the Senate, that it does not enjoy the privilege which the Vice President has given to it. I have read the rule before, but I desire to call attention to it again because other Senators are now in the Chamber, and I should like very much to have the attention of Senators who may be interested in this subject.

Rule VIII distinctly provides that—

> At the conclusion of the morning business for each day, unless upon motion the Senate shall at any time otherwise order, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the Calendar of Bills and Resolutions, and continue such consideration until 2 o'clock.

There can not be the slightest doubt as to the emphatic meaning of that rule. It is not qualified except by way of emphasis, as I shall show in a moment. It provides, without qualification, that every day at the conclusion of the morning business—which means the routine morning business—unless upon motion the Senate shall otherwise order, the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of the General Order Calendar, and shall continue that consideration until the hour of 2 o'clock. So, if we stop there, there is clearly an inhibition against taking up anything at 1 o'clock, because the rule has emphatically provided that we must continue until 2 o'clock with the particular order of business described in Rule VIII.

By way of emphasis, further along in the rule, it is said:

> And—

Meaning the consideration of the calendar, which must continue until 2 o'clock—> and shall take precedence of the unfinished business—

It does not even stop there—> shall take precedence of the unfinished business and other special orders.

Can anything be plainer than that—that this rule that the Calendar of General Orders shall be proceeded with until the hour of 2 o'clock each day shall take precedence of a special order? Yet the Vice President has held, not that the rule shall be enforced which declares that the General Calendar shall take precedence of a special order, but precisely the contrary—that a bill upon the Special Calendar shall take precedence of the General Order Calendar—a ruling which is directly in the teeth of the rule of the Senate.

The next rule, Rule IX, provides:

> Immediately after the consideration of cases not objected to upon the calendar is completed, and not later than 2 o'clock, if there shall be no special orders for that time, the Calendar of General Orders shall be taken up and proceeded with in its order.

So the two rules, taken together, contemplate that for the first two hours of every session, until 2 o'clock if we meet at 12, we shall proceed with the unobjected cases upon the calendar to the exclusion of everything else, unless there has been a special motion to dispense with the rule; that then, at the hour of 2 o'clock, whether or not we have concluded the consideration of unobjected cases, we shall proceed to consider the same calendar, namely, the Calendar of General Orders, for cases whether they are objected to or not, unless, as the rule says, there is a special order for that time. Of course there is no special order for that time to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 120) to provide for the inspection and grading of grain entering into interstate commerce, and to secure uniformity in standards and classification of grain, and for other purposes.

Mr. LODGE obtained the floor.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. LODGE. I was only going to ask permission to say one word in explanation of what I have just been saying on the point of order, and it is only a word. I think I did not make quite clear the basis of Senator Frye's ruling, and I want to emphasize it.

Senator Morgan's special order called for the bill to be taken up at 2 o'clock on December 10. That is the hour of the unfinished business. There was unfinished business from that time until the 23d of February, and he never got it up, because the special order did not displace the unfinished business. On February 23 the unfinished business had gone, there was none, and then Senator Frye held that the special order had never lost its privilege for its day before the Senate, and that is all he held—that the privilege, which he held the special order had, had never been exhausted.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11269) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. SHIVELY. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked for by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. SHIVELY, Mr. JOHNSON, and Mr. STERLING conferees on the part of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 5850. An act to amend section 162 of the act to codify, amend, and revise the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHIVELY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Pending that I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gallinger	Nelson	Simmons
Brady	Hitchcock	O'Gorman	Smoot
Brandegee	Hughes	Oliver	Sterling
Bristow	James	Owen	Sutherland

Mr. WALSH. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. MYERS] on account of illness.

Mr. ASHURST. I wish to announce that the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] is absent on business of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it. The ayes have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The ayes have it, and the Sergeant at Arms will clear the galleries and close the doors.

The Senate thereupon proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 3 hours and 30 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. GORE. From the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry I report back with amendments the bill (H. R. 13679) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and I submit a report (No. 429) thereon. I desire to give notice that I shall ask the Senate to take up the bill at the first opportunity.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUGHES in the chair). The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. SHIVELY. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, April 17, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

O Thou who art the source of all that is truest, purest, noblest, best in the heart of man, humbly and reverently we bow in Thy holy presence and pray with all the fervor of our soul that good may be the ruling passion of our life and of all lives; that evil may be consumed by the overwhelming power of love; that every heart, every home, every land may dwell in peace, joy, happiness; and pæans of praise we will give to Thee, in the spirit of Him who died that we might live. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

RETURN OF BILL FROM SENATE.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a resolution, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SCOTT] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 472.

Resolved, That the House of Representatives request of the Senate the return to the House of the enrolled bill S. 1689, authorizing the accounting officers of the Treasury to allow in the accounts of the United States marshal for the district of Connecticut amounts paid by him from certain appropriations, which passed the House on March 9, 1914.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15279, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15279, with Mr. GARNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15279, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15279) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. What is the status?

The CHAIRMAN. The question pending when the committee rose from the consideration of the bill last Tuesday was the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I ask that that amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 138, insert as a new paragraph, at the end of line 4, the following:

"To carry into effect the provisions of the act approved April 9, 1912, providing for the investigation of questions of infant mortality and dangerous occupations, $50,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the amendment:

"Provided, That this appropriation shall not be expended for any investigation that the Public Health Service is required or authorized by law to make."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to have unanimous consent that the debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto close in a given time. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. Would it not be a good idea to run on a little while, until we determine how many people desire time?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I am afraid if we do that it will be just as difficult 30 minutes from now to get an agreement as it is now. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto close in 50 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto close in 50 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, there are 10 men on their feet now who want time.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. There are only about 7 or 8 people on their feet.

Mr. MURDOCK. I counted 10 a minute ago, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Let us see. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] wants 5 minutes, the gentleman from California [Mr. J. I. NOLAN] wants 5, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] wants 15, the gentleman——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto close in 1 hour, 30 minutes of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] and 30 minutes by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto close in one hour——

Mr. MANN. Make it an hour and a half.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will withhold until the Chair states the unanimous-consent request. One-half of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] and one-half of the time by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object——

Mr. MANN. Will not the gentleman make it one hour and a half?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; please do. [Laughter.] There are so many people interested, and it is all on this proposition. Make it an hour and a half.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I noticed in the RECORD of yesterday morning that quite a number of speeches have already been made or inserted, which is the same thing.

Mr. MANN. We who are on our feet did not do so. Make it an hour and a half.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I think an hour is ample. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is very anxious to get away, and so am I.

Mr. MANN. So am I. But make it an hour and a half. It is actual debate on the proposition.

Mr. MURDOCK. There is nothing in controversy after this is passed.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. How much time does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] want?

Mr. GOOD. I will say that there are seven gentlemen here now on this side of the House——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will ask for an hour and 10 minutes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GOOD. There are seven gentlemen on this side who have already risen. There are several on that side who want to speak in favor of the amendment, so I suppose I would have to yield to those gentlemen on that side who would want to speak. That being the case, I ought to have on this side at least three-quarters of an hour—in fact, an hour—to yield five minutes to each man who wants to speak in favor of the amendment. And I will say to the gentleman, we will make haste by allowing liberal time.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. If we have not been liberal in the consideration of this bill, I fail to know the meaning of the word.

Mr. MANN. We appreciate that. Do not ruin your reputation now.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I am going to ask unanimous consent to make it 1 hour and 20 minutes, and if I can not get unanimous consent for 1 hour and 20 minutes, I am going to move to close it. That gives each side 40 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina amends his unanimous-consent request and now asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto close in 1 hour and 20 minutes, one half of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] and one half by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] is recognized.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOWARD. I addressed the Chair a moment ago and reserved the right to object and I understood the Chair recognized me. I do not know whether he recognized me for that purpose or not, but before the Chair stated the proposition this last time I asked for recognition to reserve the right to object for the purpose of asking the gentleman from South Carolina whether he would allow me some time.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will allow the gentleman five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Georgia that he thought he spoke loudly enough for everyone to hear him, and stated the amended proposition of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON], which was to limit the debate to 1 hour and 20 minutes, one half of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] and the other half to be controlled by the gentleman from South Carolina; and the Chair asked if there was objection.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not want to be discourteous to the Chair, as I was a moment before, to break into the Chair as he was stating the proposition. A minute thereafter I reserved the right to object, and the Chair recognized me. I merely want to say to the gentleman from South Carolina that I shall want five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] is recognized.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I want to express my hearty approval of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], increasing the amount available for the work of the Children's Bureau. We in Massachusetts have endeavored to keep up with the progressive views of the day in the adoption of proper laws under which our citizens shall live. Massachusetts has long had the honor of having the best and most advanced methods of factory inspection and the care of women and children under employment. Certainly our State wants to ask consideration of the Federal authorities for the extension of the child-labor studies, which may materially affect the health and life of future generations.

Massachusetts has always been more than proud of the laws under which our State carries on so-called welfare work. We even have in our State legislature to-day a committee having to do solely with questions of social welfare, and certainly there is no more pressing need than the care of our children and infants.

As indicative of the interest of Massachusetts in the subject of child welfare and proper consideration for women about to become mothers, I desire to read chapter 229, acts 1911, of the acts and resolves of Massachusetts. I believe this was the first statute of the kind passed in any State, and I am proud to have been able to assist in having it become a law. The law is as follows:

An act relative to the employment of women in mercantile, manufacturing, and mechanical establishments.

Be it enacted, etc., That no woman shall knowingly be employed in laboring in a mercantile, manufacturing, or mechanical establishment within two weeks before or four weeks after childbirth.

SEC. 2. The foregoing section shall be included in the notice with regard to the employment of women now required to be posted in mercantile, manufacturing, and mechanical establishments, and the provisions thereof shall be enforced by the district police.

SEC. 3. Violations of section 1 of this act shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $100.

SEC. 4. This act shall take effect on the 1st day of January, 1912.

Approved, March 31, 1911.

I received only this morning a strong, urgent appeal from a constituent of mine asking support for this additional appropriation, and I will incorporate the letter as part of my remarks:

HOLYOKE, MASS., April 14, 1914.

Mr. ALLEN T. TREADWAY,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. TREADWAY: I am writing to ask your support for adequate appropriation for the Children's Bureau. I understand that the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives has just refused to recommend an appropriation of $165,000. Last year only $25,640 was appropriated. I understand that an effort will be made to amend the bill on the floor of the House so as to secure an increased appropriation.

If the Government can appropriate $7,699,191 for the Bureaus of Plant and Animal Industry, it surely ought to be able to spare a little more than $25,000 for the Children's Bureau. The time is already at hand when children are to be considered of at least equal importance with plants and animals.

Very truly, yours,

_____.

Enormous sums have already been favored by this Congress for investigation or suppression of diseases affecting cattle and animals and for study and information about diseases of plants. How much more necessary it is that a proper appropriation should be made for the bureau caring for the children and babies of the land. The amount asked is infinitesimal in comparison with the importance of the subject. The lives of our children must be rated by every Member of this House as of much greater value than cattle and plants. The comparison is a sad commentary on our humanitarianism.

It seems to me exceedingly unfortunate that in establishing such important bureaus as this on child labor greater consideration can not be given to the organic law, so that we shall not be hemmed in here in this great Congress by these very questions of extension of just such work as this, which I am sure the American people desire and expect us to bring about, and at the same time which may be subject to a point of order, not understood by the people of the country. We can not, in the making of organic laws, establish at the very beginning and consider what may be the outcome of such a bureau as this one under consideration to-day, but we ought, in my opinion, to have some way whereby amendment can be made to these organic laws under such considerations as the present, and I am sure the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] is doing a great benefit to the cause of humanity in offering an amendment in such form that the Chair in his wisdom sustained it.

It is not necessary at this time to discuss means of economizing the funds of the Government. This is not one of the places for parsimony. Let us be as liberal in the support of this bureau as the object is deserving. Nothing but words of praise are spoken for the method in which the able head of the Children's Bureau is conducting her work. Let us increase her resources within all reasonable bounds. I hope to see the work of the Children's Bureau so increase and expand its sphere of usefulness as to become one of the greatest instruments for good we have in the conduct of the affairs of our Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the adoption of the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], but I do not think his amendment provides sufficient funds for this bureau.

The Children's Bureau is just two years old. It was organized in April of 1912, and the act creating it provides that it shall "investigate and report upon matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life among all classes of our people, and shall especially investigate the questions of infant mortality, birth rate, orphanage, juvenile courts, desertion, dangerous occupations and accidents of children, employment, and legislation affecting children in the several States and Territories."

That is a pretty big job, but Miss Lathrop, the chief of the bureau, has demonstrated that she has the requisite talent.

During the last two years she has been struggling along trying to make both ends meet on a little appropriation of $25,640 a year. This has been barely sufficient to meet her salary and the salaries of the handful of clerks and experts provided in the organic act. There has been practically no money for outside work or for the printing or distribution of reports.

While Miss Lathrop has been laboring under these serious handicaps she has found time to outline a really ambitious program for the development of her bureau. She submitted her ideas to the Committee on Appropriations and asked for an allowance of $164,640. The committee, in its wisdom, has seen fit to reject her plea and to insist that for the coming year she shall have exactly the same appropriation she was allowed for the current fiscal year. In other words, Mr. Chairman, this bureau is not to be permitted to develop. Miss Lathrop and her assistants may continue to draw their salaries, but if the Committee on Appropriations has its way they will not be permitted to do anything looking toward the solution of the many and intricate problems affecting the child life of this Nation.

The gentleman from Iowa suggests that in addition to the $25,640 allowed by the committee the bureau be given $50,000 in a lump sum. I insist that that is not enough, and that instead of $50,000 we should place $139,000 in this lump appropriation, making the total appropriation $164,640, the amount requested by Miss Lathrop.

Gentlemen may talk about extravagance as much as they like, but I insist that while the people of this country are in favor of economy they are in favor of the right kind of economy. A few weeks ago we rushed through this House, by unanimous consent, a bill appropriating $600,000 to stamp out hog cholera. We would have made the appropriation $6,000,000 if the experts had told us that by the expenditure of such a sum they could save the lives of the hogs of this country. I would have voted for such an appropriation, and you would have voted for such an appropriation, Mr. Chairman, and the people of the country would have approved of such an appropriation. If it is essential to protect the lives of the hogs of this country, how much more important it is to protect the lives of the children of this country. The experts tell us that each year 300,000 children die in this country before they attain the age of 1 year. We are assured that fully one-half of these deaths are directly traceable to ignorance and lack of care.

This is truly a slaughter of the innocents.

We are lagging behind the world in this matter of the care of the child. Even little New Zealand has so far outstripped us that the death rate among children there is only one-half the death rate among children in this country. We must not continue to tolerate this state of affairs.

But the problem of the care of the babies of this country is only one of the many activities of this bureau. It is especially charged with the duty of investigating and reporting on dangerous occupations of children. This brings up the problem of child labor, one of the most important questions before the American people to-day.

As a member of the Committee on Labor I have had occasion to give much thought and study to this question. The committee recently held hearings on the child-labor bill introduced by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER], and I want to present to the House at this time a few brief extracts from the mass of intensely interesting evidence submitted to the committee in the course of those hearings.

Here is the story told by Mrs. Florence Kelley, general secretary of the National Consumers' League. Mrs. Kelley has devoted her life to this work and has achieved a national reputation. Her labors have been confined to the States of the North and East and have been directed in large part to the amelioration of the conditions surrounding the employment of children. I quote from her testimony:

I spend my summers in a village in Maine where there are two principal industries—fishing and the preserving of fish and shell food. All summer long there floats around on the Atlantic Ocean, about 4½ miles outside of the seashore line, a wretched little boat occupied by two men who are without a country. They are native citizens of the State of Maine, but were found guilty of gathering in Blue Hill Bay 1,560 scallops illegally. There is a fine by the Federal Government of $1 a scallop for every scallop taken illegally. These men will never be able to pay that fine. So they can not land, and all summer long they live in this little boat, and in the winter go up into Canada, because the Federal Government enforces very efficiently the protection of scallops in our part of Maine.

In the village is a factory which preserves scallops and fish. Under the laws of the State of Maine children can not work in that factory until they are 14 years of age, and they have very rigid limitations on their hours and a stiff educational requirement, but the nearest justice of the peace is 28 miles away.

The State of Maine is very eager to promote the canning industry. The number of child-labor inspectors is very insufficient, and the consequence is that when fish are brought in to the cannery the children are sent there by their fathers, who are a very shiftless set. They are a great deal like the man in Janet Lee's little story of Uncle William. He was asked what the people do in Maine in the long winter. He replied, "Along about the beginning of November you make a big fire in the fireplace, and from then until Washington's Birthday you sit and think, and then along after Washington's Birthday you mostly just sit there." These fathers are about like that. Whenever there is any work they send their children into the factory, and the children work at any age and unlimited hours. You can understand how confusing it is to their moral sense. The Federal Government is very much interested in the protection of the scallops. Everyone is interested in scallops in that part of Maine, because it is hard to get food there, and the Government is particular that the scallops should be taken care of. But it seems disproportionate that these two men should be kept out on the sea in that boat forever, and then have the children of the State of Maine, encouraged by their parents to break the law whenever opportunity offers, and have Uncle Sam keep his hands off out of respect for the local State authorities, who do nothing at all.

The discrepancy is not always so picturesque, but in principle the same kind of thing occurs in a thousand forms all over the country. We seem to take care of everything except the most essential thing—the children, whose moral sense is being molded now. When we are dead they will be the Republic. Negatively, of course, Uncle Sam is assuming a great responsibility in his continued neglect of them, in his continued application to the minor interests of the country and continued neglect of the greater interests of the Republic.

That is the way the matter presents itself increasingly to numbers of people who from year to year become interested in the problem of the immigrant children or our own poor white children, such as these children in Maine who are losing their childhood and the privileges of education, who are going the way the English children have gone for the last 100 years.

Our industries are increasing. One State after another changes from an agricultural State to a manufacturing State. We find this process going on in the most conspicuous manner in New Jersey, where formerly there was chiefly fruit growing and agriculture, but now every steerage that comes into the port of New York brings with it children who work in the manufacturing industries there. The compulsory-education law is very laxly enforced in New Jersey. We do not ask the Government to interfere with that, but we do believe this proposed Federal law would come to the rescue, right there in that one State, of an increasing number of children every year that passes, and there has been dire need of it.

It is over 30 years since I enlisted in the effort to get better legislation for the protection of the children. I believe there are more children under 16 years old working to-day in dangerous occupations than there were when I began, because our manufacturing industries have increased stupendously and our State legislation has halted. There has been no unity in our progress. The 48 States suggest the legs of a centipede, some going forward and some paralyzed, the total progress lamentably slow. This Republic is one, and we can not go on forever with a favored class of children in the Northwestern States, where there is a requirement that the children shall not work until they are 15 years of age, and they are kept in school throughout the eighth grade, while in the southern cotton-manufacturing States there is no compulsory education and either entire lack of legislation by the State or a collection of nugatory laws. South Carolina at one time restricted the work of children to 10 hours a day, but afterwards decided that life was too easy for them and prolonged the hours to 66 hours a week, and permitted 11 hours a day for young children. We can not, as one Nation, go on having favored children in the Northwest and oppressed, helot children in the Southeast. We can not go on having such a relation as that now in Pennsylvania, where children 14 years old may work all night in the glassworks, and in West Virginia there is no enforcement whatever of the child-labor law. They work at any age.

In Ohio, the State adjacent to those two, boys can not work until they are 15 years old—in manufacture—and can not work at night until they are 16, and the law is enforced. It is hard upon the children to have such discrepancies.

As I stated, Mr. Chairman, Mrs. Kelley's story has to do with the States of the North and East. Now, let me present you some evidence from the Southern States. I realize that my friends of the South are rather sensitive on this subject, and I am sure I have no desire to further offend them. We are told, however, that the truth will make us free, and in this case we must tell the truth in order that the children of the South—the white children, by the way—may be freed from the evils of the industrial system prevailing south of Mason and Dixon's line. Here is the story told your Labor Committee by Mr. W. H. Swift, secretary of the North Carolina Child Labor Committee, and for two years one of the trusted employees of the National Child Labor Committee. I quote from the official report of the hearing:

Mr. SWIFT. I have spent two years talking about this matter face to face with men who are in the habit of using children for the manufacture of their goods. So far as I now remember, I have never heard a single man, either in North or South Carolina, claim that it would not be a good thing for the child and for the community to forbid the employment of children. The best reason why it would be good to have such a law I heard expressed by a mountaineer. I was talking to a little body of mountaineers about this matter, and after I got through a long, skinny fellow got up and said: "I have some folks who are working their young ones in the mill, but I am with you, and I will tell you why: We are cattle raisers up in this country, and I notice when a fellow gets a good heifer up here to raise fine stock he does not put her to work." That was his reason for being in favor of a restricted law.

But, passing that over, the question will come how, in this country, are we going to be able to restrict the use of children in manufacturing establishments and in mines? There are just two possible ways. It can be successfully done by the Federal Government. In some States it can not be successfully done for a great many years by the State governments. Some of the States, of course, will enact and have enacted laws which forbid the use of children under 14 years of age or for more than eight hours a day. In other States, where the same goods are manufactured and come in competition with the goods manufactured in the other States, they do not have this law. There are other States which have an 11-hour law and 12 years as the limit, which is not observed. Take my State of North Carolina, or South Carolina, the age limit is 12 for the employment of children. The hours of labor are 11 hours a day for five days in the week, with a short Saturday. I, myself, have seen children under 14 years of age—I do not think they could have been over 13 and, perhaps, not over 12—working 12 hours all night long, and I was informed they did not even stop for a midnight lunch. In other words, North and South Carolina are engaged largely in the spinning of yarns; that manufacture has become a tremendous industry in our section—95 per cent of all yarns spun in either of these two States, or all cloth woven in those States is spun or woven by the work of children under 14 years of age; in a large number of cases under 13 years, and in many cases, from personal observation, under 12 years.

South Carolina has enforced pretty well the age limit of 12 and the 11-hour day. To show you how this thing works: In 1905 we passed a law in North Carolina that no child under 12 years shall be employed; that after 1907 no child under 13 should be employed, except in an apprenticeship capacity. Now, I think any reasonable man would understand that it was meant that after 1907 there should be fewer children than in 1905, but the fact is that as soon as we passed that law every child engaged in the manufacturing of cotton in North Carolina took an "apprenticeship." So we should not have put that exception into the law. Why did that occur? It occurred for this reason, and this is the ruling reason: A certain number of our people wanted to use children in the manufacture of goods. A certain other number of our people, either through ignorance or what they consider to be poverty, feel driven to employ their children.

We have had in my State a great many agents come into the State, into the rural communities, and tell our farm people who were not very successful what a good thing it would be to live near the manufacturing establishments and put their children to work. The result is that thousands of our people have moved to these manufacturing establishments and have been in a measure successful, but a part of their success is based upon the fact that that part of their family between 12 and 14 have been working 11 hours a day in order to bring in the money which they make.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Swift, can you tell us who seem to be the worst offenders as parents in that respect—the colored or the white parents?

Mr. SWIFT. We have no colored factory workers in my State at all; no negroes, so far as I know, except one silk mill. No colored people work in the manufacturing establishments. They are white people.

Mr. MAHER. Are they native white or immigrants?

Mr. SWIFT. Ninety-nine and nine-tenths per cent——

Mr. MAHER (interposing). Are native white?

Mr. SWIFT. Yes, sir; we scarcely have any foreigners down there at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it a fact in the South that the colored children do not work in those mills and the white children do?

Mr. SWIFT. Yes, sir.

Mr. PALMER. Why is it?

Mr. SWIFT. Well, sir, we do not want colored people in our mills. I think it has been tried, but it was not successful.

Mr. MAHER. They prefer to kill white children instead of colored children?

Mr. SWIFT. Well, that is going a little far; but they use the white children.

The CHAIRMAN. That means that the little colored children play around the streets and fields and the white children are at work.

Mr. SWIFT. Yes; it means more than that. I do not want to reflect on the State, but I have seen a great many strong, robust negro children, 12 to 14 years of age, on their way to school, while the white children were working from 6 in the morning until 8 in the evening.

Mr. MAHER. White children?

Mr. SWIFT. Yes, sir; but I must not talk too far, because I have to go back home.

The CHAIRMAN. It is your duty to tell this committee all you can.

Mr. SWIFT. I am doing it as I have seen it. You ask me why that is. I give it to you as my opinion that children in this section of our country—in my section—will not get ample protection within the next 5 and, I think, 10 years unless the Federal Government gives it to them. Having for two years gone hard up against this proposition, I am thoroughly convinced that if you leave it as it is and go there in 5 years you will find plenty of children under 14 years of age at work. We have had this law protecting children up to 12 since 1905. I have seen many violations of it. So far as I now know, there has not been in my State but one prosecution for the employment of a young child. The reason of it is because the manufacturers are influential. They control the thought, and I think they will do it for some time.

There is another point on this. The reason we do not do it is this: North Carolina and South Carolina are adjacent. If in North Carolina we undertook to change the age limit and the hours, we are met with the proposition that South Carolina has not done it, and the people will move across the line, and then when we go to South Carolina and suggest that we change the age limit they say North Carolina will take all our wealth. A law of this kind will solve the problem so that North and South Carolina would be working on a fair basis and fair with every other section of the country. I can not see any way by which it can be done successfully except by the Federal Government, and it will be done wisely that way.

I might go on for hours, Mr. Chairman, but I think I have submitted enough to demonstrate the urgent need of this bureau dedicated, as it is, to the work of safeguarding the children of this Nation.

Who can fix the value of a baby's life? There is not a man within the sound of my voice who would not sacrifice wealth, position, life itself, in order that his offspring might continue to live. If you are willing to pay such a price in order to save your baby, will you hesitate to authorize the expenditure of a few thousand dollars in a work which will result in the saving of thousands of babies? I know what your answer will be. I know the temper of this House. I know it will vote by an emphatic majority to grant the very modest request made by the chief of this bureau. We will have plenty of opportunity to economize. The other day I read in the papers that the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill carried an increase of $750,000, and that this money was needed to build homes for our ambassadors in foreign lands. Let us postpone the erection of these palaces for diplomats until we have taken needed steps to conserve human life.

I trust the gentleman from Iowa will increase the amount provided in his amendment from $50,000 to $139,000. If he does not do so, I will claim the privilege of offering an amendment to strike out the figures "$50,000" in his amendment and substitute the figures "$139,000." I predict with confidence that the membership of this House will approve the change.

The CHAIRMAN. At the proper time the gentleman will be recognized for that purpose.

Mr. KEATING. I yield back the remainder of my time, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado yields back the remainder of his time.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the Chair to notify me when I have used five minutes of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, for this department there was estimated in one item $106,640. In another item there was estimated $58.000. The committee reported out but $25,640.

The difficulty arose by reason of the fact that the language under which the appropriation was estimated was subject to a point of order. The amendment which I have offered is not as complete as I would like to see it, but to make it complete and workable would leave it in a condition where it would be subject to a point of order.

I believe that the amount which I have placed in the amendment I have offered is insufficient to carry on the great work of investigation of the question of infant mortality. Every year there are born in the United States two million two hundred and some odd thousand children. Three hundred thousand of these infants die every year before they attain the age of 1 year. I have here a report showing the death rate of infants in a number of cities, which is very illuminating.

[1] For 1912.

[2] Sixty-ninth Report of Births, Marriages, and Deaths in Massachusetts. These cities were chosen in order that an opportunity might be given to compare the New Zealand rates with cities in the United States in approximately the same population class as the New Zealand cities.

[3] The report of the New York State Department of Health shows a reduction to 10.5 per 100 births in 1912.

I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that right here in Washington fifteen out of every one hundred infants die before they become 1 year old. In Fall River, Mass., the death rate of infants under 1 year is 18 per cent, and in Lowell, Mass., it is 23 per cent. This high death rate of infants is alarming. It should remind this House of its responsibility. If by an increased appropriation to investigate this question of infant mortality we can reduce this high death rate of infants, that appropriation, no matter how large, should be made. The question naturally arises, Can we, by appropriating money for a thorough investigation and for carrying forward this work, reduce this alarming death rate?

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I can not yield; I have not the time. I would like to yield to the gentleman.

In this great work unfortunately we are not pioneers. Similar investigations have been carried on in other countries with wonderful results.

In 1907 there was organized in New Zealand the society for the health of women and children. At that time in Dunedin the death rate of infants under 1 year was almost 9 per cent. By the prosecution of this work in less than six years they reduced the death rate so that last year it was only 3.8 per cent. Think of it. The investigation of the subject and a real forward movement to reduce infant mortality in less than six years resulted in a reduction of the death rate of infants before they attained the age of 1 year in Dunedin, New Zealand, from 9 per cent to 3.8 per cent, and the infant mortality for infants under 1 year was reduced to 5 per cent.

This is a great work. In New Zealand it is a work of education. Likewise it must be a work of education in this country. We know comparatively little in this country with regard to the care of children. The work that has been carried on in New Zealand has been to educate the father and the mother with regard to the care of their offspring. In the United States during the past 10 years there were more deaths of infants under 1 year than from tuberculosis in all forms and at all ages. Out of every 5 deaths in New York State, 1 is that of a baby less than a year old. Of the 16,213 babies that died in 1910 before they reached the age of 1 year, one-third died before they were 1 month old. Most of these babies would have lived had they been given intelligent care and the right kind of food, so the authorities claim. If this is true, why should we delay this investigation? Why delay this campaign of education? For that is what this means. Sir Arthur Newsholme, the great English statistician, has so well stated the case that I quote his words:

> Infant mortality is the most sensitive index we possess of social welfare. If babies were well born and well cared for, their mortality would be negligible. The infant death rate measures the intelligence, health, and right living of fathers and mothers, the standards of morals and sanitation of communities and governments, the efficiency of physicians, nurses, health officers, and educators.

The solution of this great question will solve another problem equally important. While it is important to reduce the death rate of infants it is equally important that the annual new arrivals, numbering more than 2,200,000 that will live, will be healthy and strong children. Without health and strength they can not grow up to become useful men and women.

It is not intended that this appropriation by Congress is the only contribution that will be made to this great work. The great cities, charitable and benevolent organizations, and woman's clubs will contribute far more. But the National Government must lead in this movement, and what can we hope to accomplish in such an undertaking with the paltry sum of $25,640? The estimate of Miss Lathrop, the chief of this great bureau, to carry forward this work for the year is $164,640, or about 50 cents for each infant under 1 year that dies every 12 months. The work in which Miss Lathrop is engaged is too great, the necessity of having her succeed is too important, and the cause of sick infants which her work may save if she is supported is too tremendous for this House to assume the responsibility of reducing her estimate. She is doing a great work, and she is doing it well. Let us give her the money she needs.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] is recognized.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield?

Mr. MURDOCK. I have no time. I am trying to get it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I am yielding a good deal of my time——

Mr. GOOD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK. I thank the gentleman from Iowa for the time yielded to me. Mr. Chairman, it is unbelievable to me that the Committee on Appropriations would set out to block the work of the Children's Bureau. I say that with the full knowledge of the workaday attitude of an Appropriations Committee toward a bureau of the Government. Usually an administrative bureau asks more than it is entitled to, and the Committee on Appropriations, acting within their rights, justly resist it. But this is particularly not true of the Children's Bureau. That bureau is new. Under the law it is authorized to do certain things, and it needs a certain amount of money to do those things. I do not believe there is a man here on either side of the Chamber who, if he understood fully the work the bureau is doing and its part in the betterment of the industrial life of the Nation, would resist these amendments giving the Children's Bureau the amount it asks. I do not believe there is a man here who, if he knew the statistics in the case, would stand out against the bureau.

Out of every 1,000 births in this country, 159 of the children die before they reach the age of 1 year. Out of every thousand only 14 children die between the ages of 1 and 5 years. Wherever a locality or community has a high infant mortality of children under 1 year of age, that community also has a high infant mortality of children between the ages of 1 and 5 years. Therefore, the matter of infant mortality, dealing with the death of infants under 1 year of age, is of the highest importance to the Nation. Some one has said, and said truthfully, that infant mortality is the most sensitive index of social welfare that we have. What is that? Is it simply a pretty phrase? No; it is a fact, and an ugly fact. Last night I took home a Government document dealing with the survey this Government made of conditions in Fall River, Mass., in 1908, in the matter of infant mortality. I want the Members of the House to listen, and to listen solemnly, to some of the records in this document, available to all of us, but read by few. I want to read some cases of women who went back to work a few days after childbirth. Here is case No. 1:

Mother returned to work in mill at two weeks; child died at six months of bronchitis; breast fed exclusively two weeks, then at night, but during day given condensed milk "when baby cried"; bottle "cleaned once or twice every day"; child strong at birth, but weakened by lack of fresh air and improper food; cared for by neighbor. Mother, Syrian.

Here is another case:

Mother returned to work in mill at two weeks; child died at 4½ months of gastroenteritis; not nursed at all, although mother had milk; fed on condensed milk and cow's milk (not bottled); long-tube bottle used, "washed when needed"; "table food" at 4 months; grandmother cared for child in mother's absence; Coderre's Infant's Sirup. Mother, Portuguese.

Here is still another case:

Mother returned to work in mill at three weeks; child died at 5 months of gastroenteritis; child nursed exclusively two weeks; mother's milk then deficient, and child was nursed at night and given Eskay's Food, barley water, and white of egg for 4½ months; began to fail when mixed feeding was given; sick two months; cared for by neighbor in mother's absence. Mother, English.

Here is another case:

Mother returned to housework in boarding house at three weeks; child died at 25 days of infantile debility; not nursed at all, although mother had milk; was boarded out and fed exclusively on condensed milk. Mother, Irish.

These ugly entries and others like them show how intimately infant mortality touches the life of the Nation. An effort by Congress to investigate fully these conditions with a view to correcting them is not a mere sentimental impulse. It is business; it is grave business—the important business of conserving human life.

Gentlemen, how far are you going to let go without thorough and scientific investigation this sort of industrial situation and the domestic conditions it reflects? Why not meet adequately this proposition now? Why not stand for the full amount that the Children's Bureau asks? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK], who has just spoken, has very aptly put the question of the importance of the health of the people of this country. It sometimes seems to me that we give too much attention to matters of commercialism and not enough to the health and social welfare of our people, because no nation can be a strong nation unless its people are a healthy people. And the way to make a healthy person is to begin with the child from birth. In order to have the child grow into a strong, healthy person it must have the right kind of care. The Children's Bureau is endeavoring to investigate and give such information as it is now able to do in order to overcome the ills to which infants are subject. There is an amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] which proposes that this money shall not be spent in the same line of work as is now carried on by the Bureau of Public Health. I believe that is proper and right. We ought not to duplicate this work, and we ought to build up the Public Health Service to look after matters dealing directly with disease.

The vital statistics secured by the Census Office and published once each year give the births and deaths in the United States. The Children's Bureau, presided over by a most intelligent and estimable lady, Miss Lathrop, who has the work of her bureau at heart, has been endeavoring to do the best she could with the help she gets from appropriations to do a valuable work for the people, and I think she ought to be encouraged in this great work she is now doing. I observe by the hearings certain lines of work she is taking up in order to educate the people with reference to the sanitation, care, and attention of infants. The Public Health Service is also issuing bulletins that can be read, not only by doctors but by the public generally, bearing upon the matter of disease and how to prevent it.

I remember a couple of years ago that, with my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN], we had the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce insert in the bill changing the Public Health Service a provision that enabled them to issue these bulletins that the people might read in reference to health and that they are now issuing them, which Members are receiving once each week, and I am sure if they will take the trouble to examine them they will be convinced of their great value.

I want to say as a Member of this House that I take pride in the fact that I have been able to be of some service in bringing about such a provision, and what little help I could give I gave heartily that the people might receive this valuable information.

Any true physician in this country is endeavoring as best he can to stamp out disease, to relieve the people from further dangers of sickness and suffering.

We remember that a few years ago there was sent to Cuba a commission on yellow fever. All the physicians that went there to investigate that disease lost their lives in that investigation, but they did show in the end the cause and the way to prevent yellow fever, and to-day there is not a country in the world that fears yellow fever because they know how to stamp it out.

That is what we need in this country, not only a knowledge of how to cure disease but to prevent it, and that is why we want to educate the people who do not now know these things. When that is done we shall have rendered a valuable service to all the people of the country. I hope that the amendment will be agreed to and that we may do more in this line. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. J. I. NOLAN].

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, on Tuesday I tried to get recognition to introduce some amendments that were prepared by the Children's Bureau and intrusted to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS]. Unfortunately he had to go away on important business and has been detained, and he intrusted the amendments to my care. I find, however, under the ruling of the Chair on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] that the amendments would have been out of order. If in order, they would have given the Children's Bureau $162,640.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of giving the Children's Bureau the money they asked for from the Appropriations Committee, that amount being $162,640, and I shall vote for an amendment giving the bureau that amount, which, in my judgment, is little enough for this very important work. I am not in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina. I believe the Public Health Service and the Children's Bureau perform a purely distinct service for children. I have a brief here that I want to insert in the RECORD after I get through, but I am going to insert an extract to show the difference between the Children's Bureau and the Department of Public Health.

Dr. Cressy L. Wilbur, chief statistician for vital statistics of the Census Bureau, estimates that in this country we lose each year 300,000 infants under 1 year of age. Half of these lives could be saved if methods of infant care already well known to science could be given general application. The infant death rate in New Zealand is less than half the estimated rate of the United States.

Now, here is what I want to call especial attention to:

The Children's Bureau has undertaken an investigation, novel in method, to determine what the social factors are which prevent the benefits of our present stage of civilization from reaching every baby. It is attempting to determine why it is that the baby born in the United States has not the same chances of life and health as the baby born in New Zealand. This is not a medical investigation; it considers the social and economic causes producing the effects doctors are called upon to remedy.

In other words, they are trying to investigate the causes, social and economic, that produce the causes that the department of health is called upon to remedy.

To continue:

Because of the small funds at the disposal of the bureau the investigation thus far has been limited to a single small city—Johnstown, Pa. This experimental investigation has demonstrated the feasibility of the method, and the bureau now asks for 25 field agents and 13 tabulation clerks, with the necessary appropriation for traveling expenses and subsistence, to enable it to investigate typical communities in all parts of the country. This is to be the preliminary survey from which may be devised constructive measures for eliminating conditions causing infant mortality.

The Children's Bureau during the first two fiscal years of its existence has had a staff of 15 persons. Its appropriation for salaries has been $25,640 per annum. In addition to this, it has had no moneys except two small allotments from departmental funds, one for printing and the other for contingent expenses. Its budget, all told, has been less than $35,000 a year.

With such a small appropriation it was impossible for the bureau to cover the wide field prescribed for it by Congress, and it decided to concentrate on the most pressing problem in the promotion of the welfare of the children of this country, the problem of giving every child the foundation for a successful life—health. Everything else is secondary, health is fundamental; and health, in the broad, full meaning of the word, has economic and social aspects, some of which are of more far-reaching importance than its medical phases.

Dr. Cressy L. Wilbur, chief statistician of vital statistics of the Census Bureau, estimates that in this country we lose each year 300,000 infants under 1 year of age. Half of these lives could be saved if methods of infant care already well known to science could be given general application. The infant death rate in New Zealand is less than half the estimated rate of the United States. The Children's Bureau has undertaken an investigation, novel in method, to determine what the social factors are which prevent the benefits of our present stage of civilization from reaching every baby. It is attempting to determine why it is that the baby born in the United States has not the same chances of life and health as the baby born in New Zealand. This is not a medical investigation; it considers the social and economic causes producing the effects doctors are called upon to remedy.

Because of the small funds at the disposal of the bureau the investigation thus far has been limited to a single small city, Johnstown, Pa. This experimental investigation has demonstrated the feasibility of the method, and the bureau now asks for 25 field agents and 13 tabulation clerks, with the necessary appropriation for traveling expenses and subsistence, to enable it to investigate typical communities in all parts of the country. This is to be the preliminary survey from which may be devised constructive measures for eliminating conditions causing infant mortality.

Statistics have already demonstrated that many babies die from causes which were at work during the prenatal period. Many of these deaths can be prevented if the mother knows and applies the simple rules of hygiene applicable in such cases. The Children's Bureau has, therefore, brought together these rules in a simply written little pamphlet that costs the Government a few cents a copy. It has proved immensely popular. Already nearly 30,000 have been distributed to individual mothers who have written for it. Because of the bureau's small appropriation for printing it has had to adopt strict rules against sending this pamphlet in large quantites even where it knows that it would be wisely distributed. City departments of health and child hygiene, hospitals, dispensaries, visiting nurses' associations, infant welfare stations, settlements, and charity organizations, not to mention many individual doctors, nurses, and Members of Congress, have written for it in quantities. These requests have had to be generally refused. Thousands more could have been distributed if the Government had been as liberal with this pamphlet for the prospective mother as it has been with the pamphlet for the farmer on the diseases of the horse.

This is the first in a care of children series. The bureau proposes to issue others, but the work is delayed. The bureau is hampered by the lack of ordinary clerical and stenographic assistance. Franks for 30,000 of these pamphlets have had to be written, not to mention the thousands of letters necessary when the correspondent asks the bureau some question which can not be met by merely writing a frank for a publication. This correspondence is growing in magnitude as knowledge of the bureau spreads. Just after the Outlook and the Independent printed favorable editorials on the bureau's pamphlet on Prenatal Care the office was so swamped with requests that it was weeks before the available clerks could catch up with the mail, and a similar situation is likely to arise when the bureau issues its next popular pamphlet. When it had only one pamphlet it was swamped. What will happen to it when it has several, unless Congress provides a sufficient force to handle the work?

Already its research work has been delayed by the growing pressure of routine clerical work incidental to its mere existence as a Government bureau. At the very outset the bureau began to gather together existing material on the subjects which it is directed by law to investigate. A foundation was laid for a library of current literature regarding children, and a statistical handbook to contain in brief compass the available Federal statistics of children was started. The library is seriously crippled for lack of assistance, and only one of the five parts of the handbook has been issued thus far. Five tabulating clerks are asked, so that this foundational statistical survey may be pushed to completion.

The Commission on Industrial Relations has turned to the Children's Bureau for assistance in its child-labor work, and effective cooperation has been established. The bureau is now studying the methods employed in supervising the passage of the child from school into industry. It has made a thorough compilation of the child-labor laws of the several States, which it will send to the printer at the close of the present sessions of the State legislatures, and it is planning to bring together in a brief pamphlet the existing statistical data on the subject. Its correspondence discloses an insistent popular demand for such information. In the estimates the establishment of a special division is asked to undertake this work. Unless provision is made for it the work will have to be curtailed.

Mothers' pension laws have come upon us with a rush. Already 28 States have adopted such laws. The Children's Bureau has in press a compilation of these laws with a description of the systems prevailing in Denmark and New Zealand. Careful investigation is necessary to see how this new system works in the different States. Reports should be made so that each State may profit from the experience of her sister States. A similar service should be performed in the case of the juvenile courts. Some cities have a juvenile court which is a juvenile court in name only. In practice it is a police court. Others have a real juvenile court with an equity procedure and an adequate force of probation officers. What is being done for the juvenile delinquent in the smaller cities and in rural districts? The bureau wishes to establish a social-service division to lay the foundation for investigation of this character.

The chief of the bureau, in her annual report, presented an outline of a proposed form of organization, showing in detail precisely how she proposed to use the force she asked for:

The Children's Bureau should be encouraged, and it should be done right now; and there is only one way to do it, and that is to give it sufficient funds to proceed with and expand the very good work that has been started in Johnstown, Pa. The amount asked for by the bureau will be used in a way that will reflect credit on those who vote for this amendment of $139,000.

The amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] will only tend to create friction between the Bureau of Public Health and the Children's Bureau, and should be defeated, so as to leave the bureau free to carry on its good work and save to this country hundreds of thousands of babies that are lost through neglect in the United States every year.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. LONERGAN].

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the appropriation contained in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa. I have a letter here from a constituent that I would like to have the Clerk read in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SOUTH MANCHESTER, CONN., April 14, 1914.

Hon. AUGUSTINE LONERGAN,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. LONERGAN: The Appropriations Committee of the House has recommended that the appropriation for the Children's Bureau be $25,000 instead of $165,000, as asked by Miss Lathrop, the chief of the bureau. I write to ask your help in securing the full appropriation so urgently needed to carry on the work of the bureau.

My brothers are members of the firm of Cheney Bros., silk manufacturers. I am in close touch with the work of the factory nurse, with the department which employs children over 15 years of age, having for several years passed on all such children employed. I know our public schools and the work of a local child-welfare league. In all these ways I know from actual experience, which combines in a way the point of view of the manufacturer with that of the social worker, how necessary the Children's Bureau is and how greatly all forms of social work for children requires the carefully collected and well-presented information which it is beginning to disseminate. It has already furnished us with an excellent monograph on prenatal care, which I use in connection with a mothers' club. But if it were able to even begin to cover the work outlined in the admirable first report of the chief, manufacturers, merchants, and school men alike could turn to it for the information they now lack. The work of the Children's Bureau should not be crippled by such an inadequate appropriation. We are unusually fortunate in having the bureau under its present chief, who is better equipped to develop it on useful lines than probably anyone else in the country.

Will you give this matter your consideration?

Sincerely, yours,

MISS MARJORY CHENEY.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDER].

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I am very much in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], who, with me, represented the minority on the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations which had charge of the drafting of this bill. His amendment provides for the appropriation of $139,000 for the investigation of the questions of infant mortality and dangerous occupations of children, and if the amendment is agreed to, it will place this money in the control of the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor. The bill as reported from the Appropriations Committee carried with it an appropriation of $25,640. The effect of this amendment will be to give Miss Lathrop, in charge of the bureau, the amount asked for in her estimates, the sum of $164,640.

I dislike very much to differ with my colleagues on the Appropriations Committee in this matter. Congress appropriates millions of dollars in protecting the lives of animals and over $200,000,000 each year for the Army and Navy, and it can not very well afford to have it go out to the country that we are only willing to appropriate a little over $25,000 for the support of the Children's Bureau. Gentlemen may maintain that the matter of protection of children is a function that the States and their subdivisions should look after. The city of New York, which I represent in part, has given great attention to this subject. In that State the child is forbidden to work before reaching the age of 14 and after that has to have a certificate from the board of health certifying the child's ability to perform manual labor. In our board of health a bureau is maintained to look after the children. Numerous societies also give attention to the matter of child welfare. There are, however, many communities in the Nation where no attention whatever is given by the authorities to this important subject, and it is these communities that should be aroused to their responsibilities. Sporadic investigations, while producing a little light on the subject, are not productive of lasting effects. It is the intention of the Children's Bureau to make a thorough investigation in the communities where child welfare receives no attention, to investigate the causes of infant mortality, and also look into the question of various industries in which child labor is employed.

It has been stated that every year in the United States over 2,000,000 children are born, and of this number approximately 300,000 die every year before reaching the age of 1 year. Is this not an appalling condition of affairs? The majority of these deaths can be traced to ignorance and negligence, and these two conditions we should attempt to abolish just as much as we are striving to abolish crime and diseases of all characters. The old saying "everybody's business is nobody's business" is certainly true in the matter of child welfare. When the establishment of the Children's Bureau was first talked about, its necessity was clearly demonstrated and eventually a law was passed authorizing its organization. Since its establishment it has done a wonderful work with the small means at its command. This question of child welfare is now our business and it behooves us to give it proper attention. The work of this bureau tends toward making better and healthier future citizens.

When Miss Lathrop appeared before the Committee on Appropriations she outlined the scope of the work she desired her bureau to take up, and, in my judgment, made an excellent case.

This work should not be hampered by lack of funds and ought to receive the enthusiastic support of every Member of this House.

I earnestly hope the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] will receive favorable consideration.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD].

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I heartily approve of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] as supplementary to the amount allowed by the Committee on Appropriations. I hope that any of us who favor this amendment on this side of the aisle under the conditions in existence in the Children's Bureau will not be accused by anybody of any unholy alliance with the "looters of the Treasury." This bureau can do more good for the amount expended than any other bureau in any department of this Government. It is stated authoritatively that out of 300,000 infants born in the United States annually 150,000 little souls enter into eternity within the age of 1 year because of preventable disease. If those 150,000 infants are not worth the effort and expenditure of the small sum asked for the maintenance of this bureau, then none of our appropriations are worthy of consideration.

Mr. POU. About $1 apiece.

Mr. HOWARD. Just about a dollar apiece, as suggested by my good friend from North Carolina.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Does the gentleman suppose that this appropriation is going to save that number of children?

Mr. HOWARD. No; it may not save them all. The hope is that this bureau can reach the wage-earning mothers of the country, who have not been properly taught to care for their infants. Probably it may make suggestions about the prevention of infantile paralysis, which takes off thousands of these little children. Its functions do not overlap and do not abrogate any power that the Public Health Bureau has. This does not hinder the Public Health Bureau in its work in investigation of the causes of hookworm and pellagra in the South, or the treatment of those diseases. This goes out into the homes of the humble workers of the country and teaches the mothers who have to earn their livelihood and support of their little children by the sweat of their faces how to care for those children, and if there ever was a country on earth that is poverty-stricken, so far as vital statistics are concerned, it is the United States of America. On vital statistics of the social conditions in the United States we are far behind any civilized country on earth, and this bureau will do one good that I know has not been suggested here so far during this debate. That is this: If any social conditions exist in this country in the States where the Federal Government seeks to enter, of course with the permission of the State, the probability is that the very presence of the Federal Government will stir those States, from the standpoint of pride, to remedy any conditions they might fear would be exposed by the bureau and criticized by the world. [Applause.] That is one good that it will do, and that good will overshadow the meager appropriation asked for by the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. Chairman, there are a great many ramifications in this particular bureau that can not be discussed within this time of the good that it can do. I do not know what statements were made at the beginning when this bureau was provided for. I happened to have the honor of being present when it was being considered. It had my hearty approval from the moment it was introduced until it was finally passed. Without any reflection on the great Committee on Appropriations, because I believe every one of them is trying to do his plain duty, I think probably they take into consideration certain statements made on the floor of this House at the time of the passage of the bill providing for the bureau as binding on the future administration of affairs in the Department of Labor, and they want to say now, because two years ago certain appropriations were asked for, that the Children's Bureau ought not, at this time, to ask for an increased amount. I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa will be agreed to, so this bureau will not be hampered in the beneficent work it is so efficiently doing and which will redound to the betterment of conditions of thousands of innocent little babes yet unborn.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE].

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, in supporting the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa and also voting for the increase in the appropriation for conciliation, I intend no reflection upon the members of the Committee on Appropriations. I realize something from past experience, as a member of the appropriations committee in another legislative body, of the trying duties of members of the Committee on Appropriations, and I am satisfied these gentlemen have not been endeavoring to obtain the designation of "watchdog of the Treasury," which, by the way, is no mean distinction when placed upon a man by his constituents. But there are some cases where the committee, in an endeavor to keep within the law, cuts appropriations to a point where the work intended to be accomplished can not not be carried out, and, in my judgment, these are two of those cases. The work of conciliation in industrial disputes and the saving of children's lives in our country are two of the great problems of the day; and, in my judgment, of all the many achievements of the great leader of the Progressive Party, Theodore Roosevelt, while President of the United States—the Panama Canal, the settlement of the Russian-Japanese War, and many other things—the greatest was in bringing about, by conciliation, a settlement of the great coal strike in this country. [Applause.] In that he was doing something for Americans, for his own people; and in behalf of Miss Lathrop, a woman whom I have known for many years in Illinois, and with whose work I am well acquainted, I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa will be agreed to. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox].

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I think it was three years ago the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] proposed an amendment to a bill to extend the scope of the work of the Public Health Service. For some reason I opposed the amendment; I suppose it was due to lack of knowledge and information on my part at the time. Subsequent events in the history of my little family have taught me that never again while a Member of this House will I oppose any reasonable appropriation made in the interest of public health which undertakes to solve the problem of life and death. The amendment proposes to increase this appropriation from $25,560 to $50,560. I am heartily in favor of this amendment; in my mind no valid, sound, and legitimate argument based upon the grounds of economy or otherwise can be successfully made against this proposed amendment. We are confronted to-day in the United States with the stupendous if not appalling fact that each year there are born in the United States 300,000 children who die before reaching the age of 1 year. It is conceded and confessed by medical and scientific men that one-half of this vast army of little souls which die each year could be saved if the people knew more about how to treat and handle children, and if this increased appropriation saves but one little life it will be the best money the Government ever appropriated in its history.

The babies and the children constitute the real wealth of any nation; our wealth is not and should not be measured in dollars and cents; this is a false measuring rod; but it should be measured by a strong, healthy, virile, fighting race of people; and a child born into the world has a perfect right to life, and if through blind, stupid ignorance we are losing no less than 150,000 children each year, if a solution of this problem can be had at any cost, as representatives of the fathers and mothers who lose these children, it is our duty to give them aid and assistance in the way of giving them a sufficient amount of money to solve this problem.

I believe the Children's Bureau is the greatest bureau in this Republic; nothing equals it in importance; nothing appeals to our homes and our families as the Children's Bureau. I have been and am a rigid economist, but I am not "pound foolish and penny wise," and I believe that an ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure, and if the Children's Bureau can by a scientific investigation and research prevent this enormous death rate, it is money better spent than can be spent for any other purpose or any other governmental function. The other day an appropriation went through this House carrying $600,000 to stamp out hog cholera and dourine, a disease of horses; an appropriation in the Agricultural bill of $400,000 to stamp out the ravages of the boll weevil of the South, and $250,000 more to destroy the cattle tick of the South, all of these appropriations being justifiable on the ground that the money thus expended tended to conserve our material resources, thereby adding to the Nation's wealth, and if this was justifiable on this ground, is it not much more justifiable on our part that we give to the Children's Bureau such sums of money as they can legitimately use during the next ensuing fiscal year that will aid the mothers in taking care of their young children?

The Agricultural Department estimated that it needed $90,000 for the ensuing year to protect the migratory birds, and the Committee on Agriculture gave this department $50,000 for this purpose. The life of one babe is worth all the migratory birds that ever sailed the air from the Lakes to the Gulf or from ocean to ocean.

The Children's Bureau should have a large sum of money for printing, to the end that the mothers of this country might be furnished with free literature giving the mothers of the land advice and information as to how to care for the children. There are now 530 farm bulletins for distribution, treating on almost every conceivable subject on the farm, from the raising of grain and vegetables to the handling and care of live stock, and there is placed to our credit each year for distribution no less than 20,000 of these farm bulletins, and yet not a dollar is carried in this bill for printing bulletins which ought to be distributed and disseminated by the bureau to mothers of the Nation. I hope public sentiment throughout the Nation will get behind this bureau, and that every mother interested in the welfare of her children will make a direct and earnest appeal to Members of Congress to see to it that this bureau is well provided with the sinews of war—money to enable it to do this splendid work.

Mr. Chairman, two years ago I saw this House vote down a proposition wherein it was proposed, by what is known as the Rockefeller Endowment Fund, to give to the Government of the United States the annual income on $100,000,000, and every dollar of this income was to go to the scientific study and treatment of diseases and the uplifting of mankind, with a free dissemination of this information to the public. Why Congress refused to accept it is more than I can understand, unless it was solely on the ground that it bore the name of Rockefeller; yet the only thing that was asked for in the bill was that Congress grant articles of incorporation to the Rockefeller Endowment Fund forever thereafter, giving to Congress complete and absolute control over the corporation, to the extent that in the event the directors failed to carry out the provisions of the articles of incorporation Congress had complete power to then and there repeal it. It further provided that the principal should never exceed $100,000,000 and that the income had to be expended each year in the scientific investigation, study, treatment, and so forth, of diseases. Never before was such a proposition made to any civilized government on the face of the earth.

Congress accepted the Smithsonian fund, amounting to, I believe, $500,000, but the Nation to-day is paying 6 per cent interest on that fund. While it has done a great deal of good, and I think the people are getting back in return, from an educational viewpoint, the amount of money that they are required to pay each year as interest on the fund, yet the Rockefeller endowment fund did not propose to cost the people of this country one penny, but on the contrary proposed to give to the people, free of charge, no less than $6,000,000 per year, every dollar of which was to be expended in aiding, helping, and uplifting the people, free of charge to them, and that information gained by the scientists employed by this fund should be disseminated free of charge to the people. Think of what $6,000,000 per year could do in scientifically investigating and studying the problems of human life to-day. With this fund at their disposal, if they could hire scientists who would develop a specific treatment against many of the children's diseases, I doubt very much whether the mothers of the Nation would care whether it came from Rockefeller or any other source. What the mothers are crying for is help, aid, and assistance, not caring very much who its donor might be, whether it be a generous Government or philanthropic benefactors. It is results they want. In my judgment, Congress made a fatal mistake in refusing to accept this tremendous endowment fund. I took this question up with the Hon. Jerome D. Greene, trustee of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research and member of the general education board, and on the 17th of January, 1913, received a letter from him, together with an itemized statement and memoranda showing the total amount of contributions made by the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research and the institutions to which the donations were made, together with memoranda outlining its general scope of work, which I insert in the RECORD and make a part of my remarks:

THE ROCKEFELLER SANITARY COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., January 17, 1913.

Hon. WILLIAM E. COX,
Chairman Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter of January 16 relating to H. R. 21532, the bill for the incorporation of the Rockefeller Foundation, and I am deeply grateful to you for this evidence of your desire to be accurately informed before making up your mind on the subject.

The following are the directions in which Mr. Rockefeller's money has been given in the past:

(1) General education board: To this board Mr. Rockefeller has given about $50,000,000, of which about $30,000,000 is now retained as endowment, the balance having been distributed among various institutions. The two chief objects for which the board has given money are for higher education and for farm demonstration work in the South.

(2) Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research: This is located in New York City and has received a little over $9,000,000 from Mr. Rockefeller, of which nearly $8,000,000 is retained as endowment. The institute has the best-equipped laboratories and research hospital in the world and is concentrating its resources on the problems of cancer, pneumonia, infantile paralysis, scarlet fever, and other diseases the cause or treatment of which are not yet understood. Among the most important results thus far achieved may be mentioned the serum treatment of epidemic meningitis, which has changed a death rate of 75 per cent to 25 per cent, the survivors now being wholly cured instead of being left imbecile or crippled as formerly; a cure for tetanus or lockjaw; a method of operating on blood vessels which has made possible the saving of many lives by transfusing blood from a well person to one afflicted with anemia or who has nearly bled to death from injury; the discovery that infantile paralysis is infectious, thus leading to effective measures to prevent the spread of the disease. Who shall say that any one of these discoveries alone would not justify ten times the amount given to the Rockefeller Institute? All these results have been achieved in less than 10 years.

(3) The Rockefeller sanitary commission for the eradication of the hook-worm disease: To this cause Mr. Rockefeller has given the sum of $1,000,000, nearly all of which has now been expended in the Southern States during the last three years. The work has been carried on exclusively through State agencies and with the cooperation of local physicians, and has been partly remedial, about 400,000 persons having been examined with a view to treatment, and a large proportion of these cured or relieved, and partly educational, millions of persons having been taught the hygienic and sanitary precautions which prevent infection. Incidentally this work has permanently improved the local health organizations, thus reaching far beyond the immediate field of hook-worm infection.

(4) Private benefactions: These are numerous and large, but I have no estimate of their amount. It probably equals or exceeds the total of the three categories above mentioned.

The characteristic of Mr. Rockefeller's benefactions is that they have been the means of stimulating rather than replacing self-help and self-reliance. The promotion of improved methods of corn and cotton growing in the South by the general education board has not been by flooding the agricultural communities with money they have not earned as a substitute for local enterprise, but by showing through a few farms here and there, with a moderate expenditure for instruction and demonstration, how a hundred neighboring farms could, with their own labor, double or quadruple their products. The endowment of education through schools, colleges, and universities has stimulated the sense of local responsibility instead of destroying it, as is graphically indicated by the fact that for about seven and a half millions of dollars, contributed through the general education board to institutions of learning in all parts of the country since 1905, about $38,000,000 has been raised by these institutions in fulfillment of the board's conditions. The sending of a single physician to Texas about a year ago by the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research has resulted in the effective instruction of the public health authorities and many private physicians in that State once for all as to the method of dealing with a virulent outbreak of epidemic cerebrospinal meningitis.

The question how the Rockefeller Foundation is to spend its money is a legitimate one for the public to ask before the charter is granted, especially in the light of ignorant forebodings lest a large sum of money might seek the protection of a charter for private rather than for public ends. This question is answered, first, by the unequivocal language of the charter, pledging the use of the money exclusively for charitable and humanitarian purposes, subject to the control of Congress, and, secondly, by the concrete illustration of how these same resources have been used while under private control through the general education board, the sanitary commission for the eradication of the hookworm disease, and the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research. It may be confidently expected that far-reaching measures for the promotion of public health along both educational and medical lines will have the first attention of the trustees.

Very truly, yours,

JEROME D. GREENE,
Trustee of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research and Member of the General Education Board.

MAY 24, 1912.

MEMORANDUM.

The General Education Board has three main lines of work:

1. The promotion of practical farming in the Southern States;
2. The development of a system of public high schools in the Southern States;
3. The promotion of higher education throughout the United States; and
4. The promotion of selected schools for negroes.

1. THE PROMOTION OF PRACTICAL FARMING IN THE SOUTHERN STATES.

For the first three years of its existence the board, through its representatives, made a careful study of public education in the Southern States. As a result of this study it reached the conclusion that the greatest present need of that part of our country is the increased productive efficiency of rural life. Eighty-five per cent of the people of the Southern States live in the country and by farming.

Careful inquiry was therefore made in the United States and in other countries regarding methods of delivering to farmers the practical agricultural knowledge that has been developed by National and State Departments of Agriculture, experimental farms, etc. In the course of this inquiry the representatives of the board met Dr. Seaman A. Knapp, who by demonstration farms was successfully combating the boll weevil in Texas and Louisiana. It was the opinion of the board that the demonstration farm methods of Dr. Knapp could be employed successfully in promoting general agriculture as well as in combating the specific enemy of the cotton industry. A conference was therefore had with Secretary Wilson, of the United States Department of Agriculture, who agreed that Dr. Knapp, who was a special representative of the Department of Agriculture, might supervise the work in other States than Texas and Louisiana, provided funds for that purpose might be secured. The General Education Board, through the Department of Agriculture, under the above agreement, beginning in the early part of 1906, has made contributions for this purpose now aggregating $659,700. For the fiscal year 1912–13 the appropriation was $133,000. Since the death of Dr. Knapp, his son, Bradford Knapp, has been in charge of the work.

The latest report from Mr. Knapp shows that in the States thus aided by the general education board, 236 men are at work supervising the demonstration farms and 23,301 farmers are pursuing improved agricultural methods under such direction. He further estimates that 187,680 farmers are pursuing similar work as influenced by those farmers who are under the immediate supervision of the agents. This work has attracted the favorable attention of the Farmers' Union of the Southern States, of agricultural colleges, public-school authorities, and the public press. Under the auspices of Mr. Knapp special State agents have been appointed in the several Southern States, who are conducting demonstration work among the boys of the public schools. Approximately 20,000 of boys, from 12 years of age and up, under the general designation of boys' corn clubs, are "learning by doing"; that is, instead of studying textbooks on agriculture they are performing practical agricultural demonstration on their fathers' farms and are making these experiments the basis of agricultural study in the schools. In his latest communications to our office Mr. Knapp says that the work is developing in importance and value far beyond his most sanguine expectations.

In 1910 girls' clubs were organized in South Carolina and Virginia. The objects of the girls' demonstration work are:

1. To stimulate interest and wholesome cooperation among members of the family in the home.

2. To provide some means by which the girls may earn money at home and at the same time get the education and viewpoint necessary for the ideal farm life

3. To encourage rural families to provide purer and better food at a lower cost and to utilize the surplus and otherwise waste products of the garden and orchard.

4. To furnish earnest teachers a plan for aiding their pupils and helping their communities.

The first year 325 girls were enrolled. In 1912, 23,550 girls in 14 Southern States were enrolled in what are called girls' canning and poultry clubs.

2. THE PROMOTION OF PUBLIC HIGH SCHOOLS.

The general study of educational conditions in the Southern States led the board to believe that the greatest lack in that region and, therefore, the greatest need was of public high schools. It is the policy of the board to do this work through existing organizations. Arrangement was therefore made with the several State universities in the Southern States whereby such universities could assume the leadership and direction of a movement designed to develop systems of high schools. Appropriations have been made by the general education board to the State universities in the following States: Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Kentucky, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, West Virginia, and Virginia.

The General Education Board appropriates to each university a sum sufficient to pay the salary and traveling expenses of a special high-school representative. This man, representing the university and the State department of education, goes to counties throughout the State, arouses and organizes public sentiment favorable to high schools, and secures the establishment and maintenance of public high schools. In the following States we are able to give exact figures. The following high schools have been established:

Alabama	93
Arkansas	30
Florida	15
Georgia	72
Louisiana	34
Mississippi	51
North Carolina	207
South Carolina	94
Tennessee	43
Virginia	258
West Virginia	15

As a result of this cooperative initiative on the part of the General Education Board, 912 new high schools have been established and $9,306,580 have been raised by the people for buildings and equipment, and the annual sum available for the support of public high schools has been increased $1,332,667.

Of this work, President Eliot, who has recently made a journey through the Southern States, has said: "It is the most valuable piece of constructive educational work now going on in the United States."

3. THE PROMOTION OF INSTITUTIONS OF HIGHER LEARNING.

The General Education Board uniformly makes its gifts for endowment. Colleges throughout the country decide how much money they wish to raise at a given time. Application is made to the General Education Board. A careful study of the institution is made, covering both its financial and educational strength. It is studied not only as a particular institution of learning, but in its relation to higher education generally in a particular State. Then to approved institutions the board makes contributions toward the total sums which they themselves have decided to raise. These contributions are made to the trustees of the several institutions, and the General Education Board exercises no supervision or control in any case after the money has been paid. It first decides that the institution is worthy of aid, and then makes its gifts without recourse. It is the conviction of the members of the board that they ought not to assume any supervision or control of the educational work in colleges.

Conditional appropriations by the board for higher education have been made as follows:

In the Southern States	$2,877,500
In the Western States	3,500,000
In the Eastern and Middle States	2,440,000
	8,817,500

These gifts on the part of the General Education Board are toward an approximate total of $41,020,500, which total sum represents the increase of educational endowment and equipment largely made possible by the contributions of the General Education Board.

4. SCHOOLS FOR NEGROES.

The board since its organization has contributed $620,105 to schools for negroes. The greater part of this contribution has been made to schools which train teachers. Contributions have also been made to schools founded and maintained by negroes where such schools have had connection with organizations that afford supervision and audit.

The board is also meeting the expenses of two rural school supervisors whose work is conducted in connection with the State department of education in the development of better school, economic, and social conditions in rural sections.

In this connection it should be said that negro farmers have shared fully in the cooperative demonstration work supported by the board under the supervision of Mr. Knapp.

CONCLUSION.

It should be noted that it is the policy of the General Education Board to work through existing institutions and agencies and not to undertake independent educational work.

The contributions for agricultural demonstration work are expended under the supervision of the United States Department of Agriculture, which through its accredited representatives has entire control of such expenditures. Payments are made by the General Education Board for this work on vouchers certified by representatives of the Department of Agriculture.

It seeks to promote public high schools, not by sending its own agents into the several States to do this work but by enabling State universities and State departments of education to do the work. Here again the direction and supervision of the work is entirely in the hands of the accredited representatives of the States.

Its contributions to colleges are not for specific departments in colleges or universities nor for particular kinds of education. The contributions are made to the trustees of the colleges who have full power to direct the expenditure thereof. The only promise required by the board in making its gifts is that the money which it gives shall be invested and preserved inviolable for the endowment of the college or university.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa will become a part of the law of the land, and if this is not sufficient I stand ready to vote every dollar that might be necessary to thoroughly equip and arm this bureau, the savior of the children, the friend of the mothers of the land—the Childrens' Bureau. I would even go further if necessary and vote to establish a department of health and make it one of the great departments of this Government.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? There is no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON].

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I will use that minute to give notice that I intend to offer a substitute at the conclusion of the general debate which will broaden and repeat or add to the original bill, and will raise the amount of money to be carried. I wish to add that the question of insuring the protection of the offspring, the evolutionary principle of a nation improving from generation to generation, is even more fundamental than that of self-preservation. Nature regards the improvement of the species as of even a higher order of importance than that of the preservation of the lives of individuals or of a generation, so that there can be no question of greater importance than this question that deals with the rising generation and the generations of the future.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GALLAGHER].

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Chairman, I hope that this Congress will not refuse to give this bureau a sufficient amount of money to carry on the work contemplated by it. I rather favor the amendment that is proposed by Mr. KEATING, because I do not believe that $50,000 is a sufficient amount of money for this work. Now, I have known Miss Lathrop for a great many years, and, in my opinion, no woman in this broad land could be selected to carry on the important work of this bureau and get better results than I am sure Miss Lathrop accomplishes; and I make the declaration advisedly because her whole life has been dedicated to the study of the problems of child life. I have had several communications from the Hull House in Chicago, which is universally recognized as a powerful influence for the uplifting of humanity, and which is located in my district, asking me to use my influence in aiding this important branch of the Government. Now, I have no fear that there will be any conflict in this field of activity between the Bureau of Public Health and the Bureau of Education. The law clearly defines the functions and purposes of each bureau, and no conflict is possible. There is ample opportunity for them all to work. As I understand it, they are now contemplating, by the Children's Bureau, a study of conditions affecting feeble-minded children in this country. The conditions surrounding the feeble-minded children of this country can be more effectively dealt with in many respects by this bureau, working under Federal authority, than by any of the agencies known to existing law. And when we realize this, when we thoroughly understand the great good to humanity that this bureau can accomplish, we should not hesitate to deal generously with it in making appropriations for its support and maintenance.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Might I ask for information: By unanimous consent ought not all of these amendments be offered and read before the debate closes? I have not heard a single amendment read.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GARNER). They can not be offered except in the time of some gentleman who is speaking.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Could they be read for information?

The CHAIRMAN. Of course if they are offered, they could be read in the time of the gentleman who has the floor at the time.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE].

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to enter into a discussion of the merits or demerits of the appropriation that is asked for by the amendment, but rather to resent the criticism, somewhat veiled, yet apparent, that is aimed at the Committee on Appropriations in regard to this appropriation. It has been freely said in the public press and, I understand, upon the floor, that the Appropriations Committee, in reporting upon this item, had cut the appropriation for the Children's Bureau from $165,000 to $25,000. This statement is not true, and the Committee on Appropriations, in bringing in this item in the bill appropriating for the Children's Bureau, has endeavored to live up to the law as it was written upon the statute books, and that that is the law has certainly been verified by the ruling of the present Chairman of this committee on the amendment directly increasing the appropriation for the force employed in the Children's Bureau.

Now, the amendment that is offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] in a lump-sum appropriation avoids the point of order, but brings back into the House the most vicious form of appropriation, that of appropriating in a lump sum, so that Congress loses absolutely the control as to its expenditures. And, for one, if this appropriation is to be increased, I think it would be vastly better if it were made in detail to the employees and the work that should be done, and this is said without the slightest reflection upon the estimable lady who is at the head of the bureau. It has been the policy of Congress not to appropriate any lump sum for any purpose where it could be avoided, nor do I think it fair that the Committee on Appropriations should be placed in the attitude of antagonism to the health of the children of this country. That is not true, for they were among the Members of this House who voted for the establishment of this bureau and heartily favored its establishment, but we have stood for the law as it was written in bringing in this item at this time.

Now, Mr. Chairman, so far as the work of the bureau is concerned, I think an investigation upon the part of any Member of this House will clearly demonstrate that the bureau, along with every other new one that is created in any department of this Government, goes to work by duplicating the work already done by some other bureau. And we are appropriating money for the Department of the Census for the gathering of statistics; we are appropriating money for the Health Bureau for the issuing of bulletins as to the public health and as to the prevention of sickness; and this is a duplication in large part of the work which they are doing. I know, Mr. Chairman, we can not stand in the way of an appropriation asked for in the name of the children of America——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, for 12 years to my personal knowledge the believers in the humanitarian principle of conservation of the lives of children have been struggling to have a national bureau established that would in some manner, at least, remedy the existing ills prevailing throughout the country. Two years ago we passed a broad act vesting such authority in a children's bureau, but those two years have been years of organization, and when the time comes that this bureau, headed by a woman of estimable administrative force, wishes to carry out the functions which Congress laid down we are met with the cry of economy. But it is false economy; yea, more; it is suicidal economy.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] has just said that it is not the policy to make lump-sum appropriations. I cite to him the instance, when we created the Bureau of Naturalization, that upon the suggestion of his own committee hundreds of thousands of dollars, without any limitation whatsoever, were voted to that bureau to provide for its organization. And now when the small sum of $50,000 is asked for we are met with the cry that it would be against the best interests of the Government to grant this without some limitation. There are other functions besides child mortality with which this bureau is invested. Read the act creating this bureau and you will find that there are many other avenues of investigation which this bureau should properly follow, but because of not having funds at its disposal it is hampered in its work. Fifty thousand dollars is a mere bagatelle. You vote hundreds of thousands of dollars—yes, millions of dollars—to investigate hog cholera and diseases of cattle, and this House goes wild because the farmers' votes are back of it; but when you find poor children are involved, on which the very life of the country is dependent, you say it is extravagant expenditure. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. How many speeches has the gentleman?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, I have several. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, the child-welfare problem is a national problem. It is of immediate and supreme importance in every community throughout the land. It has become a world-wide problem. A movement has been instituted and an organization effected in Europe to establish an international bureau of child welfare. Not only in this country but in all civilized countries State, municipal, philanthropic, or charitable organizations are devoting time and effort to this great work.

In our own country organized effort may be said to have commenced in 1904 by the formation of the National Child Labor Committee. Its primary work was directed to secure laws protecting children from premature employment, especially in mills and factories. The general Federation of Women's Clubs several years ago organized systematic work which was carried on by over 2,000 clubs, representing nearly every State in the Union. Over $70,000 was spent in New York in one year by child-welfare associations. The National Child Welfare Committee has been especially active and effective in the work. Other voluntary organizations, and especially the Russell Sage Foundation, have done good work.

Under this stimulus State commissions and bureaus have been established by law in many of the States. In 1912 the Children's Bureau was created by Congress as a bureau in the Department of Commerce and Labor.

The intended scope of the work of the Children's Bureau, as stated in the terms of the act, is as follows:

> The said bureau shall investigate and report to said department upon all matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life among all classes of our people, and shall especially investigate the questions of infant mortality, the birth rate, orphanage, juvenile courts, desertion, dangerous occupations, accidents and diseases of children, employment, and legislation affecting children in the several States and Territories.

Not only in general terms is the entire range of child-welfare work given to the bureau, but the principal activities at present demanding attention are particularly specified. The authority of the bureau is not only comprehensive, but Congress, by specific mandate, directs the bureau to do particular things which it names.

Upon the organization of the bureau Miss Julia C. Lathrop was made its chief. A more appropriate selection could not have been made. Both by personal qualification and by knowledge and experience she was so adapted to the intended work that the success of the bureau was assured by the one fact of her selection as chief.

As soon as similar selections could be made, a staff of 15 assistants was secured. As the initial appropriation was but $25,640, a larger working force could not be obtained. Work was at once begun. As the first specific direction of the act was to "especially investigate the question of infant mortality," to that great question the efforts of the bureau were at first principally directed.

When the facts regarding infant mortality in this country are considered the wisdom of Congress in especially directing attention to it is evident.

The Census Bureau reports that we lose every year in this country 300,000 infants under 1 year of age. One-half of these lives could be saved by the observance of well-known and easily applied hygienic and other scientific knowledge.

In the United States 15 out of every 100 infants die before they attain the age of 1 year; 7 out of the 15 could be saved.

In a short time New Zealand reduced her infant mortality rate from 9 to 3.8 per cent.

What work has been done under competent supervision in this country has shown that the lives of tens of thousands of children could be saved every year by well-directed effort. When conditions are remediable by means within our control, not to act is little less than criminal in such a matter, when the lives of human beings are at stake.

The work of the bureau on this subject was begun by determining the scope and plan of operation, and by the preparation of schedules for investigation and reports. Special agents were sent to Johnstown, Pa., which was chosen for the purpose of beginning the work. One thousand five hundred and fifty-one schedules were secured with most satisfactory results. It has been determined by Miss Lathrop that this work should be extended to at least 100,000 children in perhaps 50 typical communities, excluding the large cities. For this 25 additional field agents will be necessary, and the work will probably require three years for completion.

One of the first requisites is to secure complete and accurate birth registration. It is remarkable in most instances how insufficient the laws are and how inefficiently they are executed.

It is probable that under the most favorable existing conditions not more than 90 per cent of the births are properly registered. It is important that this should be done not only for scientific and health reasons but also, as Miss Lathrop well says, for the security of property, the establishment of citizenship and personal rights, regulating the entrance of children into industry, the protection of school privileges, and the exercise of the right of suffrage. The determination of the circumstances of birth goes into industrial, economic, pathological, and political fields. Upon a sufficient and reliable registration of births must be based in large part effective work in this division. Then for a year all the conditions of the child's life are kept in view and chronicled. In this way not only can immediate help be given, but an accumulation of facts and experience under varying conditions can be secured, which will form a basis for advice and action in localities not visited.

Notwithstanding the great importance of this work, notwithstanding its auspicious inauguration by the bureau, not a dollar of increase is given by the committee to carry out the work which Congress expressly directed should be done, and not 1 agent of the 25 needed can be secured unless this amendment shall be adopted.

Directly involved with the work which the act expressly commits to the bureau is sanitation. Miss Lathrop asks for an appropriation of $2,800 to secure an expert on sanitation, to advise and assist the bureau in its work on infant mortality, dangerous occupations, and accidents, and diseases of children, particularly enumerated as among the matters especially to be investigated by the bureau. This was refused and the bureau will be unable to carry on its work unless this amendment is adopted.

Miss Lathrop also asked for an industrial expert with a salary of $2,000. The great question as to when and under what conditions children should be allowed to enter industrial employment calls for expert work of the highest character. Child-labor laws are everywhere being enacted and amended after enacted. The bureau may bring the experience of all the States to the help of any seeking information and advice. This, also, was refused.

A social-service expert was also asked for. The work of this expert would be directed, Miss Lathrop says, to the investigation of the subjects of juvenile courts, orphanage, desertion, the breakdown of the family, guardianship, placing in families, playgounds in cities, and recreation generally. Greatly important are all of these, and intimately connected with the lives and happiness of all the people. This also was refused.

Miss Lathrop also asked for an appropriation for a library expert. As she explained, this expert would collect and tabulate not only books and reports on the subjects covered by the work of the bureau, but would make excerpts and abstracts for particular departments of the bureau, would scan the current publications of this country and Europe for valuable material, would preserve the facts and incidents pertinent to the work of the bureau, such as industrial accidents to children, juvenile delinquencies, the reports of juvenile courts, and the thousands of occurrences which relate to child welfare. This also was refused.

In short, the contemplated work of the bureau, as stated in the law which created it, can not be carried out if this appropriation is not increased.

No one can believe that it was expected the original amount appropriated for the organization of the bureau should not be increased. Congress would not outline so large a scope of work which it explicity commits to the bureau and expect that appropriations necessary to carry out its declared purpose should be withheld.

But two reasons for not increasing the appropriation are given by the committee. First, that authorizations for the increases asked should be subject to points of order. To that it may be said that if this amendment is not subject to a point of order, as the Chair has decided, neither would an authorization by the committee have been so subject. Besides, the committee have authorized many increases in this bill which it knew were subject to points of order. It might at least have shown a favorable disposition and placed the responsibility of objection elsewhere.

The other objection is that the work which the bureau chief desires to do is in large part a duplication of the work of the Census Bureau. That is certainly not the case. Mortality tables furnished by the Census Bureau can be used, but they are not sufficient for the work especially contemplated by the law for this bureau. The work of the bureau is not alone to collect statistics, but also facts, experience, knowledge, with suggestions, advice, and recommendations.

The matter is too important to be put aside for trivial reasons. It is too vital for petty economies. Any expenditure is justified when the lives and happiness of the children of the land are involved.

And the amount asked for this great work is, after all, moderate. A bare enumeration of the subjects to be covered by the work of the bureau—child welfare, infant mortality, the birth rate, orphanage, juvenile courts, desertion, dangerous occupations, accidents and diseases of children, employment, legislation affecting children in the several States and Territories—should be enough to convince anyone that the entire amount asked for by Miss Lathrop, $164,640, is not only moderate but it is small.

The Government appropriates annually over $7,000,000 to its Bureau of Plant Industry. Congress can hardly justify an appropriation of that amount for its plants, and an appropriation of only $25,000 for its children.

Only a few weeks ago we authorized the expenditure of nearly three-quarters of a million dollars for the investigation and eradication of diseases of animals. That was justifiable under the circumstances. But will gentlemen say, when it is admitted that each year in this country 150,000 children die from easily preventable causes, that it is justifiable to limit our expenditure to $25,000 when we have every reason to believe the work which this bureau may be enabled to do will materially aid to stay and prevent this awful loss?

It is not the purpose of the bureau to encroach on the rights of the States, as seems to be apprehended by some. Most of the legislation affecting these matters must be State and not National. But the General Government has a part in this work that no State can do. In the correlation of effort, in the harmonizing of forces working for general betterment, it can suggest and advise. In securing uniformity of State laws, so vitally important in these cases, it can greatly assist. In collecting the facts, the laws, the experience of all the States, and giving such knowledge to any State where action is contemplated, it may greatly aid in securing good results. By suggestion and advice it may prevent the experiment which must result in failure; it may secure the legislation which will secure the desired benefits. In these and many other ways the General Government can aid in this great work, and it can do so without encroaching in the slightest degree upon the reserved rights of the States.

There is no doubt this work is very important in the opinion of the people. There is no doubt that it is very close to the hearts of the women of our country. There is no other single item of this bill that will carry so much of the desire and hope of all the mothers of America as this appropriation. It would not only be unwise, it would be cruel and heartless not to fulfill that desire and to satisfy that hope. I sincerely trust the full amount estimated by Miss Lathrop and approved by the Secretary of Labor may be granted.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, in order to save time I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken or who may speak on this paragraph and the amendments thereto be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. That can not be done in the Committee of the Whole, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Then go ahead. Let us not waste any time on the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], and trust it can be perfected and increased so as to give the Children's Bureau the sum asked for carrying on their important and helpful work. It is true, as the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] and others have said, that neither the Appropriations Committee nor this Committee of the Whole has authority to increase either the number or the salary of those employed on the statutory roll of the Children's Bureau—that can only be done through the method of new legislation, which is not possible, if objected to, on an appropriation bill.

As I pointed out, however, on Tuesday, in arguing the point of order on an amendment to the statutory roll, it is in order to enlarge the opportunities and activities of this bureau by amendments to this bill carrying lump-sum appropriations for specific inquiries and investigations, which the law authorizes this bureau to make. I regret the majority of the Committee on Appropriations did not see fit to insert in the bill proper items for these purposes. As a minority member of the committee I am glad to have the opportunity to vote sufficient appropriations to fully equip the bureau to enlarge, extend, and amplify its splendid, useful, and valuable work.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, the bill provides for "Children's Bureau, $25,640." The amount requested in the estimates by the head of this bureau is $165,000. I am in favor of increasing the appropriation to the full amount requested in the estimate, believing that it is one of the most important bureaus, and the functions of this bureau are of most vital concern, and therefore a sufficient amount should be appropriated to carry out the purpose for which this bureau was created. The act to establish in the Department of Labor a bureau to be known as the Children's Bureau, approved April 9, 1912, provided that the bureau shall investigate and report to the department upon all matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life among all classes of people, and shall especially investigate the questions of infant mortality, the birth rate, orphanage, the juvenile courts, desertion, dangerous occupations, accidents, and diseases of children, and the question of the employment of children, and the legislation affecting children in the several States and Territories.

The functions given to this bureau are of most vital concern to the Nation. This bureau has been established but a short time, but its work has been most remarkable in the good that it has already accomplished. The subjects first investigated were those fundamental to social welfare and to popular interest, to serve real human needs; from a practical standpoint, it was work that would be done a little at a time and presented to the people at stated intervals, so that real benefit could be had therefrom. As stated by Miss Lathrop, the head of the bureau:

All these requirements were met in the subject selected, that of infant mortality. In the first place, this subject is now challenging the attention of the whole civilized world. Because the United States differs from other civilized countries in having no general system of birth registration, it is impossible to state with accuracy our proportionate loss. But we have the estimate of the Census Bureau that our actual loss last year was 300,000 babies under 1 year of age, of whom at least half would now be living had we, as individuals and communities, applied those measures of hygiene and sanitation which are known and available. Here is a vast and unmeasured loss of infant life due solely to individual and civic neglect. The economic and industrial significance of such a loss in the general scheme of social welfare is beginning to be realized. It was once thought that a high infant death rate indicated a great degree of vigor in the survivors. Now it is agreed that conditions which destroy so many of the youngest lives of the community must also result in crippling and maiming many others and must act unfavorable upon the health of the entire community.

Sir Arthur Newsholme, the great English statistician, has said:

Infant mortality is the most sensitive index we possess of social welfare. If babies were well born and well cared for, their mortality would be negligible. The infant death rate measures the intelligence, health, and right living of the fathers and mothers, the standards of morals and sanitations of communities and governments, the efficiency of physicians, nurses, health officers, and educators.

From the work of this bureau during the short time of its existence it has clearly demonstrated the fact that the above statement of Sir Arthur Newsholme is true. There is no more important faction of the Government and no one bureau that has a higher duty to perform to the present and future generations than the work of this bureau.

It appears that 150,000 babies under 1 year of age die each year because of the lack of proper measures of sanitation and hygiene, which are known and available; and when these little lives can be saved, I, for one, shall unhesitatingly work and vote to increase the efficiency of this bureau and to give it the necessary means to carry out the splendid work it has initiated and to carry on the magnificent results that it has already obtained during its short existence. Information as to the date of birth should be available on behalf of every child in America. This is most necessary upon the child's entrance to school, as well as upon the question of the humane legislation which is now being placed upon the statute books of the Nation in regard to child labor.

One can not read the hearings had before the Committee on Appropriations without coming to the conclusion that every dollar of the amount requested by this bureau for its work by Miss Lathrop, its chief, should be ungrudgingly granted by this House. It was my fortune to be a Member of this House when this bureau was created, and at that time I gave every assistance that I could in behalf of its creation, believing then, as I am convinced now, that its works would justify beyond our fondest hopes its creation. While we have heretofore been expending large sums of money annually for agricultural experiments, preventing diseases among animals being spread, looking after the cattle tick and hog cholera, trying to stop the ravages of the boll weevil, doing what we could to prevent the spread of infected nursery stock, and looking after the "scabby sheep," our efforts have been sadly lacking in behalf of humanity and the child. Here is an opportunity to show our interest in behalf of humanity, to the end that human life may be conserved and lives preserved and assist in building up a strong, healthy, and virile race. Every particle of energy within me that can be expended for this worthy cause shall be exerted, and I appeal to my colleagues to stand for this entire amount of $165,000, as it is just and right and necessary from every viewpoint. The bulletins already issued by this department ought to be in every household in the land.

My vote shall be for the amendment to place the $165,000 on the bill in the Committee of the Whole and to urge upon the House to maintain such amendment.

I shall print as part of my remarks letters from organizations and schools in California that are urging the increased appropriation, in which requests I heartily join. The letters are as follows:

STATE NORMAL SCHOOL,
San Jose, Cal., April 17, 1914.

Hon. JOHN E. RAKER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We, the undersigned members of the faculty of the California State Normal School at San Jose, urgently request you to use your most earnest endeavor to secure the appropriation of $165,000 asked for by the Chief of the Children's Bureau.

We consider it an outrage to set aside the paltry sum of $25,640 for the Children's Bureau and at the same time appropriate over $7,000,000 for the Bureau of Animal and Plant Industry.

We consider the conservation, protection, and development of the children of this Nation equally important with the raising of cabbages or the developing of big hogs.

Respectfully submitted.

CALIFORNIA CIVIC LEAGUE,
San Francisco, Cal., April 15, 1914.

Hon. JOHN E. RAKER.

DEAR SIR: The San Francisco Center of the California Civic League, an organization of 1,100 women voters, have learned that the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives has refused the appropriation of $165,000 asked for by the Chief of the Children's Bureau. As the present appropriation of $25,000 is utterly insufficient, we urge you most strongly to amend the appropriation so as to provide an increase for this most important and valuable work.

Yours, truly,

MARION DELANY,
Corresponding Secretary.

JUVENILE PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY,
Los Angeles, Cal.

Whereas the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives has declined to report favorably on the increased appropriation for the National Child Welfare Bureau; and

Whereas we realize the paralyzing effect of this refusal on all phases of child-welfare work throughout the entire country: Therefore we are

Resolved, That we urge the Appropriations Committee to grant the increase of funds to meet the expansion of the bureau's work, which has been and will be of inestimable value to the children of the land.

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress, and that they be reminded of the importance of quick action.

MRS. E. K. FOSTER,

RIVERSIDE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Riverside, Cal.

Resolved, That the Riverside Chamber of Commerce indorses and urges the adoption of House bill 12292, introduced in the House of Representatives by the Hon. A. MITCHELL PALMER on January 26, 1914, as being the most important legislation in the cause of child labor ever considered in this country, and that its passage is most necessary to the welfare of the working children of the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be immediately forwarded to every California Member of Congress.

RIVERSIDE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
HENRY L. GRAHAM, President.
H. M. MAY, Secretary.

By order of the directors, April 9, 1914.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentlemen from my State to raise the appropriation to $50,000. A great man once said on the floor of this Chamber, "I am for the laboring portion of our people." I am for the little kings and queens of every household in America. What I mean by the little kings and queens are the children, for they are the monarchs of our homes, the autocrats of the dining room and the pride of mother's hearts, and sometimes the terrors of grown-up sisters when their sweethearts come around.

The little boy of to-day will be the man of to-morrow, and the man of to-morrow will some day preside over the destinies of this Republic or be placed in command of an invincible army, or perchance direct the movements of an armored fleet,

The mortality list of babies in this country is appalling. This bureau is of recent origin, but my heart goes out in search of that infant class, the hope of the world for future heroes and heroines, and in them future generations who will rise up and call blessed the dear, good woman now in charge of this bureau.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to avail myself of this opportunity to correct a misstatement published in Collier's Weekly two years ago when this bureau was created. That publication stated that the entire Tennessee delegation failed to vote for the creation of this bureau. My information is that every member of the delegation favored the creation of this bureau, but were all absent, on a very sad mission, when the proposition came before this House, attending the funeral of the late Senator Robert Love Taylor, of Tennessee, and hence our names were not recorded on the roll call establishing this bureau.

In addition to that, I desire to state that last year we held the National Conservation Exposition at Knoxville, Tenn., and one of the most interesting and valuable features of that great exposition was the child's welfare building, under charge of Miss Cora Rule, of that city. The exhibits were selected and approved by Miss Lathrop, the efficient head of this new bureau.

In my opinion we can not appropriate money for a better or more valuable purpose, and we should give Miss Lathrop every dollar she says she needs in order to carry forward her good work. [Applause.]

Mr. LOGUE. Mr. Chairman, the increased appropriation having been asked for by the Department of Labor as necessary for the proper carrying on of the work of the Children's Bureau, I believe it should be granted, and I am heartily in favor of the increase covered by this amendment.

I consider that there is no better work to which attention can be given than that of bettering conditions in the home. Lack of opportunity and resources make it impossible at times to bring up children according to the standard which natural instincts and the love and affection of parents would suggest. The Federal Government, to my mind, can be a great factor in improving such conditions. Education is the great cry of the day. The preservation of health is the great need of the day. Avoidance of the dangers which are incident to daily life is important; and when the National Government can be of service, through the medium of education, in helping people to realize the standard by which they should live, it will be all the better for our great Republic.

Material prosperity is desirable. The Government is engaging in great national enterprises, giving assistance to a system of good roads which is country-wide in scope, and is about to construct a great railway through the Territory of Alaska for the proper development of that country. These things are important; but, to my mind, of greater importance and beyond them is the care of the children, the rearing of the child, and the education of the parents to the requirements incident to giving our country in the future strong and healthy men and women.

The Children's Bureau has a great field in which to work. The promulgation of general sanitary rules and the distribution of information that will help to preserve the health of children is great public work. A sound body begets a sound mind; a strong physique helps in strong mental development; and the work of the bureau will be in this direction.

We must not be unmindful of the fact that the formation of government is for the protection and preservation of the individual and not merely for material prosperity. Government is founded for the preservation of society, as society is founded for the preservation of the individual, and our primary thought should be directed toward this end, and above all to the welfare of the children, who, perhaps by force of circumstances surrounding their parents, can not have the things to which they are entitled.

If we want to build for the prosperity of the country, we must try to have the structure rest on the American home, where the children are guarded and protected and where there is given them every possible help that can be expected within the limitations of the parents, but those limitations lessened by governmental information as to how the risks and dangers that would be the natural sequence of limited opportunity can best be avoided.

The prime consideration of the day is for the individual. Great progress has been made in recent years, and still greater progress will be made. Health bureaus, safety bureaus, educational bureaus have awakened people to a realization of the best means of living and avoiding danger, and tend to preserve the life and health of the individual.

I know the hearts of all go out to innocent childhood. I know we are all inclined to keep them from as many dangers as we can. We should all be equally interested in seeing that they start physically equipped and mentally developed for the conquest of life, so that no matter how humble may be the surroundings of the home, it will be the center from which they will gather their best thoughts and inspiration, and the knowledge that will safely guide them through the future years.

In our ministrations to children and for children we should never be prompted by the thought of institutional work, but rather, if possible, carry over into the home knowledge and information that will prove of service in development and training. We will find that in bettering the condition of the child in its physical and mental development we will aid in the extension of the great fundamentals on which our Government rests and will help it to endure for all time, with the guiding thought of those who direct it upheld by a realization that its mission is to give to its citizens life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BRUMBAUGH].

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in hearing the Member from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] tell of the advanced ground Massachusetts had taken on this subject. Ohio also has taken very advanced ground on the question of the protection and the employment of women and children. Ohio has had a very aggressive, progressive legislature and a great aggressive, progressive governor, Hon. James M. Cox, a former honored Member of this House. Under the leadership of Gov. Cox Ohio possibly would have as little need for special national legislation on this subject as any State in the Union. But nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of and shall vote for the most liberal provisions obtainable, such as I understand the amendment herewith proposed provides.

[By unanimous consent, Mr. BRUMBAUGH and Mr. THACHER were granted permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART] is recognized.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I trust that it can not be said of me that I take up much of the time of the Congress in speech making and that I am in the habit of voting against committees to increase well-considered appropriations. I hope also it may never be said of me that in my public service I have ever referred to a question of such importance to general humanity as this as a political question.

I heard one of my personal friends on the other side make reference to the author of the amendment, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], as "my friend" and then he went back and cheapened it by saying "my Republican friend." He ought to strike that out of the RECORD, and I believe he will do it when he remembers that the act establishing the Children's Bureau was passed by a Democratic Congress after a good many years of Democratic and Republican supremacy in this body. It is not a political question; it is a humane question. It is one that concerns the home welfare of every family in this land.

The estimates that have been prepared by the head of the Children's Bureau do not specifically show endeavor pertaining to the general education of the country on the question of the care of children. But I do want to say this, Mr. Chairman, that only this morning we reported out of the Committee on Printing a bill providing for the distribution of something like 100,000 documents on "The Care of the Baby."

Mr. MANN. Good!

Mr. BARNHART. But these different departments are inclined, gentlemen of the committee, to ask all the money they might possibly use. They even sometimes transgress the functions of other departments and overlap each other at unnecessary expense. But in this instance I do believe that after we have established this bureau we ought to give it substantial support.

Oh, we talk about saving money. Why, sirs, the original function of government was not money making nor money saving. It was to conduce to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That was the original function of government, and that is the purpose of this legislation. But in recent years we have talked so much about tariffs, and about helping people to make money, we have strayed away very largely from our real duty as legislators. One of these duties is the care and protection of child life, that we may add to the betterment of our race by contributing assistance to those in charge of childhood. A nation is strong or weak just as its people are physically, mentally, and morally strong or weak. And if we would be stronger and better and happier we can do so by more intelligent attention to nurturing childhood into a stronger and more vigorous manhood.

This amendment increases the appropriation from $25,000 to $50,000, and even this is nearly $100,000 less than the Chief of the Children's Bureau asks for. Of course I agree with the committee that we frequently run wild in giving departments all they ask as we thereby encourage duplication of effort which ought to be avoided. If you were to ask me my candid opinion, I would say that we have too many departments aiming at and spending public money for the same thing. I think the Children's Bureau, the Public Health Service, and the Bureau of Education ought to be consolidated, and then they would not be duplicating expensive endeavor by different methods. For instance, the Bureau of Health is now issuing documents on The Care of the Baby; and the Children's Bureau will probably conduct investigations and publish and distribute similar documents; and the Bureau of Education might put out something similar, and all these documents could fall into the same hands, and thus time and money would be wasted.

However that may be, the health and well-being of the babyhood of our land demands immediate attention. You say we spend millions to fight lice off Texas steers, to fight the boll weevil, to fight hog cholera, and to teach horse and cattle doctoring. Of course we do, and we help the country financially in that way. But here we have a million young mothers in the United States bringing tender and precious babies into life every year, and the great majority of them with no training in the proper care of babies except that which they receive by way of warning from next-door mothers, who have learned their lessons in child care through the life-blighting experience of following one or more of their little ones to the grave.

Mr. Chairman, the two most important responsibilities resting upon us as legislators and as promoters of better things for mankind are to provide ways and means for improved health conditions and improved physical, mental, and moral possibilities for children. Therefore I am in favor not of extravagance in such endeavor but in providing every dollar that is needed in order to accomplish the largest results possible. We can not afford to risk questionable investments in general appropriations of the people's money, but neither can we afford to waste life and usefulness of posterity by neglecting the proper care of children on the fallacious pretext of saving money.

If I had more time I would like to discuss the importance of more intelligence in child care and the consequent advantage to our country in the stronger and more vigorous and effective citizenship which would surely follow. But we all know about this. We do appropriate liberally for other improvements in life's possibilities, and why not for better conditions for helpless children on whose future strength and mentality the destiny of this great country must depend?

Let us ever be mindful of those who must earn the money to meet the appropriations we of the Congress authorize; but in the matter of the health and happiness of our people, "Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet, lest we forget, lest we forget!"

When affliction strikes down our loved ones we freely offer to pay any price for their restoration to health, and we are constantly paying it. Is not it economy and is not it humanity to spend an ounce for prevention, as the Children's Bureau proposes to do, rather than spend a pound for cure? I believe so, and therefore I am in favor of providing the Children's Bureau with ample means to do its best.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. STEVENS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. STEVENS] is recognized.

[Mr. STEVENS of New Hampshire addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the same amount of time to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SMITH].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SMITH] is recognized.

[Mr. SMITH of Minnesota addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. STEPHENS].

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Mr. Chairman, very few of the items in this bill have interested me as does this one of an appropriation for the Children's Bureau. In the development of this bureau every man, woman, and child in the United States is deeply concerned, and in providing funds for adequately carrying on the work intrusted to it every Member of Congress should be ready and willing to assist. Many of the States, perhaps most of them, have passed laws regulating the employment and hours of labor of children, prohibiting the employment of minors under certain ages, and regulating the employment of school children under necessitous circumstances. My own State, California, has in the last few years taken an advanced step in such legislation, and if I had the time I would read the law enacted by California's Legislature and approved June 2, 1913. It is a humane law and worthy of the people of that great State and of the particular legislature that enacted it. I ask those who are most interested in this subject to read it.

Mr. Chairman, how can any man interested in the future of his children and his children's children acquiesce in the neglect of the conservation of the children of our land that we inexcusably permit year after year? How can any man concerned in the future of these United States keep from doing everything possible to promote good health, good working and good living conditions for the babies and the older boys and girls that are everywhere about us.

Mr. Chairman, the Children's Bureau under Miss Lathrop has in the very limited time it has been in existence done a wonderful work in behalf of the little ones. Miss Lathrop and her work deserves commendation, and I am glad to be one of those permitted to say a good word for her and her bureau and to vote for a larger appropriation than has been reported by the committee.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that an unusually large membership will be present when the larger sums proposed are voted on, and that more money will be given this worthy bureau—enough to broaden its scope and plans and sufficient to enable it to do some of the things that should be done, so that in the years to come we may be warranted in voting much larger sums to better the conditions of thousands of our little ones, and thus make a better Government, whether it be local, State, or National.

In closing my remarks, Mr. Chairman, I desire to read the following letter, in order to show the deep and widespread interest taken in this clause now before us:

LOS ANGELES, CAL., April 8, 1914.

Hon. WILLIAM D. STEPHENS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The following resolution was adopted on April 8:

"Resolved, That the Southern California Child Labor Committee urgently requests that California Members of Congress use every endeavor to secure the appropriation of $165,000 desired by the chief of the Children's Bureau, believing that even this amount is to small for the work of that bureau, which is of such vital importance to the health and welfare of the children of this country.

"And be it further resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to every California Member of Congress."

Yours, very truly,

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CHILD LABOR COMMITTEE,
Per H. H. DURYIE, Chairman.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] is recognized.

[Mr. MCLAUGHLIN addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] is recognized.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the humanitarian principle involved in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], and therefore I trust it will not be interfered with or crippled by the adoption of the amendment offered to the amendment by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON]. If the amendment to the amendment shall be adopted, the amendment itself as amended will be practically fruitless, so far as the objects we have in view are concerned. If we limit the expenditure of this appropriation to objects not included in the jurisdiction of the Health Bureau, we practically destroy the usefulness of the Children's Bureau.

I think, Mr. Chairman, there is no danger of overlapping in the work of the Health Bureau and the work that is proposed here in the Children's Bureau. It is work of an entirely different character. I invite attention to the fact that while we are providing for the growth and extension of the other bureaus we are withholding proper support from this one. I am not complaining about extending other bureaus. I am not complaining because we have made wise and proper appropriations here for the extermination of the cattle tick, or the boll weevil, or the hog cholera. But I am complaining that with respect to this bureau, which relates to the health and the welfare of the children of this country, we are not providing for any extension whatsoever. Attention has already been called to the fact that the bureau has asked for something like $164,000. The committee has given it only $25,000. I wonder whether we all recall the exact purposes in view when this bureau was created? Let me call attention to the language of the law creating that bureau. It provided that—

The said bureau shall investigate and report to said department upon all matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life among all classes of our people, and shall especially investigate the questions of infant mortality, the birth rate, orphanage, juvenile courts, desertion, dangerous occupations, accidents, and diseases of children, employment, legislation affecting children in the several States or Territories.

I submit, gentlemen of the committee, that there is not a line of activity in which any bureau or department of the Government can engage that is of more importance to the life and welfare of the people of this country than those activities which are involved in the language which I have just read. At the proper time I desire to offer an amendment in addition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], which I hope will be adopted. The amendment I propose to offer is to carry into effect the provisions in the act of April 9, 1912, providing for the investigation of accidents, diseases of children, and employment. This amendment I shall offer unless an increased amount is provided for in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD]. This bureau is doing a great work; in the name of the children of this country let us support it. One hundred and fifty thousand children less than 1 year old die annually in the United States of disease preventable by modern hygiene. We must stop the slaughter of the innocents. On this interesting subject Miss Lathrop, the efficient head of the bureau, says at page 801 of the hearings:

The first of these subjects was that of infant mortality, and after a very careful examination we determined that that ought to be the point at which to begin. Field inquiry was clearly indicated as intended for us by the fact that the original law gave us field experts or field agents. We chose this subject because it is challenging the attention of the whole world, and because nobody knows exactly what the conditions are in this country. We are told by the vital statistician of the Census Bureau that probably 300,000 babies less than a year old die in America every year, one-half of whom could have been saved by methods of child hygiene already known. Now, we wanted to make that inquiry serve several ends—we wanted to make it serve to stimulate the interest of local communities, we wanted to get our information to the attention of individual mothers, and we wanted to secure a body of actual statistical information valuable for scientists who could deal with it en masse. We also wanted to stimulate the general interest in the subject of vital statistics—an interest which Congress showed by a resolution passed in 1903. We prepared a schedule for the purpose, and went first of all into the city of Johnstown, Pa. We were directed by the law not to go into any private residence without the good will and assent of the owner.

Therefore the agents were told, "You must not only obey that law in the letter but in the spirit, and you must not go into any home, however humble, without the good will and assent of the mother"; first, because the humbler the people the more they need to be treated with dignity, and because, in the next place, without the good will of the people we could not get the schedules filled out. We made an appeal for the cooperation of the women of the country, or in that community, at least, in this effort on the part of the Government to save the lives of babies, whose effectiveness is shown by the fact that 1,551 schedules were secured with only two refusals.

This country is tremendously interested in what is going on in the several States with reference to the subject of child labor. This bureau is helping to solve that appalling problem; in the name of humanity let us do what we can to preserve the mental, moral, and physical health of America's children. Only by so doing can the perpetuity of our institutions be assured. I can conceive of no line of activity of greater importance to the country than that proposed in these amendments, and I hope they will be adopted in the name of the mothers and children of this country. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. I yield to my colleague from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN].

[Mr. HAUGEN addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how much time remains?

The CHAIRMAN. Six minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GOOD. How much time remains on the other side?

The CHAIRMAN. Sixteen minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. How many more speeches will there be on that side?

Mr. GOOD. Two.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There will be only two more on this side. I suggest to the gentleman that he use some of his time now.

Mr. GOOD. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, with reference to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON], I wish not only to indorse what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] has said, but to go further and say that if that amendment is adopted this increased appropriation will be absolutely defeated, because under the amendment proposed by him, if the Public Health Service is authorized by law to make any portion of this investigation, the Children's Bureau can not use a penny of this money to make it, and the Health Service is authorized by law, but it is not given any money with which to do it.

With reference to the attitude of the Committee on Appropriations, as to whether they believe this increase was proper or not under existing law, the question is now squarely before this House, and we are called upon to decide whether we believe the preservation of human life is important enough to command the favorable consideration of Congress. To vote down this amendment of the gentleman from Iowa will, it seems to me, say to the country and to the world that we regard the life of a hog as more valuable than the life of a child; that we regard the rearing of cattle and horses as more important than the rearing of children. Why, Mr. Chairman, only a short time ago in the Agricultural appropriation bill we appropriated $625,000 for the investigation and extermination of diseases of animals. The very next paragraph appropriated $400,000 for the eradication of the southern cattle tick. By voting down this amendment we are going to say that the Congress of the United States is willing to spend more than $1,000,000 for those two purposes alone, but is unwilling to spend this small sum for the conservation of human life.

Much has been said about the Public Health Service, and I indorse all that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] said in that regard; but last year we appropriated for that entire service only $1,800,000, while the two items that I have mentioned, contained in the Agricultural appropriation bill, aggregate more than one-half of that sum. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that we are not to-day going to take the position that while we are properly willing to spend vast sums in the conservation of our natural resources, we are unwilling to spend a reasonable amount in the conservation of human life. No more important question can come before this Congress, and it is a shame and a disgrace to the Congress of the United States that we have not paid more attention to this important subject in the past. I hope that we will, by adopting this amendment, at least start upon a correct policy. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, several gentlemen have referred to the fact that the Children's Bureau submitted an estimate for $165,000, and that the Appropriations Committee have only recommended the sum of $25,640. I wish to say that the Appropriations Committee in making this recommendation has followed strictly the law passed by Congress less than two years ago. The Children's Bureau submitted an estimate for employees alone for that bureau amounting to more than 650 per cent over the amount allowed by the law passed less than two years ago, and the Appropriations Committee felt that on account of the recent enactment of that law, and the recent declaration of Congress that the employees provided in the law were sufficient for the purposes of that bureau, they were not justified in bringing in an appropriation which was in direct violation of the permanent law.

Now, it is evident to me that the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa will prevail, but I want to call the attention of this committee to the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON], and I want to ask this committee, before they vote, not to be stampeded into voting against that amendment. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] says that it will absolutely defeat the purposes of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa if it is adopted. I want to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina does nothing more than prevent the duplication of work on the part of two bureaus in this Government. It does not seek to limit the investigations made by the Children's Bureau in independent matters, but it provides that if this work is already being done by law in the Bureau of Public Health, then this appropriation shall not be used for the same class or kind of work. Certainly the Members of this House do not want to adopt legislation which will permit two bureaus of this Government to do the same kind of work.

It was stated by several gentlemen, particularly the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], that this work being done by the Children's Bureau would be of great benefit and use in the larger cities with reference to infant mortality. I want to read to this committee what Miss Lathrop, the head of this Children's Bureau, had to say on this subject in response to a direct question which was asked by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND]. He asked her:

You do not propose to go into the big cities, do you?

She replied:

No, sir; we distinctly do not wish to go into the big cities because, in the first place, we can not afford it, and, in the second place, the work in the big cities has been undertaken by the city authorities and is also being done through civil authorities like the department of child hygiene in New York, which is a part of the health service. A similar department has been created in Chicago, and in a large number of the cities individual work along this line is being done.

And she further states that that work is being done well in these various cities.

Now, it is not fair to undertake to compare the work being done by the National Government with the work being done in New Zealand and in other countries, because gentlemen know that in every State in this Union we not only have State boards of health, but we have county boards of health and city boards of health. So it is hardly fair to make the comparison without taking into consideration the work being done by these boards of health in the various States, counties, and municipalities.

I sometimes think that at the rate we are now going in invading the rights and prerogatives of the States that it will not be very long until the States are deprived of all of their power.

I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that I am in sympathy with the object and purpose of the Children's Bureau, and I do not want to be understood as being in any sense hostile to it or the work that it is doing. I simply contend that if any change is to be made in the law as now written, it ought to be done in the usual and proper way, after consideration by the proper committee—such as the Labor or Education Committee, I do not know which—and not in an indirect way, in an appropriation bill. This is what actuated the committee in bringing in this appropriation, and not any hostility or lack of appreciation of the value of the work it may perform.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. May I inquire of the gentleman from South Carolina how many more speeches there will be on his side?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. One more.

Mr. GOOD. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa, and also for an amendment to that amendment increasing the amount to $139,000, so as to give the Children's Bureau the full amount that they ask for. I desire, however, to call special attention of the committee to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina. I have no criticism of the Committee on Appropriations for bringing in the amount which they did. It was probably done largely through inadvertence, but I think the Committee of the Whole would be subject to severe criticism if it should now agree to the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina, which is that no portion of this money shall be expended for any purpose which the Public Health Service is authorized to perform. It makes no difference under that amendment whether the Public Health Service is performing the service, but whether it is authorized to perform it.

I drew the language which extended the authority of the Public Health Service and which reads this way:

The Public Health Service may study and investigate the diseases of man, the conditions influencing the propagation and spread thereof, including sanitation and sewage.

That covers the whole scope of the study of diseases and the conditions surrounding man which may affect diseases. The Public Health Service therefore has authority under this law to make full investigation of the work which we have confided to the Children's Bureau, but they are not doing that work. They do not intend to do that work. There is no reason why they should do the work as against the Children's Bureau. I am not in favor of making an Indian present, as they used to say, to the Children's Bureau, of pretending to give in one hand a sum of money while you are pulling it back with the other hand. [Applause.]

Let us give the Children's Bureau this money which they need to carry on the work of the study of the mortality of children, of the causes of the death of children, what can be done to prevent disease and death of children, those things which may save human life in the way of saving the smaller children.

I tell you we owe it to ourselves, having taken the step forward in the creation of the Children's Bureau, to provide sufficient force to enable that most efficient chief of the bureau to carry on the work, and no appropriation made by this Congress will meet with such hearty approval of the whole American people as this provision for the Children's Bureau unhampered by the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] called attention to the fact that he was the author of the law that caused the Public Health Service to investigate the diseases of men and the conditions influencing the propagation and spread thereof, including sanitation, sewage, and the pollution of navigable streams and lakes of the United States, and so forth. Then he informed the committee that the Public Health Service had the authority to make these investigations, but that it was not doing it.

Mr. Chairman, Homer sometimes nodded. I read from the current appropriation the very language from the law that the gentleman read giving $200,000 to the Public Health Service, and the Public Health Service is performing this duty under that appropriation. And yet gentlemen will probably be taken off their feet by propaganda that is very popular. I do not propose to be put in a false attitude, either as a Member of Congress or as a man. I voted for the Child Labor Bureau on a yea-and-nay vote when it was created. I am interested in children, because we are trying to raise six of them in my own home [applause]; but I am a law-abiding citizen.

The law limits the appropriations that this committee can bring in, and nobody knows it better than the gentleman from Illinois.

When the bill was under discussion in this House there had not been letters sent with the disingenuous questions in them all over the country, and here is what the gentleman from Illinois said about that law:

Then the bill creates a number of employees in the department, a useless proceeding, an improper method of legislation. Employees, when this bureau is first organized, will have nothing to do, and when they do have something to do this number of employees will not be sufficient; but the law will, happily, prevent an enlargement of the activities of the bureau beyond the number of employees now authorized, so that in the end, if they desire, they can not engage in great activities.

Mr. MANN. I evidently was a good prophet, was I not?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I am quoting the gentleman's own language and he need not be ashamed of it. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Appropriations is not a legislating committee. We followed the law. If the House sees fit to go beyond the law the Committee on Appropriations will be quite content. If the House sees fit to appropriate a lump sum of money and to refuse to adopt the limitation of language that shall be used for the gathering of these statistics that the Public Health Service gathers, that is the privilege of the House. But I contend that before the activities of the bureau are enlarged these questions ought to be referred to a committee having jurisdiction of them, the Committee on Labor, the Committee on Education, or the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. We did not have the time to inquire whether there ought to be a new Public Health Service established. We did not have the time to inquire whether there ought to be another Census Bureau established in another bureau of the Government.

Miss Lathrop testified before the committee that she got all the information she called on the Public Health Service for; that Dr. Blue treated her most courteously, but that she did not want to be constantly asking the Public Health Service for this information, therefore she wants a bureau of her own, or a division of her own, to duplicate the work. Do you gentlemen in your sober moments want to say that a great bureau of the Government, sustained at a cost of more than a million dollars a year, shall not be called upon to furnish the information that it has gathered but that a separate division shall be established for that service? If you do, vote for this amendment in this stampede.

Whoever before thought there was anything wrong in the Census Office or any other bureau calling upon the Public Health Bureau for information gathered by that bureau? What department of the Government hesitates to call upon the Bureau of the Census for statistics gathered there? Shall every department be provided with a statistical bureau of its own? That is what you propose to vote in here. There is no question about the ability of the Children's Bureau to get vital statistics from the Census Office. There is no question about the Children's Bureau being able to get information from the Public Health Service. If you want to say that this particular bureau shall not be called upon to call on other bureaus for information, you have a right to do it; but, gentlemen, do not be stampeded. That is all this is. Oh, how unfair these questions are that have been sent out over the country, that the Congress appropriated $600,000 to stamp out hog cholera, and is only proposing to appropriate $25,000 for the babies of the country. I could, if I wanted to be unfair, put the Children's Bureau and its sponsors in the same attitude that they have tried to place this committee in. Could I not ask you why is it that you champions of the Children's Bureau and the head of the Children's Bureau are asking for only $165,000? Is not that an insult to the mothers and the babies of this Republic, when we appropriate four times that much for hog cholera? Where does your own questioning put you? You ask for only $165,000 for the babies, and yet the Secretary of Agriculture asked for $7,000,000 for plants! You ask for only $165,000 for the babies of America, and yet the Navy Department has asked for $150,000,000! What we give the Navy in one year would last 900 years for the babies at the rate you ask the money. Do you love your Navy nine hundred times better than you do your babies? Yet that is the form of unfair questions that you have been putting out all over this country. The babies of this country are very near and very dear to all thinking men. The children are our greatest assets. All of your commerce and all of your gold and silver and manufactures are not worth the babies; but every State in the Union has its board of public health and every city in the Union has its board of public health, every town of 1,000 people has its board of public health. In every school, in every county, the people are trying to teach hygiene and sanitation.

Mr. Chairman, this committee has as much interest in the babies as the gentlemen who propose to increase the appropriation, but this committee has followed the law. This committee believes that the Committee on Labor or some other committee having jurisdiction of the question should study this matter; and if it is desired to enlarge the activities of that bureau, then it should report appropriate legislation. We are just as willing, if the Congress says so, to appropriate $165,000,000 for the babies as we are $165,000. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a substitute for the amendment and the amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

To carry into effect the provisions of the act approved April 9, 1912, providing for the investigation of questions of infant mortality and dangerous occupations, and of all matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life among all classes of our people, $100,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the vote upon that is not in order at this time. There is an amendment pending to the original amendment, and it is first in order to perfect the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute has been offered to the amendment, and it is first in order to perfect the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the substitute is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the substitute will be pending until the amendment is perfected.

Mr. MANN. The substitute is in order, but the vote comes first upon the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to reserve the point of order against the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment to the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment to the amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina) there were—ayes 59, noes 85.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following as an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Is it in order to offer an amendment after debate is closed?

The CHAIRMAN. It is. Debate was closed on the section and all amendments thereto.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Then this matter of offering amendments can go on indefinitely?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment the followng: "Provided, That this appropriation shall not be expended for investigation that the Public Health Service is required or authorized by law to make and are making."

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The amendment covers the same matter as the amendment which has just been defeated.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, in answer to that I desire to call attention to the fact that this amendment is not only a limitation as to work that the Health Bureau is authorized to perform but is further limited so that it must be performing it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair gathered from the reading of the amendment that it adds the words "and are now making."

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the amendment, it would have the same effect that the amendment just defeated would have had, which is, of course, to defeat the efficiency of this Child Labor Bureau. It would conflict with its work.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that debate has closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina) there were—ayes 78, noes 84.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers (Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina and Mr. GOOD) reported that there were—ayes 92, noes 102.

So the amendment was disagreed to. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Whose amendment is this?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Iowa can not offer an amendment to his own amendment.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, he can.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would ask the gentleman from New York to what rule he refers?

Mr. FITZGERALD. A Member having the floor can make one or more motions upon certain conditions; that is, other subsidiary motions. A gentleman can offer an amendment and move the previous question, but a gentleman can not propose an amendment and then offer an amendment to the amendment. He can withdraw the amendment and offer a new amendment.

Mr. MANN. He can not withdraw the amendment except by unanimous consent, and he has the same authority to offer an amendment to the amendment as the gentleman in charge of the bill has to offer an amendment to the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have no such authority, nor has the gentleman in charge of the bill, to offer an amendment and then take the floor and offer a further amendment to it and deprive other Members of their rights. The gentleman can not find any authority for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not know any rule to prevent that, unless it is under the rule of being dilatory; and the question is whether it is dilatory.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not making the point of its being dilatory; but the point is the gentleman can not take the floor to offer an amendment to an amendment which he himself offers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to say to the gentleman from New York that the gentleman from Iowa spoke to the Chair a few moments ago, saying he desired to perfect his amendment when all other amendments had been offered and had been voted either down or up, and it can not be a question of being dilatory, because the gentleman spoke a long while ago to the Chair in regard to perfecting his amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not make the point of the amendment being dilatory——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thought the gentleman did.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I distinctly stated that I made the point that the gentleman having offered one amendment could not offer an amendment to his amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it would be absolutely silly to say that a man in charge of a measure who offered a substitute could not offer an amendment to perfect it, or that a man who has offered an amendment can not offer an amendment to perfect it.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the amendment has not been reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was waiting for the gentleman from New York to conclude his argument on the point of order, if he so desired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will not delay the committee in attempting to get the authority, but I am quite certain the gentleman is not entitled to offer an amendment to the amendment which he himself has offered and which is pending. I know that the Chair can not recall a single instance in his long experience in the House of any attempt even being made to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, the Chair does not recall a single instance——

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman wishes to withdraw an amendment which he offers and obtains unanimous consent to do so, then he could offer an amendment——

Mr. MANN. If the Chair waits for the gentleman from New York to find his precedents, it will take a very long time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not know any precedent of this character. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment to perfect the amendment, and therefore the Chair overrules the point of order. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the amendment: Strike out of the amendment "$50,000" and insert "$139,000."

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. GOOD) there were—ayes 101, noes 97.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers (Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina and Mr. GOOD) reported that there were—ayes 113, noes 95.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to withdraw his substitute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the amendment as amended.

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to. [Applause.]

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the chairman of the committee, in this section 139 I notice the copyist and messenger are not provided.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Where there is no amount fixed it is fixed by law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be recognized?

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I have interrogated the gentleman and have been satisfied.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent expenses, Department of Labor: For contingent and miscellaneous expenses of the offices and bureaus of the department, for which appropriations for contingent and miscellaneous expenses are not specifically made, including the purchase of stationery, furniture and repairs to the same, carpets, matting, oilcloth, file cases, towels, ice, brooms, soap, sponges, laundry, street car tickets not exceeding $100, lighting and heating; for the purchase, exchange, and care of horses and vehicles to be used only for official purposes; freight and express charges, postage to foreign countries, telegraph and telephone service, typewriters and adding machines, including their exchange; repairs to the building occupied by the office of the Secretary of Labor, $36,100; and in addition thereto such sum as may be necessary, not in excess of $13,500, to facilitate the purchase, through the central purchasing office as provided in the act of June 17, 1910 (36 Stat. L., p. 531), of certain supplies for the Immigration Service, shall be deducted from the appropriation "Expenses of regulating immigration" made for the fiscal year 1915 and added to the appropriation "Contingent expenses, Department of Labor," for that year; and the total sum thereof shall be and constitute the appropriation for contingent expenses for the Department of Labor, to be expended through the central purchasing office (Division of Publications and Supplies), Department of Labor.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 139, in line 5, after the word "labor," add the following: "For the purchase of safety paper for certificates of naturalization now required by law, and to be immediately available, $4,200."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I make the point of order against the amendment. This is not a deficiency bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman withhold the point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No. I wish to finish this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. J. M. C. SMITH] is recognized.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I wish to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. J. M. C. SMITH] yield?

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of increasing the appropriation for maintaining and carrying on the work of the Children's Bureau in the Department of Labor. The amount asked for by the director, Miss Lathrop, for the conduct of the work is $164,000, while the amount appropriated by the committee was only $25,640. There is no more important object for which an appropriation can be made than to conserve the lives and health of infants and children. This appropriation stands out clearly and distinctively in a class by itself. We appropriate millions for purposes not as important or vital as this. We appropriated $35,000,000 for the construction of a railroad in Alaska.

The sum of $25,000,000 was appropriated for good roads. The share allotted to Michigan will reach the sum of over $900,000. The amount asked for the use of this Children's Bureau will not exceed $3,000 to each State. This is not one-fourth the amount voted for the treatment and eradication of hog cholera at the present session. Surely not an exorbitant sum.

Mr. Chairman, it was stated in the hearings that 300,000 infants died annually before arriving at the age of 1 year, and that at least 150,000 of them could be saved by proper care and treatment.

If this be true, it has been a blot on the fair name of our country and shows the importance and crying need of this action. In our action here to-day the country is greatly interested. It sometimes is difficult to judge of the wishes and desires of our constituents in our action had here on the floor of the House on important matters, but there can be no doubt but what the unanimous desire and wish of all the people of our country are heartily in favor of liberally supporting this bureau. I am in favor of the amendment for increasing the appropriation.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The amendment which I just offered is made necessary to print blanks for naturalization——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Of course, if this committee is going to obstruct this kind of work, which they can do by points of order and other obstructions, and obstruct me from taking a minute's time, they will find that there are others who can play the obstruction game. If the committee wants to take that attitude, and the Democratic side of the House wants to support them, let the voters of the country decide who is right on these questions that are important to labor.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing his amendment. I have heard enough of that stuff.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The gentleman has heard too much for his satisfaction and probably for his own gratification.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] will proceed in order and discuss his provision.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Does the Chair decide that I was speaking out of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Undoubtedly the gentleman was speaking out of order.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I want to say then, Mr. Chairman, while the committee has not given all the department has asked for, it will come somewhere near giving the amount in this contingent appropriation that is necessary probably to perform the work in an efficient manner. Of course, the Secretary of the Department of Labor, having been a labor man in his time, as have others in the department, has been a little delicate about asking for all the funds necessary to operate with the greatest efficiency possible.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Rent: For rent of buildings and parts of buildings in the District of Columbia for the use of the Department of Labor, $12,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. This is an appropriation for the rent of the building for the Department of Labor. I do not know whether there is an intention of that department to have a new building constructed or not. The bill carries an item for the Department of Commerce to have an addition built. I understand that the company which is to build that addition to the Department of Commerce has as its president Mr. Victor J. Evans. I noticed in the Star the other evening a statement that a new bank had been opened in that locality, where the Department of Commerce is, and that this man who is the president of the company which is to build the new addition to the Department of Commerce Building, is the vice president of this new bank, and associating with him as directors of the new bank are Mr. George C. Havenner, who is chief clerk, I believe, of the Department of Commerce; Mr. E. T. Quigley, who is, I believe, the assistant solicitor of the Department of Commerce; and Mr. Hugh Grant Smith, who is, I believe, private secretary of the Secretary of Commerce. It looks to me as though there was rather a close connection in this bank between the people who are building the addition and those who are advising that we rent it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Court of Appeals, District of Columbia: Chief justice, $7,500; 2 associate justices, at $7,000 each; clerk, $3,250, and $250 additional as custodian of the Court of Appeals Building; assistant or deputy clerk, $2,250; reporter, $1,500: Provided, That the reports issued by him shall not be sold for more than $5 per volume; crier, who shall also act as stenographer and typewriter in the clerk's office when not engaged in court room, $1,200; 3 messengers, at $720 each; necessary expenditures in the conduct of the clerk's office, $1,000; 3 stenographers, 1 for the chief justice and 1 for each associate justice, at $1,200 each; in all $36,710, one-half of which shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I wish to direct the attention of the chairman of the committee having the bill in charge to the allowance of $5 per volume for reports of the court of appeals. That is the amount that has been carried for several years past. I recall when we had the Judicial Code under consideration, on a motion that I made, we succeeded in reducing the price of the reports of the Supreme Court from $2 to $1.50. It strikes me that this is a most exorbitant price to authorize any person to charge for reports of decisions. Can the gentleman inform the committee of the actual price this reporter charges for these volumes?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I would say to the gentleman that this is the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, and the number of volumes to be sold is exceedingly limited.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, so far as that is concerned, let us take, for instance, the reports of the Philadelphia courts, the common pleas court, and the volumes sold are very limited, and yet, nevertheless, the price does not meet the exorbitant price that you charge here. I do not believe you could hardly find any sale at $5 a volume unless this person had a monopoly; $3 a volume, $2.50 a volume, or $2 a volume would be compensatory.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Probably there are five times as many lawyers in the city of Philadelphia as in the District of Columbia, and these books have absolutely no sale outside of the District.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman mean to state to the committee that these volumes are sold at a price of $5 per volume, and that you authorize the reporter of the court to sell them at $5 a volume, when our State reports sell for $1.75 and the Supreme Court reports sell for $1.50? Something should be done so as not to put such an exorbitant price on the lawyers of the District.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It was reduced, and there was not enough sale to pay the actual cost, and we had to put it back to $5.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think if you reduced it to $3 you would find it still would be published, but there would not be great profit in the hands of the reporter of the court. It is a question of giving some undue profit to the reporter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Books for judicial officers: For purchase and rebinding of law books and books of reference for United States judges, district attorneys, and other judicial officers, including the nine libraries of the United States circuit courts of appeals, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General: Provided, That such books shall in all cases be transmitted to their successors in office; all books purchased thereunder to be plainly marked, "The property of the United States," $16,000.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BARTON] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BARTON. I do so for the purpose of asking unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the Children's Bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BARTON] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTON. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent of necessary quarters in Washington, D. C., and elsewhere, $7,000; necessary traveling expenses of members of the court and clerk, $150; books, periodicals, stationery, supplies, freight, telephone and telegraph, heat, light, and power service, drugs, chemicals, cleansers, furniture, and printing; pay of bailiffs and all other necessary employees not otherwise specifically provided for; and such other miscellaneous expenses as may be approved by the presiding judge, $6,500; in all, $13,650.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to go back to the item at the bottom of page 133, beginning on line 24, providing for rent of quarters for the accommodation of the Census Bureau, $17,500, and authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to enter into a contract for a lease for a period of not to exceed five years. The purpose I have in view in making this request——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] asks unanimous consent to return to page 133, line 24.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Let him explain his purpose.

Mr. MADDEN. The purpose of asking this consent is to call attention to the fact that I understand that a great many of the officials of the Department of Commerce are identified officially with a bank, the owners of which are erecting this building and are to rent it, if they have not already rented it, to the Department of Commerce. On the face of the case it looks to me like a matter that ought to be investigated before an appropriation is made.

I have no charges to make against anybody, but I think the House should know the facts, and I think the Committee on Appropriations ought to know the facts. I think the House should be in possession of such information as I see published in one of this morning's newspapers, to the effect that these men, occupying official positions, both in the bank and in the Department of Commerce, are making contracts for the department with the bank. That provision ought not to go through without some investigation and discussion.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gentleman a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. What is to prevent the gentleman right now from stating what facts he has to bear out his allegations? There is nobody attempting to prevent him.

Mr. MADDEN. I will state that that information is contained in one of the newspapers this morning, which has already been read.

Mr. BARTLETT. That has already been stated by the gentleman's colleague [Mr. MANN]. The gentleman's colleague was on the job a little bit quicker than the gentleman himself was.

Mr. MADDEN. A man named Evans is the man who makes the contract with the Department of Commerce, and he is vice president of the bank and president of the corporation erecting the building, and associated with him in the bank of which he is the vice president is the private secretary of the Secretary of Commerce and two other officials of the Department of Commerce as directors. Those statements make it appear to me to be an altogether irregular transaction, in which the Congress of the United States ought not to make an appropriation until we have all the facts before us. That is all.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the statement of the gentleman makes it necessary for me to say that now, for the first time——

Mr. MADDEN. I will say right now that I do not believe a member of the Committee on Appropriations knew anything whatever about the facts in the case, and I am quite sure that if they did, not one member of this Committee on Appropriations would recommend any such contract as is provided for in this appropriation.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes, sir.

Mr. COOPER. A moment ago the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, the leader of the minority, said that one of the officers of the corporation which is erecting this building is employed in the Department of Commerce——

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; the gentleman misunderstood me. I said that I understood that the president of the corporation that is to build the building is vice president of this new bank, and serving with him on the board of directors of the bank were the chief clerk of the department, the private secretary of the Secretary, and the assistant solicitor of the department.

Mr. COOPER. That is even more significant than I thought when I heard the gentleman from Illinois first make the statement.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I would like to have the gentleman from South Carolina explain why we are doing this. Some years ago Congress appropriated a lot of money which was used to buy a site for a new building for the Department of Commerce. We have had that site during these years, and yet meanwhile the Committee on Appropriations has induced Congress to sanction the construction by private capital of an entirely new building, away up on Nineteenth Street and Pennsylvania Avenue, and the leasing of it for a number of years for the Department of Commerce.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I wish to say that the building has never been authorized; and if authorized, it could not be constructed within the life of this lease.

Mr. COOPER. Of course a building for the Department of Commerce never will be constructed if it never is authorized. But we have had the site for a number of years; and, in view of the fact that the Government is paying approximately $600,000 a year for the rent of privately owned buildings in Washington, we ought to save money by the construction of our own buildings.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SHERLEY. I merely wished to say, Mr. Chairman, with reference to the erecting of Government buildings, that I know of no instance where we have built a Government building in Washington and saved money over rent in doing it.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to make the statement that the banker referred to is a savings-bank official, and these men who are stated to be officers of the bank are merely trustees, and receive no compensation whatever as such.

Mr. MADDEN. That does not make any difference.

Mr. CALDER. I want to get that into the RECORD.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that no member of the Committee on Appropriations, so far as I know, ever heard the suggestion thrown out until today on the floor that anybody connected with the Department of Commerce was either directly or remotely interested in the rental of these quarters. Of course the Committee on Appropriations was simply trying to provide quarters for the Department of Commerce. The Secretary desired, as far as possible, to have his entire force under one roof; and that is what induced the Committee on Appropriations to provide for those quarters. I shall not object to a request to go back to that item.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] restate his proposition for unanimous consent?

Mr. MADDEN. To go back to line 24, page 133, and to include lines 1 to 7, on page 134, for the purpose of reconsidering the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to return to line 24, page 133, and lines 1 to 7, page 134. Is there objection?

Mr. HAY. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia objects. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For auditors and additional stenographers, when deemed necessary, in the Court of Claims, and a stenographer, at $1,600, for the chief justice, to be disbursed under the direction of the court, $7,000.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Pending the count,

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the point. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That no part of any money appropriated by this or any other act shall be used during the fiscal year 1915 for the purchase of any typewriting machine at a price in excess of the lowest price paid by the Government of the United States for the same make and model of machine during the period of the fiscal years 1913 and 1914; such price shall include the value of any typewriting machine or machines given in exchange, but shall not apply to special prices granted on typewriting machines used in schools of the District of Columbia or of the Indian Service, the lowest of which special prices paid for typewriting machines shall not be exceeded in future purchases for such schools.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against this paragraph that it is new legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I concede that it is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, by inserting, after line 17, on page 143, the following:

"SEC. 4. That no part of any money appropriated by this shall be used during the fiscal year 1915 for the purchase of any typewriting machine at a price in excess of the lowest price paid by the Government of the United States for the same make and model of machine during the period of the fiscal years 1913 and 1914; such price shall include the value of any typewriting machine or machines given in exchange, but shall not apply to special prices granted on typewriting machines used in schools of the District of Columbia or of the Indian Service, the lowest of which special prices paid for typewriting machines shall not be exceeded in purchases for such schools."

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. LONERGAN. On the ground that it is legislation.

Mr. BARTLETT. It reduces expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. It is a limitation on this appropriation.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The difference between the amendment and the section that went out on the point of order is this: The paragraph which went out said that no part of any money appropriated by this or any other act could be used for the purposes stated. The amendment leaves out the words "or any other act" and confines it to the money appropriated in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. It appears clearly to the Chair that it is a limitation. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. MANN. I think there may be some question about the last two lines of the amendment. With the word "future" left out those two lines do not mean anything, because the purchases for the year are already covered in the preceding part of the amendment, and if the last two lines refer to purchases for the future, they are subject to the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. In order to save time and not have an argument on the point of order, I ask unanimous consent to strike out all after the word "service," in line 3, page 144.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment as stated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. What became of the point of order made by the gentleman from Connecticut against the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was overruled. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Within 30 days after the passage of this act the President shall appoint a board consisting of three persons in the employment of the Government who shall serve without additional compensation, and two of whom shall be experienced in mechanical manufacturing; it shall be the duty of said board to make an investigation of typewriting and other machines of like character and to fix a mechanical standard to be required for typewriting machines for each class of work in the public service requiring the use of such machines; it shall also ascertain and report as nearly as may be practicable the probable maximum cost of producing each such machine, based upon such mechanical standard, and shall communicate the same to Congress through the Secretary of the Treasury at the beginning of its next session.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, let the gentleman make the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The point of order is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. LONERGAN. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The head of every executive department and other Government establishment shall transmit to Congress, on the first day of its next session, a statement showing, for the first three months of the fiscal year 1915, the following relative to typewriting machines purchased during that period: The model, character, contract price, and make of each machine purchased; the model, character, amount allowed, and make of each machine given in exchange; total number purchased and total number given in exchange; aggregate cost, aggregate allowance on exchanges, and aggregate net cost of all machines. And there shall be submitted to Congress, on the first day of the session following the close of the fiscal year 1915, statements of all of the foregoing facts for the entire period of that fiscal year.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This merely requires the transmission to Congress of a statement regarding the number, prices, and models of all typewriters purchased by the various departments. Surely the gentleman ought to be willing to have Congress furnished with information regarding the purchase of typewriters, which information will enable the House to take proper action in regard to the matter of their purchase. This does not limit the price. It simply requires a statement furnishing information in a uniform manner. It is information that the House ought to have.

Mr. LONERGAN. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I think it ought to be said, in justice to the Committee on Appropriations, that all of these provisions with reference to typewriters were put into the bill with the idea of protecting the Government against what we believe to be excessive charges by the various typewriter companies that, if they are not in a combination, are so nearly so as to compel the Government to pay a great deal more than ought to be paid. The committee in the interest of economy were trying to arrive at a basis for determining whether or not, in order to protect the Government, it might not be advisable to build typewriters instead of purchasing them of these companies.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. I want to know if you found any discrepancy in the various departments as to the prices paid?

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, yes; there is a good deal. I think the prices paid for all typewriters, in view of the actual cost, are excessive. I think that anyone who investigates it will come to that conclusion.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 145, in line 5, after the word "machines" insert: "and report on the operation of tabulating and punching machines in the office of the Auditor of the Post Office Department, both as to efficiency of such machines and as to requirements made in said office of clerks and employees therein."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I make the point of order that that is not germane.

Mr. BRYAN. It is germane, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman. I will withdraw the amendment there and offer it as a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRYAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment as a new paragraph, to come in after section 4.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 9, page 145, add a new paragraph, as follows:
"And report on the operation of tabulating and punching machines in the office of the Auditor for the Post Office Department, both as to efficiency of such machines and as to the requirements made in said office of clerks and employees therein."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, a point of order on that, and I suggest that it is not in such form that it can be added as a new paragraph.

Mr. BRYAN. I will ask to insert the words "shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to again modify his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as a new section the following:
"And the Secretary of the Treasury shall report on the operation of tabulating and punching machines in the office of the Auditor for the Post Office Department both as to efficiency of said machines and as to the requirements made in said office of clerks and employees therein."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman is subject to a point of order, but I do not care to make the point of order to it. But I am desirous of getting before the committee a proposal that, if possible, may be tied to this one, and it occurs to me that instead of having the Secretary of the Treasury make the report, a committee should be appointed to make a report on these machines and on typewriters and other matters, and if I can have the amendment for a moment I will move to amend it.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not care how the proposition comes, whether it be an amendment as I first offered it or as a separate paragraph as I have at the Clerk's desk now, or whether it is under the suggestion that may be worked out by the gentleman from Kentucky, but I do want an investigation, if possible to secure it, on the operations in the office of the Auditor of the Post Office Department, in order that the facts may be sifted and the accuracy of the audit may be tested, and that the requirements of these employees may be known and all of these disputed facts may be put into the clear.

We have had here statements on this floor by men on the inside that complaints have been filed of inhuman and cruel treatment down there. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] said that they came to his office day in and day out, when the machines were first instituted, with all kinds of complaints. Since I brought up the question, a few days ago, there have been a number of parties come to me, wherever I go in public places, when the meeting is over, two or three clerks will come up and tell of irregularities and unusual conditions that prevail in that particular office.

I have learned of the Treasury Department facts that make me believe that the audit is practically worthless in essential features. For instance, they do not take any kind of a check on the receipts. In the Treasury Department a warrant is not audited until the receipt is checked. Down there they punch holes for the amount, and if a postmaster gets stuck by a hole punched 5 instead of 7, he is short $2, and they send notice to him and he has to pay up. I am informed that one of the leading offices in the country refused to accept the audit of this department because of its inaccuracy.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Has the gentleman ever visited this auditor's office and seen the machines in operation?

Mr. BRYAN. I have; yes.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Does the gentleman know that it is mechanically impossible to make the mistake that he has suggested?

Mr. BRYAN. Of course, it is not impossible to punch a hole in the figure 7 instead of 5.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Would not the mistake be detected before they file away the papers?

Mr. BRYAN. Not necessarily.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. As I understand it, they run a rod through several hundred papers, and if it strikes a 7 hole in place of a 5, it is mechanically impossible to put the rod through.

Mr. BRYAN. Of course, all the 5s and all the 7s are in line, and if a 7 hole was punched it would not line up with a 5 hole.

I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that there had been filed complaints before the Health Department, and they attempted to investigate, and Mr. Kram discouraged it on account of the question of jurisdiction. He opposed it and prevented the investigation by the Health Bureau. Now, these things and all the conditions down there are such as to warrant an investigation of some kind. I am sure that if it is made that system of piecework will be put out of order forever.

It is very easy, Mr. Chairman, for us to procure an amendment or strike out a section on parliamentary point here and then have the usual process of making the change again in the Senate. I have noticed that there is a great disposition here to be law-abiding citizens on some bureaus; but on other bureaus and salaries they do not consider themselves bound by the fundamental law, and they say that fundamental law is not intended to govern and that new appropriation acts raising or changing these things are all right.

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on this subject, covering the complaints that have been received.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, in extension of my remarks, I will say, I do not have very much faith in an investigation unless the Secretary of the Treasury is responsible for it or the commission is given authority to summon witnesses and take testimony under oath. Those women and men employed down there will not jeopardize their jobs by voluntary testimony. They must earn a living. I want a thorough investigation, and I believe this piecework business there under Auditor Kram will come to an end, and very soon, too.

The investigation should extend both as to the efficiency of such machines and as to the requirements made of the clerks and employees in Auditor Kram's office. I commend the plan to determine typewriter efficiency and to establish a mechanical standard for machines, as proposed in the bill. I want these punching machines in Auditor Kram's office also investigated; but, above the machines, I want the human beings down there to have as much consideration as this committee gives to typewriters that cost about $18 to manufacture. That is the proposition on which I lay most stress.

The chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina] and other gentlemen have laid great stress on the amount that has been saved in this department by the laying off of clerks and in other ways. There have been some savings; there is no denial of that and no desire to deny it. It is worthy of note, however, that all this saving is in pay to clerks, not in pay to the officers classified above clerks. The law of 1909 was compared with the present statute. In 1909 the pay of the high-salaried men rated above clerks was $31,750; this bill carries $37,000, an increase of over 16 per cent, in these high-salaried positions. The number of clerks has been decreased, but the aggregate pay for the high-salaried men has gone continually upward.

I believe the saving should not all be credited to the machines. In the first place, it has been shown that 50 per cent of one year's work is still undone and no intention of ever doing it—the so-called legislative audit. The money orders lie there unaudited to the sum of about a half billion dollars. That would account for quite a percentage of decrease, and now they are nearly six months behind again, so that we have absolutely untouched practically a whole year's work.

It has been shown that clerks in Mr. Kram's sweatshop are, to all intents and purposes, denied leave which is accorded to all other clerks. They must, under this auditor, agree to take care of their several desks, and when they return from their leave they find their work piled up on their desks for them to complete by night work, some of them working 10 hours per day till they have caught up. This practice, of course, helps Mr. Kram; and Mr. Kram's friends who own the stock in the company which owns the punching machines does not fail to tell about all these savings, thereby increasing the demand for the wonderful machines.

Then Mr. Kram works his clerks like slaves, docks them for every few minutes of time they lose, and fines them for every error. All this, of course, boosts this plausible auditor and promotes his praise by the committee here on this floor, who do not know the facts.

Since I made this attack on Mr. Kram's methods a few days ago I have been appealed to and congratulated by parties who send in their cards here on the floor and request an interview. No less than five such cases have occurred. At public meetings which I have attended they have come with their complaints. They are intelligent men and women, who want their names withheld. I have had some experience in investigations and in ferreting out the truth where there is divergence of opinion. I know you can not expect everyone to be satisfied, but I say that these employees have a good case against Mr. Kram. The saving is not what is pretended, either.

Why, do the gentlemen of this House know that the audit Mr. Kram makes is about three-fourths sham? I have been to the Treasury Department, and they tell me there that the essential feature of their audit in checking warrants is to see that the payment of the warrant is receipted by the payee, that a valid indorsement is on the warrant. That is the important item on a money order, but this wonderful audit of the plausible Mr. Kram does not consider that important feature at all. The girls that run these piece-rate machines—men will not run them; they can dig in the streets, a much easier occupation—can not investigate the matter of receipt. They must save time. No facts are worth while except the numbers that can be recorded by punches, and then they must rattle on, for this great Government is paying them by the piece; and if they do not keep up their efficiency, so the machines can get a good report and sell for a high price on the market, they will lose even the job they have. Suppose there was no receipt. That is nothing—an entirely immaterial matter.

Many postmasters refuse to accept this automaton audit. If the tired girl punches a 5 where the order called for a 7, the postmaster gets debited the difference—$2. Sometimes they pay up; in other cases they refuse. The postmasters of the country will lose confidence, and ought to lose confidence, in audits made at breakneck speed. That is not the way to work human beings, anyway. Here are some of the letters I have received concerning this proposition:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 10, 1914.

Hon. JAMES W. BRYAN.

DEAR SIR: You certainly heard a correct report—that the Sixth Auditor's office was a hell on earth. It is the most corrupt office under the Government. That piecework is ruining the nerves of the girls who work on the machines. Some of them have to pay greater part of their salaries for errors made, as he charges for every error made in punching the cards. A nest of Republicans control everything; they get all the best positions and best-paying places. Democrats are getting nothing. The investigations there have gained no information about the way things are done. The chiefs of divisions and clerks could give information, but they would not dare to say anything against the system of doing the work. This would incur Mr. Kram's everlasting hatred, and in course of time they would lose their positions. Is there not a man in the Democratic Party competent to fill this place?

Respectfully,

——— ———.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 8, 1914.

Hon. JAMES W. BRYAN,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: All honor to you for the fight you have made on Kram and his sweatshop methods. I am not a Government employee and have absolutely no interest in this matter except that of humanity and fair play.

I know that Kram boasts that when the slaves under him make a certain amount under one system he will transfer them to the other, and vice versa.

To residents of Washington the office of the Auditor of the Post Office is well known by its evil reputation as an inhuman institution. Kram, who is a hypocritical fraud, has pulled the wool over the eyes of the Appropriations Committee. He draws a fat salary. Entering office as a Republican, he is now training with the Democrats.

Let me urge you to keep up your interest in this matter. Please dig into it and get some one in the Senate committee to do so. There is nothing like it under the Government or short of the lofts of New York. This fellow has these poor people terrorized, so you will have to devise methods of getting at the facts.

Washingtonian.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 8, 1914.

Hon. JAMES W. BRYAN, M. C.

SIR: Your attention, and also that of Mr. NOLAN, to the system of card punching in the office of the Auditor for the Post Office Department. Examine one of the cards after it is punched and see if you or Mr. NOLAN can read it. No name of the State, office, amount of order, or fee charged; nothing but a few punched holes in a card. It is the most absurd, no-sense system that was ever thought of by any person.

Respectfully,

——— ———.

We women in the office of the Auditor of the Post Office Department are deeply grateful to you for the effort you made in our behalf before the Appropriation Committee. Every word is true. You might have stated that the unaudited money orders are piled up, 15,000,000, while the auditor keeps chiefs of division after office hours to straighten the lines of desks and fasten them to the floor, so that they will not swerve an inch in position.

His plausible and utterly false statements to visitors are made in the presence of clerks, who listen aghast but do not dare to speak themselves.

He has been heard to call up Congressmen and offer to assist in securing high-class post offices in their districts through his influence over the Postmaster General.

Auditor Kram is a Machiavelli in nature. God bless you for the brave stand you made.

Please keep it up until success is gained and this office is exposed.

This is written in the name of the women clerks, and not meant to be merely anonymous in the usual term.

Representative BRYAN.

DEAR SIR: As an employee of the Auditor for the Post Office Department I desire to thank you for your part in defending the pieceworkers and your effort to abolish the pernicious system. Every word spoken against it is true; and many other unpleasant conditions exist of which the employees dare not speak. We do not need to be penalized at such an exorbitant rate, as we have as much honor and pride in our work as Mr. Kram, and no one would want a bad record in office.

Sincerely,

AN EMPLOYEE.

APRIL 10, 1914.

Hon. J. W. BRYAN,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: I read with much interest the article in the Evening Star of April 8 regarding piecework in the office of the Auditor for Post Office Department. I think it referred to the key punchers as the operatives are designated and not to the tabulating machines; the machines used to duplicate money orders are not electrical but are operated by hand. The keys are similar to those on a typewriter; of course, the work is more strenuous, because holes must be punched through the cards. Personally I do not object to the machine work and, so far as I have been able to ascertain, the majority of the employees prefer this system to the old way, namely, assorting and numbering. Under the old system the salaries for assorting were from $660 to $840, and some of those receiving the smaller salary were doing the same amount of work as those receiving the larger. Piecework has done away with that unsatisfactory state of affairs, but another trouble has developed which is similar, discrimination in distributing the work, of which we have three classes. First class, paying 12 cents per hundred; second class, 13½ cents per hundred; and third class, 15 cents. Second class we rarely get in our section, and third class is equally scarce at present, except in one or two cases. We would like the auditor to explain why a few selected employees are favored with the high-priced work.

We are charged $3 per hundred for errors, which seems out of proportion against 12 cents per hundred paid us for the work. We have a number of temporary employees in our office, and the auditor has given a great deal of the second and third class work to them and paid only 12 cents for it; of course, that means loss to regular employees.

All the pieceworkers are worried about leave of absence. We have not the slightest idea of what the auditor's intentions are. Sick leave has been reduced to 15 days, and those who have been ill enough to remain away this year have not been granted leave.

You were misinformed regarding the work being piled on the desk of a girl on leave, so she would have it to do when she returns; that is never done.

If these unfortunate conditions could be remedied and our present ratings for the work be assured—we do not know when Mr. Kram may decide on a reduction—we would be most grateful.

Thanking you and Representative NOLAN for the effort you have made in our behalf.

Most respectfully,

EMPLOYEE.

Of course, no claim is made that piecework operators have work piled up during leave. They have been practically denied leave. This piling up of work applies only to clerks.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 16, 1914.

Representative BRYAN.

SIR: I desire to add my complaint against the sweatshop conditions in the Auditor's Office for the Post Office Department. The terrible strain of piecework and the fact that we are charged $30 a thousand for errors is such as to almost unfit one for work at all. Then we have green cards sent back marked "missing" or "duplicate" from the examiners, and we have to pay for them also. Now, there is no way of proving that these cards have been omitted by us. They are kept overnight and handled by several people who may lose them. Yet everything is charged to the key punchers. As the examiners are rated accordingly as to the number of errors found each day, don't you think it is an incentive for them to charge everything possible to the operative? There are some women who favor piecework, for they say they want the money even at the expense of their health. Is this just to the ones whose health is already so impaired that they can not keep up the strain? Mr. Kram has already transferred many whose health is entirely gone. I have been constantly under the doctor's care for one year.

Sincerely,

AN EMPLOYEE.

Kram takes these easy-worked Congressmen in there and tells them everything is "up on the sixth day;" and the Congressman sighs "What a wonderful man," but the Congressman is the victim of a mental cramming process. The truth is they are nine months behind now on the issued side of the audit and away behind on the paid side. There are clerks down there to-day working, on the issued side, on the fourth quarter of 1911. Let these defenders of this system who know all about this office deny that statement or admit that I know more about the auditor's office than they do. Not only that, but I know about the future intentions of the auditor as to this feature. The auditor is to put several extra clerks onto this old batch of work to-morrow. This is a division where visitors and smoking are not allowed. This has served the purpose now, for he has already made his wonderful record, and his misguided adherents here on the floor have already praised him for his marvelous efficiency. It is time now to catch up the back work. Of course anyone knows that if he had kept the clerks at work on this half billion dollars of money orders which he abandoned, and on the 1911 orders he is yet doing, and on the six months of current work that is behind, we would not have heard so much about his savings for Uncle Sam, for there would not have been any saving, in all probability.

Money-order carbon advices were abolished about the time this new auditing system, by punching cards, was adopted. This effected a tremendous saving, and a great deal of advertising has been done on this account for Mr. Kram and his system.

Auditor Kram is proficient in getting in on the urgent deficiency bill to help him make a record. He calls it Postal Savings System money there, but it is claimed that the record will show that postal savings money goes into this same account to a certain extent—and a very great extent, too. No wonder the Postal Savings Department is not making a good showing.

In the urgent deficiency bill approved March 4, 1913, Mr. Kram gets $49,300 for Postal Savings System, and in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill approved March 4, 1913, he is carried for the identical amount. One of these bills is H. R. 26680 and the other H. R. 28858—same date, same amount. I can not quite understand this, but no doubt Mr. Plausible knows, for he crammed into that very same bill the following paragraph, that was worth another $100,000 to the record of this office for saving. Just read it and ask yourself if you are really reading the solemn enactment of a Congress concerning an auditing department that becomes a laughingstock unless all the postmasters of the country trust it implicitly for its accuracy:

MISCELLANEOUS.

Hereafter the Auditor for the Post Office Department shall not assort and verify the money orders pertaining to postmasters' issued lists covering the period from January 1, 1912, to June 30, 1912: Provided, That the statements for said period and accompanying money orders shall be retained as a part of the record of unpaid money orders required by the act approved May 27, 1908.

I say it is an outrage for Members to stand here on the floor and claim to know so much about this department when they have been doing things so inexcusable as the enactment of the above to help him out. Yet they denounce me for pointing out the facts about this department and its auditor.

On the theory of maintaining discipline, Mr. Kram keeps his clerks intimidated. Certain clerks assert that he made a little address one day to the piece-rate workers about like this: "You folks needn't write letters to the Congressmen. They show me every letter you write. Why, just yesterday, I saw several of them."

I am informed that there is a most estimable lady clerk, from a Southern State, in whose face Kram shook his first one day to impress his power and his authority.

An investigation, properly made, where witnesses can be sworn and clerks will be protected, will reveal conditions in that department that will shame the defenders of Mr. Kram here on this floor. I am informed that a body of women—a dozen or more—waited on the Secretary of the Treasury a year ago concerning conditions in this department, and the Secretary promised to do something. But Mr. Plausible has made the impression that he has saved the United States of America $100,000 and a little more, and so the great Committee on Appropriations and the Congressmen that are gullible are ready to proclaim his praises and grow loud and eloquent as to his efficiency.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's statement about the conditions of this office are so grossly inaccurate that this committee will welcome the adoption of this amendment. The committee has the information desired, if the gentleman would take the trouble to read it. It is hoped that the fact that this amendment will be incorporated in the bill will encourage the gentleman from Washington to make a personal investigation of the facts. I am sure that he will be convinced as others who have done so are convinced that whatever the source of his information, whoever has furnished him with these wild dreams, he has been so far misled that he will regret that he was ever induced to make these statements upon the floor.

Mr. BRYAN. I will state to the gentleman that the worst things I got I obtained from the speech of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox]. He said they came to him and told him it was inhuman.

Mr. COX. Yes; and I refused to investigate on looking the matter up, for I found that the story was not true.

Mr. BRYAN. The gentleman went to Mr. Kram about it?

Mr. COX. No; I went there myself.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, if during the time that this bill has been under consideration the gentleman from Washington had taken one hour and had gone and looked into the matter himself, he would have saved considerable time of this committee and would not have been making these statements. It is for the purpose of having information that will completely refute his statements and show how preposterous they are that the committee hopes that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, as follows:

Strike out the words "the Secretary of the Treasury shall" and insert:

Within 30 days after the passage of this act the President shall appoint a board, consisting of three persons in the employment of the Government, who shall serve without additional compensation, two of whom shall be experienced in mechanical manufacturing. It shall be the duty of said board to make.

Then, at the end of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington, add the following:

And the said board shall also inquire and report to Congress as soon as may be practicable whether such machines or any other articles or materials used in considerable quantities by or for the sole use of the Government can be manufactured advantageously by prison labor controlled by the United States; and if so, at what cost Federal penal institutions can be equipped for such purposes and the system of payment of wages to or for the benefit of convicts so employed that it may be desirable to adopt.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, on that I desire to reserve the point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard upon the point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from Kentucky reserved the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. SHERLEY. I did not. The paragraph now offered being subject to a point of order, none being made, I submit this amendment is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk report the amendment as it would read if agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment as it would read if the amendment to the amendment were agreed to.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Within 30 days after the passage of this act the President shall appoint a board, consisting of three persons in the employment of the Government, who shall serve without additional compensation, and two of whom shall be experienced in mechanical manufacturing. It shall be the duty of said board to make a report on the operation of tabulating and punching machines in the office of the Auditor of the Post Office Department, both as to the efficiency of said machines and as to the requirements made in said office of clerks and employees therein, and the said board shall inquire and report to Congress as soon as may be practicable whether such machines or any other articles or material used in considerable quantities by and for the sole use of the Government can be manufactured advantageously by prison labor controlled by the United States; and if so, at what cost Federal penal institutions can be equipped for such purpose and the system of payment of wages to or for the benefit of convicts so employed that it may be desirable to adopt.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky. The amendment is not germane to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] was itself subject to a point of order. Under the rules of the House, it being subject to a point of order, and such point of order not being made, an amendment to it, if germane to it, is in order, even though as an original proposition it itself would be subject to a point of order. I therefore submit that the amendment offered by myself is germane to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington. The first part of my amendment consists simply in changing from the Secretary of the Treasury as the person who shall make the report to a committee of three men to be appointed by the President. Certainly that is germane to the amendment. The amendment of the gentleman from Washington dealt with the subject of considering the use and cost of certain tabulating machines used in the Post Office in the auditing department. My amendment carries the idea of also considering the advisability of manufacturing such machines by the use of prison labor, with the idea of determining whether that shall be desirable, and, if desirable, the method that may be adopted for equipping the prisons with the machinery necessary to make such machines and for the payment of proper wages to the convicts employed in such manufacture, and it is properly tied to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] provided that the Secretary of the Treasury should report on the efficiency and use of these machines. Now, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] undertakes to amend that amendment of the gentleman from Washington by providing that a committee be appointed to investigate not only that, but to investigate the question of the desirability of manufacturing these machines by convicts in the United States penitentiaries. I suggest to the chairman that an amendment of that kind is not germane to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington, which only provided for a report upon the efficiency and use of these machines now in the department and goes no further, but the gentleman from Kentucky undertakes to introduce an entirely different subject which is not germane to this amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. BRYAN. If the gentleman will permit me just a moment, I submit that anything that refers to a penitentiary and prison labor, in connection with the office of the Auditor for the Post Office Department, presided over by Mr. Kram, I think it is in order.

Mr. FOSTER. I am sure the gentleman does not desire to have this amendment go in so as to investigate the manufacture of these machines in penitentiaries without due consideration of the whole subject.

Mr. BRYAN. I think that anything which refers to convict labor is in order in connection with that department of the Post Office Department.

Mr. FOSTER. I take it the gentleman is not in favor of convict labor in the manufacture of these machines without any further consideration. I realize the intention of the gentleman from Kentucky is an humane one. I am in favor of giving these convicts some useful employment in such a way as not to interfere with free labor of the country. No one, I am sure, here believes in the contract system for convicts. Let us take up this question and solve it in a way that it can be given due consideration.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order. The gentleman from Kentucky says the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington, having been subject to a point of order and that point of order having been withdrawn, any germane amendment may be added to the amendment. In a way that is absolutely correct, and yet the rule has been consistently observed for years in the House that while you may offer an amendment to an amendment or a proposition subject to a point of order, you could not through an amendment introduce a new subject matter. The rule is not quite so broad in offering an amendment to a proposition which was subject to a point of order as it is ordinarily. The Chair has held many times that you could not introduce a new subject matter by an amendment to a proposition, which proposition is subject to a point of order if a point of order is made against the amendment. In other words, while the House may not desire to make a point of order, and no Member of it, upon a proposition submitted, that does not authorize some one else to propose a new proposition as a germane amendment to that, although it might be germane under ordinary circumstances. In my judgment that takes out of the gentleman's amendment the provision authorizing the appointment of a commission. The direction to the Secretary of the Treasury to make a report is an entirely different proposition from ordering the President to appoint a commission to make a report. That is the introduction of a new subject matter entirely. And then the balance of the gentleman's amendment is not germane at all under any circumstances. The amendment of the gentleman from Washington relates only to the tabulating machines in the office of the Auditor for the Post Office Department, and the gentleman from Kentucky proposes to include a whole lot of other things, as I recall. Did it include typewriting machines? And he proposed to have a commission appointed to investigate whether these can be constructed in prison, and that is an entirely different thing, not germane to the provision directing a report upon the machines in the office now in operation. He proposes an amendment telling how or where the machines in that office shall be constructed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair thinks clearly the latter portion of the gentleman's amendment to the amendment is not germane and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the committee for five minutes—I hope I will not take up that much time—touching the purpose of the amendment which I have offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to address the committee for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes also.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not make that request.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, we have been trying on this side to give consideration to the chairman of this subcommittee——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to give the chairman all the consideration possible.

Mr. MANN. But if other gentlemen do not want to give consideration, there is no reason why we should.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of my amendment might not be understood by a mere reading of just the language, and particularly on hearing it hastily read. I took occasion once before to call the attention of this House to what I thought was the indefensible position which the United States Government occupies toward Federal prisoners. These men are now being employed in useless work, they are being employed in the way of getting the least possible results from their labor, and they are being employed so as to give them or their families absolutely no benefit of their labor. I do not know any greater indictment of modern civilization that can be properly brought against it than in its treatment of the unfortunates of life who are put in penal institutions. To confine a man in the penitentiary for years and then to turn him out with practically not a dollar in the world and expect him to make his way with the stigma of prison service upon him is to ask almost the impossible. [Applause.] And I hope that the time is going to come when by some method we can arrange to give a man who has served his term a fair chance to make a useful citizen in America.

It was not with the idea of having prison labor compete with free labor; it was with the idea of expressly avoiding that situation that I offered my amendment. The Government necessarily uses a great quantity of material that these men could be put to the manufacturing of. The product of their labor would not go out into the open market to beat down the price of free labor. It would simply be used by the Government.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. In just a moment. And by paying them a legitimate wage you would not have the situation you have now, where a contractor hires that labor at a totally inadequate price, and thereby is able to make goods at a false cost and to sell them in competition with free labor and undersell the products of such free labor.

Now I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. As to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, I would like to ask if that is not in line with the system in the State of New York and in the State of California and in other States of the Union?

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand it is.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Outside of the fact that you provide an additional measure of payment either to the prisoner or his dependent relatives?

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not at all concerned in the United States Government getting its material cheaper by using prison labor, but I am concerned in giving those men a chance for their future. [Applause.]

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. I will say to the gentleman that I am heartily in accord with his ideas on that subject.

Mr. BRYAN. I find four lines here in the Democratic Textbook that refer exactly to this. But it happens to be from the Progressive Party platform:

> The abolition of the convict contract-labor system, substituting a system of prison production for governmental consumption only and the application of prisoners' earnings to the support of their dependent families.

That is from the platform of the Bull Moose Party.

Mr. SHERLEY. I want to say to the gentleman that I am still in favor of my proposition in spite of what he has read. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRYAN. I am glad you are willing to stand for something good.

Mr. SHERLEY. I can not believe that this House appreciated the motive that actuated me in offering this amendment, else no point of order would have been made against it. I realize that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] properly objects to any competition of prison-made goods with goods made by free labor, and I share with him that view. But I do hope that we will some time authorize a commission to go into this matter to determine the cost of equipping these penitentiaries with the machinery necessary to determine what these men can be best put to, so as to teach them useful trades and provide for paying them such a wage as to enable them when they come out of prison to live the life of honest men with some chance of succeeding; and in cases where they have dependent wives and children, those wives and children will not be thrown upon the charity of the world, but may have something to support them. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a word in reference to the amendment itself. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] has reiterated here in support of his amendment the charges he made when this bill was in its earlier stages. At that time, when he made the same charges, inquiry was made of him as to whether he had any personal knowledge to support them. He answered that he had not, and at the same time gentlemen arose in various parts of the House, who had made personal investigations, and stated that there was no foundation for them. The gentleman from Indiana spoke in reference to this matter, and, as the gentleman from Washington has said, the gentleman from Indiana stated at that time that he had had complaints with reference to this department. And on the strength of that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] has reiterated his charges, notwithstanding that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COX] stated, as I heard at that time and the other Members present heard, that he had made a careful and personal investigation, going not simply to the chief of the department but to the employees themselves, and that he found the charges were utterly without foundation.

Now, the man who is in charge of this department has shown himself to be one of the most efficient and most active and most energetic in the Government service anywhere, and if a man who is conducting his office in that manner is to be assailed as he has been here, without any knowledge of the facts to support it, there is nothing to encourage a Government servant in giving good service. Mr. Chairman, there is no cause for the investigation proposed by this amendment, and it ought to be rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BRYAN. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 20, noes 58.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 71.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to return to page 71 of the bill.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee objects, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, before we leave that section——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not know for what purpose the gentleman from Pennsylvania wants to go back.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, before we leave this section——

Mr. VARE. I want to go back for the purpose——

Mr. BATHRICK. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BATHRICK] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> After line 1, page 145, add the following: "The relative cost of repairs and supplies for such makes of typewriters."

Mr. BATHRICK. That should be after the word "purchase," in line 1. Will the Clerk read that again?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> After the word "purchase," in line 45, insert the following: "The relative cost of repairs and supplies for such makes of typewriters."

Mr. BATHRICK. Now, Mr. Chairman, this amendment will induce valuable information as to the cost of a typewriter to the Government, which is not at all the original cost of the machine.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The provision that remains in the bill merely requires the head of each department to name the number of typewriters and the market cost. There is no investigation.

Mr. BATHRICK. My amendment requires he shall also state what the cost of repairs and supplies is. Will not the committee accept that amendment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. We have no objection to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BATHRICK].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

> SEC. 5. That appropriations made in this or any other act shall not be available for purchase, maintenance, or repair of motor-propelled vehicles unless specific authority be granted by law for such purchase, maintenance, or repair, or unless authority therefor be specifically stated in any appropriation used for such purposes.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against section 5.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] makes a point of order against section 5.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the paper that the Clerk is about to read and offer another. I concede that the point of order is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Now, I have an amendment to offer, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of section 5, stricken out, insert:

"SEC. 5. That appropriations made in this act shall not be available for purchase, maintenance, or repair of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles in the service of any of the executive departments, or other Government establishments of the United States, unless specific authority be granted by the law for such purchase, maintenance, or repair, or unless authority for such expense is stated in specific terms in any general appropriation used to defray the same."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to go back to page 71, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE] asks unanimous consent to go back to page 71, for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire what the amendment is.

Mr. MANN. What is the amendment?

Mr. VARE. I want to offer the following amendment: On page 71, line 7, after the figures "$4,000," insert "experienced builder and mechanic, $2,500."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, let the Clerk report it.

Mr. FOSTER. Let us hear the gentleman's request.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I will say that that was the place that was in the current law and was left out of this bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What was that?

Mr. MANN. Under the Quartermaster Corps.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I want to reserve the right to object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will have the right to object to the unanimous consent. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VARE] asks unanimous consent to return to page 71, for the purpose of offering an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say to the committee that this is a place under the office of the Quartermaster Corps. In the current law there is carried an item for an experienced builder and mechanic, $2,500. That is left out of this bill. Was it intentionally left out?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. The Quartermaster General asked that it be left out. He did not want it. If that is the purpose of the gentleman's request, Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; I object.

Mr. FOSTER. And I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report. The Chair will inquire of the gentleman where this amendment is to be inserted?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. As a separate paragraph, following the one just adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, between lines 15 and 16, page 145, the following, as a new paragraph:

"There shall be submitted hereafter in the annual Book of Estimates a detailed statement for the fiscal year next preceding the one in which such Book of Estimates is submitted, showing the number of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles in the service of the Government, and as to each one the purposes for which used, the purchase price thereof, and the appropriation from which purchased.

"No expense shall be incurred hereafter for maintenance of more than one passenger-carrying vehicle for the use of any official of any executive department or other Government establishment of the United States, and any such vehicles now owned by the Government in excess of one for any official or employee shall be sold and the proceeds thereof covered into the Treasury."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment, that it is pure legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The point of order is well taken, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That all laws or parts of laws to the extent they are inconsistent with this act are repealed.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question. I move to strike out the last word. We both have moved to strike out the last word, but the gentleman is entitled to recognition.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I moved to strike out the last word, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question in regard to this?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is there any effect of this provision? Here is section 6—and this is carried in the law from year to year—which says that "all laws and parts of laws to the extent they are inconsistent with this act are repealed." Here is a legislative law that fixes the salary of some man different from the salary fixed in the current appropriation law, and this is a current appropriation law and this is a part of the current appropriation bill. I think really that is repealed. But we have it up in the air under these provisions.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I am very much impressed with the wisdom of what the gentleman said, and I am disposed to offer an amendment which will cure that trouble. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the pro forma amendment, and offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] asks unanimous consent to withdraw the pro forma amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 145 strike out section 6 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 6. That all laws or parts of laws to the extent they are inconsistent with the rates of salaries or compensation appropriated by this act or any other act for the fiscal year 1915, or any subsequent year, are repealed, and the rates of salaries or compensation of officers or employees of the United States as appropriated for in any regular annual appropriation act shall hereafter constitute the salaries or rates of compensation of such officers or employees, respectively, until changed by subsequent annual rate of appropriation or other law."

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. FOWLER. I make a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. MANN. What is the point of order? It may not be subject to a point of order.

Mr. FOWLER. The point of order is that it is new legislation, which carries with it provisions enhancing the salaries of officers above the amounts fixed by permanent law. There are a number of salaries carried in this bill which are against the provisions of the statute. Many of them are above the statutory provision, and some of them are below the statutory provision. Those below the statutory provision are salaries of laboring men, and those above the statutory provision as a rule are salaries of men who are not necessarily laboring men. This is new legislation, which can not under the rules of this House be tacked on to an appropriation bill. I trust that the gentleman will withdraw his amendment. There was a plain understanding on the floor of this House that there would be an honest effort on the part of this committee to classify and equalize the salaries of the various officers and employees of the public service. Relying upon that statement, I withdrew further points of order against the increased salaries in the bill. And now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair hear me on this proposition? Has the Chair sustained the point of order against the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not ruled on the point of order. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The gentleman states that there was an understanding on this floor that certain things would be done. Does the gentleman believe that the amendment I have offered is in conflict with any statement that I made on the floor?

Mr. FOWLER. I do.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The gentleman is very emphatic about it. What statement did I make that does not conform to this proposed amendment? I wish the gentleman would state it, because I keep my word.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I had interposed many points of order against the increase of high-salaried men above the provisions of the statute. It was a very painful duty that I felt I ought to perform——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Will the gentleman answer my question?

Mr. FOWLER. Because it looked as though I was doing it single-handed.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Will the gentleman answer my question?

Mr. FOWLER. The distinguished chairman of the subcommittee made a statement on the floor of this House, in substance——

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will please confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. FOWLER. I shall be glad to do so, except that I want to answer the question propounded by the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, time is precious, and it takes the gentleman so long to answer the question that I will withdraw it, and I will make this statement——

Mr. FOWLER. I have not yielded the floor to the gentleman except for a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has stated that the amendment I have offered is not in conformity with the statement that I made on the floor. The statement that I made on the floor was followed by the amendment to which I referred, and was objected to by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK]. I thought then it was in conformity with what I said, but I do not want anybody to be put in a false light. I do not want to mislead anybody, and if the gentleman from Illinois says that that amendment is not in conformity with my statement, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I do not know how the Chair is going to rule, but I think the House ought to be informed on this point of order. As I caught the reading of the amendment it is a very important one. If it is held to be in order and is adopted, it will materially change the practices of the House.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is a matter that can be discussed later.

Mr. MURDOCK. I should like to point out to the chairman, if he will permit me, that there are a number of salaries provided in this bill which are statutory. Where the Committee on Appropriations in its superior wisdom increases one of these salaries, it is within the power of any member of the Committee of the Whole to make the point of order that the increase changes existing law, and that the increase is out of order for that reason. This amendment which is offered takes that power away from the individual member.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MURDOCK. It permits the Committee on Appropriations to cover into law all these increases of salary.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman does not mean that this amendment will prevent Members taking out of appropriation bills on points of order any increases of salaries reported by the committee.

Mr. MURDOCK. It prevents the individual Member from making a point of order against an increase of salary over the amount provided in the statute. It takes away from the Member a right that every individual in this House has possessed for over a hundred years.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman has not done it in the 11 years he has been here. He has not made that point of order.

Mr. MURDOCK. Points of order ought to be made and are made frequently. Here is a proposition to cover into the appropriation bill as permanent law all the increases. Such a proposition ought not to be passed on hurriedly and in this fashion.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this bill in the beginning provides—

> That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full compensation for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, for the objects hereinafter expressed.

If section 6 as it is printed is not incorporated in the bill, it makes it possible for any person whose compensation is carried in this bill at less than the sum fixed in some statute to bring an action in the Court of Claims to recover the difference between the amount appropriated and the amount fixed by statute.

Section 6 as it appears in the bill is clearly legislation and subject to a point of order. It changes the law in so far as salaries are appropriated for in this bill. Every statute which fixes a salary at a higher or lower rate is changed. The purpose of the amendment as offered is to make definite what has been intended. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] states that this amendment, if adopted, would take away the right exercised by hundreds of Members of the House. It does nothing of the kind. If adopted, any provision reported in the bill which will provide compensation in excess of the fixed compensation would still be subject to a point of order and would go out on a point of order. But what it does do, Mr. Chairman, if adopted, would be to prevent what has happened a number of times during this session—to prevent provisions in the bill providing for compensation of officials carried for 10, 15, 20, and, in some instances, as long as 40 years from being eliminated from the bill because of some forgotten statute fixing the compensation at less than has been paid for the long series of years.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. And it would make the work of the Committee on Appropriations permanent law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It would not make the work of the Committee on Appropriations permanent law; the gentleman does not comprehend what is being done.

Mr. MURDOCK. If it is in order under this amendment to make a point of order against an increase of salary, how is it possible to bring in an amendment defeating the right of an individual to make a point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will read the paragraph proposed to be stricken out, he will notice that all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with this act are repealed. If there could be any more comprehensive provision drafted to be included in this bill, I would be glad to have the gentleman suggest it. The amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina is a narrowing of the scope of the provision rather than any enlargement of its scope.

Mr. MURDOCK. Under the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina it would be in the power of the Committee on Appropriations to enact all the salaries in this bill into permanent law. That can only be done by a separate bill; there are some limitations even on the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Committee on Appropriations has not now and would not have any such power. The gentleman ought not to make that statement as to the unlimited power of the Committee on Appropriations, in view of what has been done in this House in the last two or three days, in which he has been a very important factor.

Mr. MURDOCK. The Committee on Appropriations occasionally slips up, but it will not slip up in the future if this amendment is adopted.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No member of the committee desires to mislead anyone. The purpose of this amendment is to fix a statutory salary or compensation for the various positions carried in this bill as they are now. Hereafter if any attempt were made to increase the compensation it would still be subject to a point of order.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. If the purpose is to fix a statutory salary by amendment, does not that change existing law—which is in violation of law?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; because the provision that we propose to strike out repeals the law, and that provision is not objected to.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman says if we adopt this amendment it will cover salaries carried in the bill. What if next year the committee brings in an increase of salary, and another amendment covering these and making them permanent law, where does the individual Member of the House get a remedy?

Mr. MANN. It will be subject to a point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The committee has never attempted to cover into permanent law the suggestion that an increase of compensation may be made. What is being attempted here is to fix permanently the compensation that has been paid to the officials of the Government for a great many years, to which objection has not been made except by one Member of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The ground on which it is contended that this amendment is in order is that section 6 in the beginning was subject to a point of order, and therefore any amendment that is germane would be in order. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from New York to the language of this amendment—that the rate of salary or compensation appropriated by this or any other act for the fiscal year 1915, or any subsequent year, are repealed. Now, does the gentleman from New York believe that section 6 affected any other act except the present bill, and if it did not, would an amendment proposing a repeal of the law of any other act or any other year be in order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the point of order is based on that ground, I concede that it is well taken. It has not been suggested, and I did not know that it had been noticed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it is perfectly evident that the language in the bill is subject to a point of order. That seems to have escaped the attention of my beloved friend from Kansas, who probably did not have his attention attracted to the language of the bill. Section 6 is legislation. But what does it do? It proposes to repeal all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this bill.

The statutes fixing permanent salaries are repealed by that provision to the extent that we have fixed the salaries which conflict with salaries appropriated for in this bill in every kind of an act wherever it may be. And no point of order was made on section 6. Thereupon the gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment.

There can be no possible question about its being in order to amend this section by making these salaries in the bill practically permanent law, so far as this act is concerned. Now, the question is as to whether it can apply to other acts. Here in the bill is a provision for general legislation. It applies to any act of Congress, wherever it may be, fixing a salary that is in any way covered by this bill or in any way inconsistent with this act—a general provision of law. Certainly we have the authority to extend the law if we desire to. This legislation does not affect one act of Congress only; the provision in the bill affects many acts of Congress which have been cited to the Chair during the progress of the consideration of the bill. If the committee were only to propose a repeal of one act of Congress, it would not be in order to offer an amendment to repeal another act of Congress; but where you have a measure that would repeal several acts of Congress, you can add another, under the familiar rule which the Chair will readily call to mind.

If you are dealing with one subject matter in a bill and stop there, it is subject to a point of order to propose another; but if you are dealing with two or more, you can add another of like character. That is what it is proposed to do now. This repealing proposition does not deal with one act of Congress; it deals with all acts of Congress which fix salaries that are not consonant with the provisions of this act.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit the Chair to ask him a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct; but the proposed amendment deals with an entirely different class of salaries and compensation carried in all acts of Congress, and therefore others than are referred to in this particular bill.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but here are a number of acts of Congress of which the Chair admits we can repeal parts. The question now is, Can we go a little further and repeal another part of it? That is all that is involved. If we can repeal parts of the same kind of 40 statutes, we can repeal additional parts, so far as its being germane is concerned.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. The language of the amendment goes further than repeal and makes the salaries fixed in any prior appropriation bill the statutory salary in the future, so that as the amendment now reads it goes much further than to repeal the acts.

Mr. MANN. That is true; but in repealing the act we can supply an act in place of it. This is what the amendment does, and it is not subject to the objection that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] made. The amendment, if agreed to, would provide that the salaries fixed in this act shall be the salaries to be considered by the Chair next winter in considering the next appropriation act, and although a permanent law may exist somewhere fixing the salary of a particular individual at more or less than the amount provided in this act, yet the salary fixed in this act shall be considered the legal salary fixed here. No one can propose to increase it without that proposition being subject to a point of order. The Committee on Appropriations can not increase it. This would not increase the power of the Committee on Appropriations in the slightest degree.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. MURDOCK. Is not that precisely what has happened here? The Committee on Appropriations has appropriated salaries above the permanent law. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] made points of order, and the Committee on Appropriations now brings in an amendment covering their increase into permanent law. Can not the Committee on Appropriations increase the salaries next year, and then bring in another amendment covering that language?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I said a while ago that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] had not discovered that this whole thing was subject to a point of order if the point of order had been made.

Mr. MURDOCK. But that proposition does not cover the power of the Committee on Appropriations to put through other amendments?

Mr. MANN. Certainly it does. Here is section 6, which is subject to a point of order. I have made the point of order to this section many times in these appropriation bills for the very purpose of preventing amendments to it. Many times during my career in this House I have made a point of order on the repealing section of the bill. Anybody can make the point of order upon it, and if this amendment which is now proposed should become the law, that section would never again appear in an appropriation bill.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. BRYAN. The gentleman says that the repealing clause includes several acts, and that therefore you can add another under the rule. Can we add, for instance, the employers' liability law and repeal that as an amendment?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman offers an amendment to that effect, I will express my opinion upon it at that time. I have discovered so much trouble always in considering actual questions involved that I do not, as my friend from Washington does, chase will-o'-the-wisps.

Mr. BRYAN. But the gentleman says it does not have to be germane.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I did not say it had not to be germane. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I am arguing that these provisions are germane, and that is the purpose of my argument.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, unless the Chair is ready to rule I would like to be heard for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman for a moment.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations I should like to see an amendment of this kind adopted, but the question before the Chair is very far-reaching and relates to the question of what is in order as an amendment of a proposition, itself not in order, no point of order being made to the proposition. It is exceedingly important in my opinion that the Chair should carefully consider the rule on so important a question, because the Chair realizes that if it be held that an amendment not in order, having been passed, can be amended by any number of amendments not in order, without the point of order being made successfully, we have reached a rather dangerous point in legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. If they are germane.

Mr. MONDELL. Of course, if they are germane. This amendment is germane, but I want to call the attention of the Chair to the statement on page 359 of the Digest, bearing directly upon this particular amendment:

A paragraph which proposes legislation being permitted to remain may be perfected by a germane amendment, but this does not permit an amendment which adds additional legislation.

Now, the amendment pending clearly adds additional legislation. It adds legislation that not only refers to this bill but refers to all other appropriation bills. It adds legislation that not only refers to the salaries this year carried in this bill but salaries carried in bills in the future. Clearly this is new and additional legislation. And such an amendment can not be made, even though it may be germane to an amendment which was itself subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. Section 6 of this bill reads as follows:

That all laws or parts of laws to the extent they are inconsistent with this act are repealed.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] offers an amendment which proposes to strike out that language and insert the following:

That all laws or parts of laws to the extent they are inconsistent with rates of salaries or compensation appropriated by this or any other act, for the fiscal year 1915 or any subsequent year, are repealed.

The Chair thinks undoubtedly the extending of this language to any other act or any other fiscal year is not germane and that the point of order against the amendment is well taken. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 145, strike out section 6 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 6. That all laws or parts of laws to the extent they are inconsistent with rates of salaries or compensation appropriated by this act are repealed; and the rates of salaries or compensation of officers or employees herein appropriated shall constitute the rate or salary or compensation of such officers or employees, respectively, until otherwise fixed by annual rate of appropriation or other law."

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. On what ground does the gentleman from Illinois make the point of order?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that is offered is in effect a special or separate paragraph. It is not an amendment to any amendment to the bill or any provision of the bill. It is in effect a separate paragraph entirely, by substitution. It does not purport to be an amendment to any portion of this bill whatever. Mr. Chairman, the section that it purports to strike out reads as follows:

That all laws or parts of laws to the extent they are inconsistent with this act are repealed.

Section 6 as originally carried in the bill does not purport to deal with or fix the salaries of officers and employees of the Government. The amendment offered by the gentleman, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, purports to deal with the salaries of all officers and employees of the Government carried in this bill, to the extent that it undertakes to fix what the salaries shall hereafter be. If it were an amendment, Mr. Chairman, to section 6 of this act it would not be germane, because it undertakes to deal with a subject matter with which section 6 does not deal. For that reason, Mr. Chairman, although section 6 is subject to a point of order not interposed by anyone, the amendment itself under the rules of the House is subject to a point of order, because it is not germane to the subject matter of section 6.

It may be said that section 6 deals with the repeal of certain laws that are in conflict with this act, which carries provisions for increases of salaries not authorized by permanent law. Undoubtedly section 6 does not undertake to deal directly with salaries and can not be so construed, and the question of salaries would not have been in the mind of any Member on the floor of this House had it not been for points of order raised against excessive increases of salary above permanent law, because there are some provisions carried in this bill that practically are against existing law, and every Member of this House would have construed section 6 to have applied directly to those provisions of the bill not relating to salaries. It is presumed, Mr. Chairman, that this bill appropriates salaries only in harmony with existing law where there is existing law fixing such salares, but I am sorry to say, Mr. Chairman, that is an exceedingly violent presumption.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, we are entitled to hear that colloquy over at the Speaker's table.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's point of order is well taken [laughter], and the gentleman from Illinois will proceed. [Applause.]

Mr. FOWLER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to take up the time of the committee further, but I do desire to emphasize this, that section 6 does not deal with salaries directly at all, and no one could so construe section 6. The amendment is a separate paragraph in itself and deals directly with salaries, and undertakes to fix them for all time to come, unless they should be changed by future appropriation bills, and in that event it makes such appropriation bills permanent law. I think, Mr. Chairman, it is clear that, inasmuch as this amendment undertakes to constitute a separate paragraph and to deal with a question not dealt with by section 6, it is clearly subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to hear the gentleman from New York on this point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is clearly within the rule and does not go beyond the salaries in the current law. In the pending bill section 6 repeals all laws inconsistent——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to hear the gentleman on this phase of this amendment, which says:

And the rates of salaries or compensation of officers or employees herein provided shall constitute the rate of salary or compensation of such officers or employees, respectively, until otherwise fixed by annual rate of appropriation or other law.

Does not that go further than the provision now contained in section 6?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Section 6 proposes to repeal a number of provisions of different laws. A repeal of the law is equivalent to its amendment, for all parliamentary purposes, and this amendment proposes merely to modify instead of repeal outright. The repeal of the law is a modification of the law.

Mr. ANDERSON. Could I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is it?

Mr. ANDERSON. I merely wanted to ask the gentleman what law section 6 repeals?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It repeals every statute which fixes the compensation of an official at a different sum than provided in this act. If the provision were not in this bill, persons carried here at compensation less than statutory compensation could recover for the balance in the Court of Claims. But they can not do it with this provision.

Mr. ANDERSON. Does the gentleman contend that the mere fact that this act fixes a different or other rate of compensation than is now fixed by law, repeals the existing wage?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I can not debate this with the gentleman. I wish to argue for the benefit of the Chair. It is very apparent that section 6 repeals those provisions of various statutes which fix a compensation which is inconsistent with the provisions of this bill. The most notable authority is the ruling of Mr. Speaker Reed, that to a provision in a bill purporting to amend one section of a law an amendment proposing to repeal or to amend another section of the law is not in order. But if the provision in the bill purports to repeal or to amend two or more provisions, then amendments are in order to repeal or to amend other sections.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not at present. I wish to state what I have to say for the benefit of the Chair. The gentleman can make his own argument later. The repeal of a statute which fixes the compensation of an officer changes the law. This amendment modifies the law. It can not be that we can repeal the statute fixing a salary absolutely, and can not, as a substitute for such a suggestion, fix a different salary. Suppose, for instance, there were in this bill a provision to repeal a statute fixing the compensation of the President of the United States, and no point of order was made against that provision, would it not be in order as an amendment to fix some compensation different from the compensation proposed to be repealed?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman yield there to the Chair?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Would the amendment to it authorize the committee in the future to fix salaries in this bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. This amendment does not authorize the committee in the future to fix salaries. It provides that the salaries shall be fixed at this amount.

Mr. MURDOCK. Until——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. Until changed.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The committee does not fix the compensation. Laws fix compensation. The recommendation of the committee that compensation should be different would not at all change or fix the compensation. This amendment provides that the compensation of these officers which is changed in this bill shall be continued at the designated rate until a different rate is fixed.

The CHAIRMAN. Just at that point. The gentleman from Illinois on Tuesday contended very strenuously that that identical provision authorized the Committee on Appropriations to change the existing law by making the salary different from what it had been. Now, is that the——

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is not true, Mr. Chairman. A provision recommended by a committee in a bill does not have any effect of law any more than a proposition to amend which is submitted on the floor of the House.

Here are certain salaries fixed by law. This provision in the bill proposes to repeal those laws. As a substitute for that provision it is proposed that the compensation shall be fixed in accordance with the provisions of the amendment; that is, fixed as indicated in this current bill until changed either by some separate statute or by an enactment in some future appropriation bill. But the Chair must see the difference between fixing it by an enactment and an attempt to change it simply upon the recommendation of the committee or a proposal in the House. It is the law which will control. This does not provide that this compensation shall be at this rate until some committee of the House proposes that it shall be at a different rate. That is not proposed and not intended. But the compensation shall be as fixed in these bills or until the rate is changed in some future law, whether the rate be changed in a statute which is not a general appropriation act or whether it be fixed in some general appropriation act.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I realize, or think I realize, the importance of this matter, and I want to ask the gentleman if it is his opinion that if this should pass, and, say, next year, the Committee on Appropriations should bring in as an integral part of its bill an increase over that which is fixed in the present act, would it be subject to the point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Of course. That is the purpose of it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not want to take the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] off his feet, but that is the point I wanted to suggest to the Chair, namely, the language "until otherwise fixed by annual rate of appropriation or other law" does not confer upon the Appropriations Committee any power to bring in and make in order in the bill a provision changing the salary from what it may be fixed at in the present act; but it is simply a description to define that the present act shall constitute the law touching these salaries until such change. In other words, that shall be the law until it is changed by law, and it can only be changed by law and can only be brought to the House free from a point of order by a committee having authority to report a change, and then the House must act on it, though of course it may be brought up and, without a point of order being made, be considered. But the language "until otherwise fixed by annual rate of appropriation or other law" in no way enlarges the power of the Committee on Appropriations touching an appropriation matter.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think that the clear statement made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] is true; but it will change the practice to this extent, will it not, that the salaries will be fixed on appropriation bills hereafter, rather than otherwise?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is true, and that is now the law with respect to the Agricultural Department employees, to which no objection was made when it was done in fixing the salaries in the appropriation act for the current year.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, it is not necessarily true that they will be made on appropriation bills.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It will be possible, whereas it is impossible now?

Mr. SHERLEY. It will be no more possible in the future than it is now. The only effect of the amendment is this, that instead of running through all the previous enactments of Congress to discover what is the law touching the salary of any place, you make this act which you are now passing the basis of the law to determine what is the legal salary. Now, to change it in the future the Committee on Appropriations and Congress would have no more power than it now has under the law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. For instance, the current appropriation bill for the Department of Agriculture provides that—

Hereafter every officer or employee of the Department of Agriculture whose rate of compensation is specified herein shall receive compensation at the rate so specified.

I wish to state to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] that I believe that the statement he made is in accord with my own belief, and that is that if, at some other time, the compensation of some official in one of these appropriation bills should be increased or decreased from the sum carried in the current law, thereafter that would be the legal compensation.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is true.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not the slightest doubt about it, and I do not wish to mislead anyone as to what this amendment will accomplish or what its purpose is.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will yield for a moment, I wish to say I agree to that; but is not this also true, that you would not make in order on a future appropriation bill an appropriation changing existing law any more than you could do it now?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not wish such authority, and if I believed the amendment had that effect I should antagonize it, because, while there is continual ground for irritation at the restrictions to legislation upon appropriation bills, yet anyone who has ever reviewed the history of the development of our parliamentary procedure knows that, as a matter of absolute necessity, it was imperative to restrict the right to legislate on the appropriation bills in order to permit Congress to do business. Deadlocks resulted so frequently between the two Houses on account of legislative provisions in the bills granting the necessary money to conduct the Government that this procedure was forced.

I do not believe that it is best or wisest to attempt to modify or change the compensation of officials generally upon the appropriation bills. Doing it piecemeal has resulted in the present inequalities and injustices that are found at this time in the compensation paid to different officials. But we have this situation, Mr. Chairman—we had it on the District bill, and we have had it on this bill: Here are officials performing certain services, receiving for a number of years a certain compensation, without objection on the part of anybody, and without any question as to the propriety of the amounts paid for the services rendered; and simply because in the original statutes creating the positions a rate of compensation was fixed less than the compensation at which it has been carried for years, points of order were interposed, and many items eliminated from the bill. I believe it has been a very costly procedure to the House, both in time and money, without effecting any good result. If we can not get a general statute passed, completely reclassifying the rates of compensation paid to officials of the Government, I believe this is the best and wisest thing to do at the present time.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] states that the phrase "until otherwise fixed by annual rate of appropriation or other law" fixes the time in the future to which the salaries in this act shall remain as permanent law, and the gentleman from Kentucky is correct about that. It is affirmative legislation to that extent.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what has that to do with section 6, and how is it germane to section 6, which deals with repealing clauses only? It has nothing whatever to do with it. The original section 6 simply repeals all laws in conflict with this law. This amendment not only does that, but says that this shall be permanent law in the future. Clearly it can not be germane.

In addition to that, the phrase "until otherwise fixed by annual rate of appropriation or other law" would permit the Committee on Appropriations to increase in a future appropriation bill every salary that is fixed in this bill. And why? Supposing in an affirmative statute fixing the salary of an officer of the Government at, we will say, $6,000 a year the language should be that the salary of this officer shall be $6,000 per year until otherwise fixed in an appropriation bill. Who will say that that would not authorize the Committee on Appropriations to change that statute?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It does not say "in an appropriation bill." It says:

Until otherwise fixed by annual rate of appropriation or other law.

Mr. LENROOT. "By annual rate of appropriation."

Mr. FITZGERALD. That does not say "by appropriation bill."

Mr. LENROOT. What does "annual rate of appropriation" mean?

Mr. SHERLEY. The difference is this: There is a distinction between what the committee can do in order, in reporting a bill, and what Congress can do by passing a bill that has been reported. Now, I grant you that if Congress should pass an appropriation bill changing a salary, that change would then become the law in place of this act.

Mr. LENROOT. Exactly.

Mr. SHERLEY. But it does not follow from that that the Committee on Appropriations would be in order in reporting a bill carrying such a change in law, and that is the distinction.

Mr. LENROOT. That must follow from the first premise which the gentleman states; because the very fact which prevents the committee from increasing the appropriation is that if it did merely increase the appropriation, without any other language, it would not change existing law.

Mr. SHERLEY. But will the gentleman think for a moment of the distinction between the effect of an act, and a rule of the House touching the power of a committee. There are many things that committees can not do in reporting bills on this floor; but after the bills get here they may be amended, no point of order being made, or they may be amended elsewhere, so that the law then presents a proposition which could not have been presented in order in the first instance. And yet, having become the law, it is binding until changed, and that is the distinction.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, in reply I will say that if this law permits a salary to be changed in an appropriation bill, it follows that the Appropriation Committee has the right to make that change in the bill when reported to the House.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will yield right there, the present law permits a change to be made by law, but that is different from the right in order to propose such change in a bill. There is no law on the statute book, and no law could be written onto a statute book, that would prevent a change of that law by an appropriation bill.

Mr. LENROOT. I understand that perfectly.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is all that is involved here.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to suggest to the gentleman something that has worried the Chair a little bit. This section 6 says that all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed. It repeals every organic act fixing a statutory salary, and leaves the salaries here as the salaries fixed. Now, if that is correct, why is it not germane for Congress to fix for the future the manner in which you shall change the organic act, because this becomes the organic act?

Mr. LENROOT. Because in this repealing clause we have no right, under the rule of germaneness, to legislate with reference to anything else other than repeal; and if there is any defect so as to make these salaries permanent law until otherwise fixed, that is a defect in the act itself that can not be cured by an amendment to a repealing clause.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to make this suggestion: Section 6 is not new legislation; it is declaratory of the common law. It was never subject to a point of order. It is simply surplusage, and would be the law if it had not been in the bill. The amendment is new legislation and is subject to a point of order. Whether you put into the bill that all laws inconsistent shall be repealed or not, they are repealed by the last expression of the legislative will. That is a general principle simply repeated in the bill. The point of order should have been sustained, but, however that may be, we are confronted here with an entirely new proposition. If it goes into the bill, we make permanent law every increase of salary that may find its way into this bill before final action thereon. I am not prepared to do that in advance and without debate. It is the worst form of rider on an appropriation bill that has yet been proposed.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say to the Chair——

Mr. CALDER. I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is the point of order. If the gentleman from Illinois wants to be heard, the Chair will hear him.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point that the power of the amendment confers on future appropriation committees the right to increase a salary above the salary that is carried in this bill and then make that appropriation permanent law. There is no doubt about it. That is something that has never been done in the past and goes further than any amendment I have ever heard of before. In other words, if this bill carries a salary of $6,000 for a judge of one of the courts and this amendment passes, it will make that salary permanent law. It goes further than that and gives the Appropriation Committee the right to increase the salary, say, to $7,000 in the next appropriation bill, and makes that increase permanent law instead of the permanent law that is then on our statute books.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. My colleague just stated that if the amendment were adopted and this bill becomes a law, it would be permanent law?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. He says it would give power to the Committee on Appropriations to increase a salary?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. It would not give them any power except to recommend an increase of salary. It would not give them the power to increase a salary.

Mr. FOWLER. That is not the point. This amendment gives power to the Committee on Appropriations to make permanent law. If any future appropriation bill should carry an increase in salary it will make that increase permanent law instead of existing permanent law, and that is not the rule. The rule now is that where a salary is fixed by permanent law no appropriation bill can supersede the permanent law unless it is made permanent in itself by appropriate language.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair has heard with some patience the arguments on each side of this question. Undoubtedly it is subject to two interpretations. Section 6 of the present bill repeals virtually all the organic acts fixing salaries carried in this bill. Therefore the passage of the bill with section 6 in its present condition will repeal the organic act and leave current law as the statutory law governing salaries. The proposed amendment provides not only that the present organic act fixing salaries shall be repealed, but adds that the rate of salaries or compensation appropriated by this act shall constitute the salary or compensation of such officers and employees, respectively. That is fixed under the proposed amendment until otherwise fixed by annual rate of appropriation or other law. Now, the only difference between the section 6 as it now exists in the bill and the proposed amendment is the provision by which you may change this existing law. It occurs to the Chair that it is clearly within the rule of germaneness and therefore in order. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, there are 435 Members of this House, and there are about 10 important appropriation committees. Most of the work of the House is done by these great appropriation committees. The man who is sent here by a constituency and who gets upon one of the appropriation committees has infinitely more activity than the man who is not fortunate enough to obtain a place upon one of them. So there is in this House a distinct line between degrees of activity, the line which divides those who are on the appropriation committees and those who are not. The great majority of the Members are not on these major and important committees. Now, the membership of the House is to-day asked to take a step which further emphasizes the power of these already dominant committees. Since the beginning of the Government the practice has been that the members of an appropriation committee had this limitation upon them—that they must observe the statutory law in appropriating for salaries.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK. I will not; let me complete my statement. The Committee on Appropriations has not the right, within the rule, to report to the House a salary above that provided in permanent law, and when the Committee on Appropriations does that it violates the rules of the House, for the rules of the House have held inviolable the right of the individual Member to make a point of order against an increase of salary made by the Appropriations Committee over the statutory provision; that is, all the membership which does not serve on appropriation committees has had preserved its right to hold the appropriations within the law and the rule.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, if the gentleman will yield right there, and I do not mean to embarrass the gentleman, but that very condition that he has just stated is not changed one iota.

Mr. MURDOCK. It is. That is the infamy of this thing. Here is a bill containing 145 pages, carrying some $36,000,000. In that bill there are the salaries of all the Members here, the salaries of the Senators, the salary and allowances to the President and to the courts and to every branch of this great governmental establishment. And what are you proposing to do?

You propose to cover into permanent law here to-day the action of one committee of this House, the Committee on Appropriations. I say to the membership here that there has not been until now a time in my service in this House when this thing could have been done within a period of two hours. If this proposed change should be correct, if it is justifiable, why does not the Committee on Appropriations bring in the proposal as a separate proposition and have it argued out? The Chair has just said that there are two constructions possible on this rule. Who here knows what the construction will be next year? Who knows but that another Committee on Appropriations a little bit later will claim the right under this proposal made to-day to write the salaries into permanent law against any point of order?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK. The truth is that the membership here is surrendering its rights, and it ought to vote this amendment down.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] has become very much excited about a matter that he does not understand. In the first place, it is not true that the Members of this House are divided in their importance by their position upon committees. I think it might well be said that the most important Member of this House—at least the most prominent, if not the most influential in many respects—is a gentleman who does not happen to have membership upon any committee in this House. Instead of serving on committees, he spends his time on the floor. I refer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

What does this amendment do? The gentleman speaks of this bill as carrying the compensation of the Members of the House. Has the gentleman from Kansas any desire to change it? Is there anything in this amendment that would make it possible for anyone to change it? There is carried in this bill, and there has been for years, the compensation of most of the employees of the Government in the city of Washington. It does not carry any of the employees in the Department of Agriculture, because they are carried in the agricultural bill. It does not carry the employees of the Bureau of Mines, the Geological Survey, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, the Bureau of Fisheries, and a number of other important services. But certain employees, whose compensation was fixed at the organization of the departments, are carried in this bill. From time to time, as the departments have grown, additional employees have been added in the departments in Washington—not by the passage of some separate law, but by the inclusion of the employees upon appropriation bills. Under the rulings that have been made, that is not law of such a character as will authorize the carrying of the provision in the future years if objection be made that it is in violation of the rules. It was not, as the gentleman from Kansas asserted, at the very beginning of the Government that this practice of excluding legislation from appropriation bills was initiated. It was not until 1837 that the first rule was adopted prohibiting legislation on appropriation bills.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be some misunderstanding about the effect of the adoption of this amendment. I do not know whether I understand it myself, but I think I do. I want to ask if this is correct: The effect, and the only effect, of the adoption of this amendment, if it shall remain in the law, will be that the salaries carried in this bill, as fixed in the bill when it shall finally pass, will be the permanent salaries. Is that correct?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not wholly, because I think it does more than that.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. What else does it do?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If at some time in the future, when the legislative bill becomes a law, a salary in this bill is carried at a different sum, that would be the permanent law. For instance, let me illustrate; that is the easiest way: The compensation of the Secretary of the Treasury is carried in the bill at $12,000, in accordance with the statute. If at some time in the future the legislative bill should become a law with a provision appropriating for the compensation of the Secretary of the Treasury a greater or less sum than $12,000, then the amount that would then be carried would constitute the legal salary for the future, after the enactment of that law.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. So long as the present rules of the House remain the same, any increase would be subject to a point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly. What is in the minds of the Members is this, that if this amendment be adopted, when a bill would be reported next year, if the committee reporting the bill desired to increase the compensation of some official and put it at a rate in excess of that carried in the present bill, that the Members could not take that increase out by the interposition of a point of order.

I should not wish such an amendment to be adopted, and I would be opposed to any provision which would take away the right——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman get enough time to yield to me for a moment to enable me to ask him a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my time may be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MURDOCK. If a salary carried in this bill at $6,000 goes into the bill with this amendment added at the end of the bill, goes over to the Senate, and the Senate increases that salary to $8,000, then that $8,000 salary becomes permanent law for the future, until changed, of course?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the $8,000 remained in the bill, be enacted into law, that would undoubtedly make that the legal salary.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him in that same connection? A concrete case was referred to a moment ago. Suppose a bill of this kind carries $12,000 for the salary of the Secretary of the Treasury, and, now, suppose the salary becomes the law and we pass the amendment that is now pending here. Suppose next year the Committee on Appropriations in reporting the bill increases the salary, say, to $13,000. Now, would any Member on the floor of the House feel he can not make the point of order because it would violate the amendment now pending?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; the point of order would lie against the proposition, of course, just as it does now. It does not change in any way the rule in that respect. It does not change the rules of the House; it can not change the rules of the House.

Mr. LLOYD. But you could not invoke any previous statute enacted.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. For instance, if there is carried in this bill——

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. If this bill is passed with this amendment in it, does not this bill then itself fix the salary and that is to be the law hereafter with regard to the salary?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Undoubtedly. The gentleman from Kansas objects to that on the ground that this bill is the work of the Committee on Appropriations alone and not the general membership of the House. This bill carries compensation for thousands of employees, 16,000 employees. The number of persons whose compensation was recommended should be increased was less than 200, and of those whose compensation was recommended to be increased, 135 of them were employed in the Library, receiving a compensation of less than $900 a year. The other fifteen thousand and odd salaries are the salaries that have been fixed and carried in this bill and paid to the occupants of the offices for many years. This year the committee has adopted this policy. It is fair to state at this time that it has not recommended the increase of any salaries for which estimates were not submitted by the departments. The committee is sometimes criticized for that policy, but it is the only policy which can be adopted and followed for its own self-protection. At the beginning of a session of Congress, members of the Committee on Appropriations are besieged by heads of departments, heads of bureaus, persons employed in the departments, Members of Congress, and the public generally on behalf of particular individuals whose salaries they contend should be increased. By refusing to recommend any increase in salary unless estimated for by the department, the committee puts itself in this position, that it has notice that some one in authority believes that the compensation should be increased and it takes the opportunity to investigate and to ascertain the merits of the recommendation, and it does not act because of favoritism, caprice, or desire to please some person or another. The most unfortunate thing that could happen to the Committee on Appropriations would be to so modify the rules of the House as to make it possible to offer, in order, amendments increasing compensation of persons carried in this bill, because I do not know any number of men in this House who could serve on the committee with such a rule and survive a single session, because of the pressure that would be put upon them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, we have wasted so much time in this Congress doing things which amount to nothing, on appropriation bills, that we must either make a change in the rules or some change in the law, or make up our minds to stay here all summer or to do no real legislation. It is impossible to continue the business of this House under the existing rules and laws, taking care of the appropriation bills and attending to any legislation. Day after day we have a point of order made upon the salary of some official, which official has been receiving the same salary for years, on the ground that 10, 20, 30, or 40 years ago Congress had provided by statute a different salary for that place. And under the rules of the House the salary and the office go out on the point of order. It is within the power of any single Member of the House now, under the existing rules and laws, to take out of the legislative appropriation bill more than two-thirds of it on points of order. Three great bureaus of the Government, without the existence of which we could scarcely proceed with the Government, have gone out of this bill on points of order, and unless restored by unanimous consent, which I assume will not be done, will go to the Senate without any provision for those places at all.

Now, what is the proposition pending? It is not to take away the right of any Member of the House, not to confer any additional right upon the Committee on Appropriations, not to confer any additional right upon the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union when that committee is considering a bill, as we are now, but simply and solely to apply to some few positions carried in the bill the rule which is now applied to more than 95 per cent of them.

What is the rule about a salary? If the law does not fix the salary, the rule is, under the construction for years, that the salary fixed in the current appropriation act shall be considered the legal salary. All this amendment proposes to do is to consider the salary fixed in the current law as the legal salary for every position where the salary is fixed. If it is proposed to increase that, it is still subject to a point of order. If Congress to-day, if this were in existence, or if this committee to-day should, after discussion and no point of order being made, increase the salary, then that would be the legal salary next year, no matter what the salary was last year.

This is a reform. This is a move forward in the way of the House controlling itself and being able to do business, and I am surprised that my reactionary friend from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK], always behind the procession, is opposed to it. [Laughter.] But I think that is because he does not understand it. My friend from Kansas during the last few months has been endeavoring to study the rules of the House, and I congratulate him upon that fact. During his entire period in the Congress before I do not think he ever pretended to study the rules of the House, and in that respect showed good judgment. But under these rules and under this amendment, it simply restores to the House a right to proceed to business instead of being held up by one man, when everyone knows that the man will accomplish nothing in the end. [Applause.] [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. If I did not regard this amendment as one of the most dangerous that has ever been submitted to the House for consideration, I would not rise at the present time to oppose it. The real effect of this amendment will be to open the door to a wholesale increase in salaries for all the legislative, executive, and judicial offices. If this body were the only body that passed upon salaries, we might not fear this amendment, but when you realize that another body which rules by unanimous consent, and where the rule is "You tickle me and I'll tickle you," is going to pass upon the salaries of this great legislative, executive, and judicial force you can readily conceive that we are going to be met with the proposition time and time again of increases of salary.

I will give you a concrete case, although it may only be a surmise. For years the judicial officers of this Government have been seeking an increase of salary—the judges of the district court and of the circuit court. If this amendment is going into the bill, it is going to remain in the bill not only for this session but for all years to come. The salaries of district judges will be raised to $7,000. Then the bill goes into conference. The Senate conferees stand fixed. I have seen where sessions of Congress were held up because some Senators wanted a navy yard in their respective districts, and the House receded in conference for fear it would extend the session of Congress not to do so.

The salary being changed it is the established law. Without this amendment any Member could in succeeding years make a point of order, and there would not be the inducement to raise the salary in the other body. But when once this is established, then you will have these beseechings that the chairman of the committee has mentioned going on in the other body and insisting that salaries be increased. The one thing that would result would be a wholesale increase of salaries, and instead of the economy that the chairman of the committee is so much concerned about, it will mean wholesale extravagance in the increase of appropriations.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is not that exactly what happens now?

Mr. STAFFORD. It can not happen, for this reason: Because in a succeeding appropriation bill any Member on the floor of the House can make the point of order that it is in violation of the statutory law, and this House will always have a control over the salary increase each session.

Mr. MANN. They can still make it in this body.

Mr. STAFFORD. After it is once incorporated in an appropriation bill under this amendment it becomes the law.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. COX. Right in that same connection, is not this likely to be what will happen: An increase of salary is put on in the Senate; it is agreed to in conference; and the only way to defeat that increase of salary would be to vote down the conference report, and everybody knows that it is almost impossible to do that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes. When it goes on the bill it becomes, so far as that salary is concerned, the substantive law for that office. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. FOWLER and Mr. LENROOT rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] is recognized.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] desires to speak, I will be very glad to yield to him.

Mr. LENROOT. Never mind.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I know that while there is a disposition on the part of the membership of this House to fix the salaries and classify them in such a way that there will be some semblance of equality and regularity—and I favor that proposition myself—yet I do not know of anything which is more humiliating to a Member of this House or to an employee of this Government than to have his salary increased by an appropriation bill above the statutory provision and then to be faced with the proposition of accepting such increase. It debases his manhood. It appeals to his sense of honor. Decency and good judgment require him to refuse it.

Mr. Chairman, if this amendment is adopted it will be the swallowing of all the irregularities in salaries which have accumulated for the last 25 to 50 years. I think, gentlemen, that we ought to approach this question cautiously and thoughtfully. I think we ought to appoint a committee for the purpose of investigating salaries and positions under this Government and classify them, with adequate and fixed salaries for all, thereby closing the door to political graft. Mr. Chairman, I can not conceive of anything which looks to me more rash than the passage of this amendment. It has been considered in this House less than two hours, and yet it affects every department of this Government. Were it proposed by this amendment to increase our own salaries with a debate of only two hours, I know there is not one of us who would vote for such increase. And why? Because we know that our constituents would not tolerate it, or at least we know our action would be repudiated at the polls at the next election by our constituents. Now, we should be just as careful in dealing with increases in the salaries of employees and other officers of this Government as we would be with our own salaries. If this amendment passes, it will make every future appropriation bill permanent law, and will rise up like a ghost in the future to haunt the Democratic Party.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and pending amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent that debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Make it 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I sympathize with the Committee on Appropriations in what they are attempting to remedy by this amendment. I believe they have had great provocation for the action they have taken; but I do insist that this is not the time to take care of the problem that confronts the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

What is the situation? Here at the very last moment there is sprung upon us—I do not use the word in any offensive sense—the proposition to make statutory law of every salary fixed in this bill. What has occurred here during the progress of the consideration of this bill? During the consideration of the first half of it the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] made points of order upon practically every increase of salary. He was severely criticized for that. I confess that I was one who did so, because I thought his action was unwarranted in the premises. But after some discussion and a statement by the chairman of the committee the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] stated to this House that in view of the statement of the chairman of the committee that there would be an equalization of these salaries and a revision of them, he would cease making his points of order. Therefore the situation was that as to the first half of this bill the salaries recommended by the Committee on Appropriations went out of the bill and the statutory salaries remained. As to the last half of the bill the salaries recommended by the Committee on Appropriations remain in the bill, because the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] did not make his points of order.

Mr. FOWLER. In harmony with the agreement.

Mr. LENROOT. In harmony with the agreement, as he states. Now, in voting upon this amendment we must assume that the salaries fixed in this bill will remain the salaries when this bill shall finally become a law, and therefore the salaries as they now remain in the bill are unequal and discriminatory.

Mr. Chairman, there is a way by which this can be reached, and I, as a Member of this House, am willing to join with the Committee on Appropriations in reaching it. I believe it would be very desirable for every Member of this House to be able to go back to the last appropriation bill, or to a certain appropriation bill, and find the statutory salaries of the different officers there, without going through volumes of statutes running back for 30 years; but if you wish to do that, gentlemen of the Committee on Appropriations, why do you not pursue the course which I now suggest? Instead of proposing this when you have concluded the consideration of an appropriation bill, when no Member of the House has had any thought of changing permanent law for all time to come, why do you not, when you bring in an appropriation bill, get a rule from the Committee on Rules—and I as a member of that committee will help you get it—providing that no points of order shall be made against any increase of salary, providing that such an amendment as you now offer shall be in order; and then let this House go through that bill and consider the salary of every officer and every employee named in that bill upon its merits. Then you will have a fair deal, and then you will give an opportunity to the House to consider what the salaries of these men should be, an opportunity which this House has not had in the consideration of this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who has just spoken seems to assume as a premise for his speech that the "existing law" represents not only the ideal but the actual condition that confronts us touching salaries. Now, the fact is that with the exception of a very few instances, in which the law creating the office is of recent date, the actual salaries that we are paying, and have been paying for years past, bear no relation to the "existing law," using that expression in the technical sense. In other words, you have positions that were created 25 or 50 years ago. The salaries have been increased from time to time and nobody except one or two gentlemen desires to have the old salary become the existing salary. Most of us do not want the existing law to be the actual rate of compensation to these employees, and year after year we vote an amount which is not in accord with "existing law." Now, there are two effects of the amendment offered here, and two only. One is, instead of having as your existing law, so that a point of order lies, laws for which you have to search through the statutes for 20, 30, or 40 years, you will have the law as it will pass this Congress. The other effect is that hereafter changes made in existing law by the appropriation laws shall be the law for the purpose of determining what shall be in order in the future; and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] well pointed out that the effect of that will be that if the changes are made hereafter, then they will be as though the language had been "hereafter" such and such shall be the salary, which is the way we frequently do.

But there is nothing that denies to this House a proper control over appropriations. The gentleman said that we ought to bring this proposal in only after notice had been given to everybody. What is the fact in connection with this bill. There is no increase of salary proposed in the bill that is not set out in plain terms in the report that accompanied the bill, so that every man might know the fact. If gentlemen do not take the trouble to inform themselves, we are not to blame. Not only is that true, but these changes, the increases that were made, would meet the judgment of practically nine-tenths of the Members here and relate to only a few minor places.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. But the Committee of the Whole has increased amounts not mentioned in the report, and they will become permanent law.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am assuming that this Committee of the Whole will at least respect the opinion of the same Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MURDOCK. It will put the appropriations into permanent law.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is not to be assumed that a man will vote for a certain salary here to-day on the theory that it is only going to be the salary for the next year. I assume that men, when they do things, do them with the belief that they will have permanency and with a knowledge of what they are doing. We propose to take a bill to-day that more nearly accords to what all desire by 500 per cent than the existing law and make it the existing law. In other words, we are bringing it up to date and not enabling some Member to dig into old musty volumes of long ago and hold up Congress while he expresses his views on the matter by making points of order which, even when sustained, have no other value than to devolve upon some other legislative body the duty of restoring the salary.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LENROOT and Mr. MURDOCK) there were 120 ayes and 59 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with amendments to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 15279) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, and had instructed him to report the same back with sundry amendments with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the amendment, section 6, page 145.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the amendment providing for mileage to Senators instead of actual expenses, on page 2. Also on the amendment giving mileage to Members of the House instead of actual expenses, on page 12. I also demand a separate vote on the amendment increasing the clerk hire to Members from $1,500 to $1,800, on page 21. Also a separate vote on the amendment providing for an assay office at Helena, Mont.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the Good amendment to the Children's Bureau, on page 138.

Mr. KEATING, by unanimous consent, was given leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOOD. A separate vote has been demanded on the amendment in regard to mileage for Senators, and also on mileage for the Members of the House. Inasmuch as that involves only one question, can not the two amendments be voted on at the same time?

The SPEAKER. They can by unanimous consent.

Mr. GOOD. I ask unanimous consent that when the vote is taken on the question of mileage that it be taken on the two amendments together.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I object to that in view of the fact that the gentleman from Tennessee will make that request when the amendments are reached.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

There was no demand for a separate vote on any other amendment.

The other amendments were agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, there have been so many separate votes demanded, some of which will undoubtedly result in a roll call, that many Members desire not to take the vote to-night but wait until to-morrow. The easiest way to test the sense of the House is on a vote to adjourn, and I move that the House do now adjourn.

ADJOURNMENT.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 31 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, April 17, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, April 17, 1914.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou art the All-Great, the All-Loving, too—

So, through the thunder comes a human voice
Saying, "O heart I made, a heart beats here!
Face, my hands fashioned, see it in myself!
Thou hast no power nor mayst conceive of mine,
But love I gave thee, with myself to love,
And thou must love me who have died for thee!"

We would be in Thy hands to be guided and blessed, to be kept and restrained, to be lifted up or cast down according to the Divine will, because we know that Thou art altogether love. So do Thou bless us this day. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

RADIUM-BEARING ORES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the question of the special order is not settled, but there would be only a minute and a half in which to settle it this morning. The Chair will ask whether by unanimous consent it may go over until Monday, and that the Chair may lay the unfinished business before the Senate at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the question on Senate bill 4405 may go over until Monday without prejudice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and it will go over.

INSPECTION AND GRADING OF GRAIN.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It being very near the hour of 2 o'clock, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 120.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. NELSON. I should like to have order in the Chamber.

Mr. WALSH. I wish to remark that I feel some surprise at that action being taken in my absence.

Mr. SMOOT. I will also say to the Senator from Montana that the hour of 1 o'clock has passed, anyhow. We were in executive session at 1 o'clock, and, in my opinion, under the ruling of the Chair, the bill will come up on Monday at 1 o'clock automatically.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate has agreed to adjourn until Monday.

Mr. WALSH. I did not know that. I should like to inquire of the Senator from North Dakota whether he has given any intimation that the Senate shall proceed with the grain-inspection bill?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; the bill has been laid before the Senate, and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] has been recognized upon it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 120) to provide for the inspection and grading of grain entering into interstate commerce, and to secure uniformity in standards and classification of grain, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota will proceed.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the other day while I was discussing this matter an intimation was made in respect to the character of the men who have charge of our grain service, an intimation that perhaps they were not farmers, but rather grain men. In this connection, before I proceed further, I wish to call attention to the fact that one of the members of our grain appeal board of Minnesota recently resigned to take a place here under the Interstate Commerce Commission on the valuation board—Mr. Staples. The governor appointed a man in his place, and I have a brief description which I will read to show what kind of men we put on the board of grain appeals in Minnesota.

PRACTICAL FARMER APPOINTED TO BOARD OF GRAIN APPEALS.

[Special to the Journal.]

CROOKSTON, MINN., April 13.—The appointment of J. F. Ingersoll as a member of the State board of grain appeals meets the approval of the farmers and shippers of the Red River Valley. Mr. Ingersoll is a progressive farmer. He is president of the Northwestern Minnesota Agricultural Society and of the Polk County Pure Seed Association, and was one of the organizers of the Fairfax-Andover Social Circle, an organization that has put rural life on a higher plane.

It may be a small matter to some, but I refer to it for the purpose of showing the character of men whom we put on our board of grain appeals—the highest authority in those matters.

I called attention the other day to the fact that North Dakota had twice sent commissions to investigate the grain inspection service of Minnesota under legislative provisions. In the first instance it was under an act of the Legislature of North Dakota, passed in 1907, providing for the appointment of such a commission. That commission made a report which was printed, entitled public document No. 37, report of the board of grain commissioners to his excellency, John Burke, governor of North Dakota, printed in 1908. I think the report was made in 1908. I called attention to these reports for the purpose of showing how slight and inconsequential was most of their criticism of our grain inspection service.

I now desire to call attention to what this same commission had to say about their own system in North Dakota. They criticized that more severely than they did our system, and I think they did it most justly. I shall read from that report what they had to say about it. It is very instructive and interesting, because it dovetails with what we were confronted with in Minnesota and what we attempted to cover by appropriate legislation. This is what the board says. I read, commencing at the foot of page 19:

LOCAL WAREHOUSING, GRADING, DOCKAGE, AND WEIGHING OF GRAIN.

While the act under which this board was created and appointed did not contain any direct provision for an investigation of local elevator and grain conditions in this State, we nevertheless felt it our duty that in order to present a report to be at least fairly complete as to any existing unsatisfactory commendations that it would be necessary for us to give some little attention to local conditions—

Meaning conditions in North Dakota—being limited as we were by a small appropriation and by a time limit of 50 days during the year 1907 we found it impossible to devote as much time as we should have desired in making an investigation of local elevator conditions.

That means the local elevators in North Dakota.

Finding no provision in the law governing our appointment giving us such authority, we presumed upon the good will and official authority of the railroad commissioners of this State whom the law charges with the supervision of local elevators, and who in their capacity as commissioners have access to the books and records of such elevators. This authority on the part of the commissioners was secured through the good offices of your excellency.

That is the governor.

In this manner we were given an opportunity to make careful investigation of the grain business as conducted by the several local elevators at different points in this State—and while we are not prepared to insist that the business transacted by the several local warehouses at these several stations would be an absolutely fair criterion of the local grain business of the State of North Dakota, still we believe that it is fairly so, and that the result of our investigation in this respect indicates very grave and serious local troubles that should receive careful legislative consideration.

That means North Dakota—

In other words, if Senators could read this report as an entirety they would find the North Dakota commission appointed to investigate conditions in Minnesota criticised their own practices more harshly than they did our own.

In this respect—

The report proceeds—

In this respect we take the liberty to suggest that, while the lawmakers of our State can not go beyond its borders in the matter of regulation, modification, or change of systems of inspection, be they under Federal or State control, they can and have full power to remedy any local troubles that are found to exist and which, in our judgment, seriously impair the prosperity of the grain growers of our State. Local elevators are modern means of receiving and handling grain. Our laws have designated them as public elevators. They are public in this sense, that their business is subject to public supervision and regulation. Our laws define fairly well what their functions and privileges are as well as the privileges of those for whom they transact business.

There appears to be rather well-defined opinion prevailing that the business of an elevator man, as far as the handling and purchase of grain, is one and the same. This, however, is a mistake. Public elevators in North Dakota, as defined by our law, are licensed for the handling, storage, and shipment of grain, not for the purchase of the same. The buying and selling of grain is an entirely different matter and one which at all times should remain open to any person or persons who desire to engage in such business. The fact that the public elevator man is fortunate enough to receive at elevator site on or off a right of way does not in any manner entitle him to a monopoly of the purchase of grain. His business, as defined by the law, is to receive, store, and deliver grain at the option of the owner thereof, for a stipulated compensation for such service.

All of our laws are predicated on this proposition. It is assumed that elevator sites be granted and elevators erected commensurate with the local amount of grain tributary to such stations, and that the amount of grain received by the several houses will reasonably compensate them by exacting the legal charge which is provided for the handling, storage, and insurance of grain. When this is followed by such houses, no just complaint can be made. However, we are constrained to believe that the local elevators of North Dakota—are not moving within that reasonable limit which terminal grades, terminal dockage, terminal prices, and the freight rate between the terminal and local points would suggest.

Our deduction in this report is based upon this proposition which we believe to be fair and reasonable to both the producer and the local elevator man. First, our grain practically all going to the Minnesota and Superior terminals, it is necessary that it be received, graded, and docked locally on a basis of such inspection and dockage. As long as this system prevails, we are bound to conform to that as a reasonable commercial necessity. In the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin this is obligatory on the local elevator man. There they must conform to the terminal grades, and it clearly ought to be made the obligation of of every local elevator man in the State of North Dakota to do likewise, as long as these systems prevail. Moreover, local prices should be fixed and governed by terminal prices, minus freight charges, regular elevator charges, charges for terminal inspection, switching and weighing, and such reasonable charges for a commission to sell the grain upon arrival at the terminals. These facts, all of which can be easily ascertained at all times through the method of price quotations in the public press and through information at the several freight offices, ought to make the margin of difference in price that should exist between terminal and local markets. That such is not the case at this time, or that such was not the case a year ago, we ascertained quite fully in the limited investigation that we made as to local inspection, dockage, weighing, and price conditions.

In other words, the farmers of North Dakota, except the big farmers who ship by the carload, according to this report, had great ground for complaint against local elevators—the country elevators located at the railroad stations to which they hauled their grain and delivered and sold it. The local elevator men of North Dakota failed to conform to the prices at the terminals—that is, they failed to conform to the prices fixed, less the freight and storage charges and other proper charges.

There are also indications—

Now I call your attention to this—

There are also indications of overages in local warehouses—

What is an "overage"? It is the excess of wheat which a local elevator man finds himself with at the end of the season over and above the amount he has given credit for to the farmers for the wheat they have sold him or stored with him. An "overage," if large, if not slight, indicates that the elevator man has cheated the farmers on weights and dockage, for the excess, or average, may come from both sources.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRADY in the chair). Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. NELSON. Yes.

Mr. WEST. What becomes of that overage?

Mr. NELSON. Why, the local or terminal elevator man pockets it—absorbs it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. NELSON. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I desire to state to the Senator from Minnesota that most of the elevators in our State are line elevators and the agent enters into a bond with the terminal elevator company to prevent loss, and therefore his weights must always hold out. To protect himself, he resolves, as he does in the case of grain grades, all of the doubts against the farmer and in favor of the elevator man; and those doubts accumulate until, as the Senator from Minnesota suggests, they measure up often to a whole carload. I have understood, though I will not state it absolutely, that in some instances there has been a division of that extra amount between the terminal elevator and the party buying.

Mr. NELSON. There is where the Senator is mistaken. As an attorney, years ago, I had cases for two or three local elevator men who were buying wheat. As the Senator from North Dakota said, the terminal elevator companies compel the local agents to give a bond and to be responsible for weights and grades. If the elevator men chanced to be short on their weight or mistaken in their grades, the terminal companies for whom they were operating would compel them to make up that shortage; but, on the other hand, they had a condition in the bond that no matter how much the elevator man got ahead he could not get a bushel of it—the terminal elevator would keep it all.

Mr. NORRIS. It was a rule which did not work both ways.

Mr. NELSON. No. Such was the rule. Senators must bear in mind that when the grain reaches the terminal elevators at Duluth, Minneapolis, or Chicago it is no longer the grain of the farmer or the producer; that over 90 per cent of the grain when it reaches those points belongs either to the terminal elevator companies, the independent elevator companies, or the farmers' elevator companies, or it belongs to those who have shipped it by carload lots. Where the farmer is defrauded, and where he is most likely to be defrauded, both in weights and grades, is by the local elevators.

If he does not get protection there, it does not make much difference what happens at the terminal. Now, let me read further from the report of the North Dakota commission regarding conditions in North Dakota:

There are also indications of overages—

I have explained the meaning of overages—

There are also indications of overages in local warehouses, but we are not prepared to state whether the same occurred by reason of overdockage or incorrect weights.

Overages may occur in both ways; the local elevator man may dock the farmer too much, or he may cheat him on weight.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. WEST. Does the Senator not suppose that the elevator man would probably regard that as lagniappe from the farmer—something thrown in?

Mr. NELSON. He might do so. I read further from the report of the North Dakota commission:

In either event—

Whether it comes from overdockage or incorrect weight—

In either event, this is a loss to the producer. In the matter of local prices paid we discovered what is perhaps—

Now, listen to this—

We discovered what is perhaps the greatest factor through which the local producer sustains loss, namely, underpayment, as compared with the terminal prices.

That is the condition in North Dakota. I have no doubt that the local elevators in North Dakota do as they did years ago to a great extent in Minnesota; in many instances, if I may use so coarse a term, they cheated the farmers in dockage and in weight and also in price. We have better conditions now in Minnesota. I can remember when the local elevators used to buy on a margin of 5 cents a bushel. Now in the section of the country in which I live the rule is this: They take the Minneapolis or Duluth quotation; they deduct from that the freight from the station where the grain is bought to those cities; they deduct 2 cents elevator charges—in some cases 2½ cents—which covers storage both at the local elevator and at the terminal elevator for 15 days, and then they buy on a margin, outside of that, of from 1 cent to a cent and a half, but never to exceed 2 cents. So that now we can always tell when we get the quotations of the Duluth or Minneapolis market whether we are getting the price we ought to have. I can remember, however, in the early days before the business was regulated as it is now, when the local elevator men used to buy on a margin of from 4 to 5 cents, which was an unconscionable profit. I quote further from the report of the North Dakota commission:

It would be difficult from the limited investigation that we made to fix any very definite amount as to what this loss—

That is the loss on overdockage, underweight, and on insufficient prices compared with the prices at the terminal.

I ask Senators to listen to this:

It would be difficult from the limited investigation that we made to fix any very definite amount as to what this loss may amount to on an average, but it would appear to range anywhere from 1 to 10 cents per bushel, according to the presence or absence of local competition, as the case might be. We repeat that it is our opinion that some remedy can and should be here applied by enforcement of existing laws or by the enactment of new laws that have this end in view. While it is manifestly impossible to enact laws giving anyone authority to fix terminal or local prices, it would appear, however, to be of necessity that effective means should be provided for by legislative enactment that would make it impossible for the producer to escape unprofitable market conditions at local markets to which they are contributors.

Correct local dockage and weights, we believe, can be established and enforced by competent and thorough local supervision, and it is not impossible to compel terminal delivery of grain handled through local houses by individual shippers for the purpose of securing correct terminal prices. If this avenue of escape is legally established and opened to the North Dakota grain producer, it will enable him to evade the necessity of selling his grain at local points to local buyers unless the price they offer him is satisfactory.

It appears to this board that such a law would be only fair and right, and would have a tendency to effectively remedy existing local troubles. The very fact that the producer could circumvent and get away from conditions that did not suit him, or which in his judgment were unreasonable and unfair, would of necessity bring about better conditions. We inclose detailed exhibits of our local investigation.

* * * * * * *

All of this suggests that every provision that human ingenuity can invent should be employed to insure such reasonable protection to the North Dakota grain growers as they are reasonably entitled to. Grain raising and the profits resulting therefrom are the present and future basis of prosperity in this State. We are essentially an agricultural or grain-growing people, and anything that in any manner detracts from the profit that rightly belongs to and should go to the man who raises the grain is detracting from the prosperity and reward to which the farmer is entitled. Recognizing this fact, we again emphasize the urgent necessity of better and more stringent local regulation and supervision.

I quote further from the report:

It is not enough that local warehouses should be bonded and licensed for the proper performance of their business as public elevators. It is also necessary that some one with full and proper authority should, from time to time, inquire as to how well they comply with the laws already enacted for their government and regulation and those which hereafter may be enacted. In other words, the laws governing this business should be enforced, and that can only be done by keeping in official contact with the several places of business, in order to ascertain whether or not they are doing right.

As to the method for such local supervision, that is a matter that should occasion careful legislative consideration and inquiry. Perhaps the division of our State into districts might afford a reasonable plan; and then, to carry out this work, it will, of course, require a collection or appropriation of the necessary funds. All of these funds should be acquired by tax or a license from the ones engaged in the grain business, as it would be manifestly unfair to tax such as are not engaged in the grain business for the protection of those who are. At the utmost it would be a small tax, and one that we feel certain would repay it many times over in a short time. Experience in other States has demonstrated the usefulness of careful local supervision, and there is no reason why the same benefits should not manifest themselves in this State. In this connection we suggest another idea, and that is compulsory annual reports from all local elevator men doing business in this State. These reports should show the amount of grain received, how graded, the dockage and disposition of the same; also the terminal weight, grade, and dockage.

This would enable those who are in charge of the department of supervision to ascertain with reasonable accuracy as to how well local elevator men do conform to terminal conditions.

Now I will read the recommendations which the commission makes as to what ought to be done in North Dakota:

RECOMMENDATIONS.

REQUIRED LEGISLATION.

After careful inquiry into the provisions of our State laws which now apply to the regulation of local grain business in this State, our board arrived at the following conclusions in a general way as to the required legislation; part of the suggestions herewith made are covered by existing law and others will require the enactment of a new law:

First. The enactment of a general law covering all the subjects herewith alluded to and then repealing existing laws that cover the same subject, would be the practical way to solve this proposition. In our judgment the proper supervision and regulation of local grain business for the State requires a law that first should embrace official jurisdiction and supervision. The railroad commission of this State should be given full power to regulate and supervise the local, as well as any terminal, grain business established under our laws. They should issue all licenses required by local or terminal elevator men, and they should be given full power to revoke or annul such licenses for cause; also to receive, pass upon, and accept or reject the bonds executed by elevator men under the requirements of the law.

That is exactly the power we have given our railroad commission in Minnesota by the law of 1893, commonly called the country or local elevator law. I referred to it in my remarks the other day. By that law all the country elevators are required to take out State licenses and are placed under the control of the State railroad and warehouse commission. The Minnesota railroad and warehouse commission have complete supervision over the local elevators. They have one man, and sometimes two men, traveling on the road all the time examining the local elevators, inspecting the weights and scales, and ascertaining how the business is conducted. As I said on Wednesday, if there is any dispute between the farmer and the local elevator man as to the grade and dockage of his grain a sample is taken, sent to the chief inspector at St. Paul, and there passed upon. So that, although we were once in the same condition in which the farmers of North Dakota now are, as described in this report, since we passed the country elevator law in 1893 the situation has been entirely changed and a great improvement has followed.

While there have been a few cases of trouble, we have had little criticism of our system, and on the whole it has worked as fairly and justly as could possibly be expected. However, it is a human institution. While we aim to get the very best men to conduct our service and manage our business, occasionally we may get a man who is not adapted to the work; but the main complaints we have had in recent years have not been because of the terminal elevators, but because the country elevator man has been too grasping or too overreaching. I read the next recommendation:

Second. The supervision and regulation of the local and terminal grain business of this State will cause more or less expense. This should be borne by those directly engaged and interested in the grain business.

That is true. In Minnesota we require the terminal and country elevators to take out licenses, and we obtain quite a sum from that source, which goes to pay the expense.

The most practical way to raise the money so required will be from a graduated license fee to be paid by the local elevator men in accordance with the capacity of the elevator which they operate.

That is exactly what has been done in Minnesota.

The money so collected should be gathered into a special fund to be known as the "State grain fund," and out of this should be defrayed wholly, or in part, the expense of local and terminal grain supervision.

Third. By legal enactment there should be established and defined what shall constitute public local and terminal elevators.

We have done that in Minnesota.

Terminal elevators should be established by purchase or lease at terminal cities on the main railroad lines immediately adjoining the Minnesota border, or at Minneapolis, Duluth, and Superior. Under public local elevators—should be defined all elevators and warehouses in which grain is received, stored, shipped, or handled, which are situated on the right of way of any railroad company, or adjacent thereto to be used in connection with its line of railway at any station or siding other than at such places within the State which may have been designated as terminal markets; also all elevators and warehouses where grain is received, stored, shipped, or handled, situated at any boat landing on any river within the State.

That is the country elevators—

We adopted that plan in Minnesota some time ago. We require the country elevators, the local elevators, which are on the right of way of a railroad or adjacent to it or to a station to take out licenses and submit to public regulation. I called the attention of the Senate to this matter in my remarks on Wednesday last. One elevator company, a Wisconsin company, with headquarters at La Crosse, which was buying wheat in the southern part of Minnesota, disputed the right of the State to require them to take out a license. They raised the issue at a little place in southern Minnesota called Lanesboro, where they had a grain house, and they insisted that in that grain house or elevator they only handled their own grain; that they simply bought it from the farmers and stored it there for their own benefit, and kept it there until they were ready to ship it and sell it to the millers or ship it abroad. They held that because it was their own grain which they put into those elevators they were not subject to public control; that they were beyond the police power of the State and that the State had no right to require them to take out a license.

As I pointed out the other day, that case finally came to the Supreme Court here in Washington, and that court, as well as our own State supreme court, held that that elevator at that railroad station was a public market place where the farmers had to go and have their grain graded and tested and sold, and because it was a public market place it was amenable and subject to public control. This is what they recommend here, exactly what we have done in Minnesota, and what we have done years before:

Fourth. The enactment of a law providing for a legal form of elevator or storage receipt for grain.

That we have, both in our terminal elevators and in our local elevators. Our statute prescribes the form of the receipt in the local elevator and the form of the receipt in the terminal elevator. It prescribes a special form of receipt where a man wants his wheat kept in a separate bin by itself.

This act to provide for a uniform form of receipt to be used by all public local elevators in the State. One of the features of said receipt to be the compulsory delivery of grain stored at the initiatory elevator, or at a terminal elevator, at the option of the holder of the receipt.

We have that in our law. If I haul grain to the local elevator at my place, sell it or store it there ,and get a storage receipt, they are obliged to deliver that grain to me on proper notice. Of course, I must give them notice, either at the elevator where I delivered it or at the terminal at Minneapolis or Duluth, one or the other of the places. The statute specifies within what time they must do it and a penalty is imposed if they fail to do it.

Also the enactment by law of a form of surrender receipt to be issued to the holder of storage receipt upon a surrender of the same to a local elevator man, together with a demand for terminal delivery of the grain covered by such receipt.

Fifth. The enactment of a law providing for the appointment and employment by the railroad commission of this State of a competent scale expert or experts, who shall have power to inspect and report as to the condition of scales used in public local or terminal elevators within the State, the commission to have power to condemn scales found to be untfit for use or out of order and to prohibit the use of any such scale until properly repaired. We believe this to be far better than the method now employed, which requires the sheriff of each county to perform this duty.

That is exactly what we have in Minnesota. We have scale experts who examine the scales of the terminal elevators and who go and examine the scales of the local elevators.

Sixth. The enactment of a law providing for annual reports of all the business transacted by local elevator men and of daily or weekly reports of business transacted by terminal elevator men, such reports to be made to the railroad commission, and by them kept on file for the inspection of all parties interested. Also a provision made in such law for weekly reports of all receipts and shipments made by local warehousemen during the period from August 1 in each year to November 1 of the same year, these reports to show the amount of grain received during the preceding week of all kinds and its grade. Also the amount of dockage applied, also the amount of grain of all grades shipped and destination, giving date of shipment, number and initials of the car. The commission shall during this period employ some person whose duty it shall be to ascertain the terminal grades, dockage, and sale price of such shipments for the purpose of comparison of local grades, dockage, and sale prices. This law also to contain a provision for special reports at any time the commission, in their judgment, deem such special report necessary.

That is exactly what we have in Minnesota. They are required to make a report of the grain received from day to day. They are required to make a report of the amount they receive, the amount that is taken in and inspected out, and the weights and grades of each kind. They have to make a full report, and it is compulsory.

I quote further from the report.

Seventh. The exaction of an adequate bond from all parties engaged in the local or terminal elevator business. Such bond to be given for the faithful performance of their duties and obligations as public elevator men, and to be graduated in amount in accordance with the volume of business to be transacted.

Eighth. A law providing for a system of publicity under which the railroad commission shall acquire and keep on file, or publish, as in their judgment may seem necessary, constant knowledge of grain prices, as paid at the several local and terminal markets.

Ninth. The enactment of a law providing for personal, official supervision of the local and terminal business of this State, either by the members of the railroad commission themselves, or by such agents and experts as they may employ for such purpose. The commission or its agents to have full power to enter upon the premises of any local or terminal elevator and to cause such elevator and the business thereof, and the mode of conducting the same, to be inspected whenever in their judgment such inspection seems proper, and for such purpose all such elevator property, its books, records, accounts, and papers, shall at all times during business hours be subject to such inspection. The necessity for such local supervision and inspection suggests to our board the advisability of dividing the State into two or more districts and putting these districts under the supervision of individual members of the commission, or of agents whom they find it necessary to employ for such purpose in order to exercise more diligent and constant supervision.

Mr. President, I have referred to these matters for the purpose of showing to the Senate, first of all, that the farmers of North Dakota have suffered probably much more from the exactions of their local elevator men, both in the matter of grades, in the matter of dockage, and in the matter of failure to pay a price commensurate with the price at the terminals. The report to which I have called attention suggests what they ought to do to protect themselves. They have not done that to the extent that we have. We, in Minnesota, have done substantially all they suggest here, and from that we have gotten great relief.

Mr. President, you can make inspections, and you can establish grades at terminal points; you can provide a system of inspection there, and yet as long as the country elevators, where the farmers have to go to store and sell their grain, are not regulated the farmers have no protection.

I know how they used to do in old times. If a farmer came up to a little railroad station with his load of wheat, the elevator man would look at it and take some out of the sack and say, "I can only allow you No. 2 for this, and I have got to dock you 2 pounds." The farmer would find fault about it, kick about it, but what could he do? The elevator man was there. He was the umpire. The farmer had to sell his wheat. He needed the money. His only alternative was that if he was a big enough farmer and had enough wheat so that he could fill a car, he could order a car from the railroad company and put it in that and ship it to the terminal to a commission man to sell, and then he would be more apt to get justice; but most of the small farmers can not do that.

The small farmer, who raises from 1,000 to 2,000 or 3,000 bushels of wheat a year, hauls out his wheat as he needs the money. First of all, in the fall of the year he needs to pay his harvest hands—the help he has had during the summer; then he must pay his thrashing bill; then he must pay his twine bill; then he must pay his store and grocery bill, and all these bills; and he hauls out from day to day, as the weather and his fall work permit him, the wheat to the local elevator man and sells it there and gets his money.

If the local elevator man is an honest man, and deals fairly with him, he is all right; but if the local elevator man is a rogue he can cheat him in weight, he can cheat him in grades, he can cheat him in dockage, and he can cheat him in prices. An inspection at terminal points will be of little protection to him, for this reason: The local elevator man buys that wheat, He buys it from A, B, C, and D. He may buy from 25 or 30 men in a day. He puts it into the hopper of his elevator and mixes it; and unless the farmer is thoughtful enough to take out a good sample of his wheat—and they are not always thoughtful enough—the wheat is mixed, sent in with a lot of other wheat, sold in bulk at the terminal, and the farmer is helpless. He can protect himself against false weights by purchasing a scale for use at home on his farm, and weighing his load of wheat before he takes it to the elevator, and if there is a platform scale at the station he can weigh it in the wagon and thus keep tab on the local elevator man and be able to tell whether the local elevator man has cheated him on weights or not.

I have no doubt but that the farmers of North Dakota were a great deal afflicted by such procedure as I have described; but instead of seeking a legislative remedy an administrative remedy as we have done in Minnesota, some of them—not all of them, because they have a lot of good, intelligent farmers—some of those politicians who aim to make politics out of it and get it into politics have raised a hue and cry against the inspection system of Minnesota. They have raised it, because it so happens that the terminals where the wheat is shipped are located for the most part either at Duluth or at Minneapolis. It can be shipped to Chicago, but very little goes there. Most of the grain goes either to Minneapolis or Duluth, or to Superior, Wis., right across the bay from Duluth. Perhaps two-thirds of our wheat raised in Minnesota goes to Minneapolis, and about a third goes to Duluth. I do not know exactly what proportion of the North Dakota wheat goes to the two places, but I rather think on the whole, especially in the winter, the larger portion goes to Minneapolis, because the Duluth market is not quite so good in winter after the lakes are frozen, and they are in ice from the latter part of November or the early part of December until late in the spring. Navigation stops, and hence the wheat has to be stored in the elevators till navigation opens.

I have called attention to this report because the criticisms made in it are much less severe on the Minnesota system than on their own North Dakota system.

The final recommendation of the North Dakota commission from which I have quoted so extensively, was that the State ought to build and operate its own terminal elevators at Minneapolis, Duluth, and Superior, including so-called grain hospitals, especially on the ground that North Dakota wheat was of a superior quality, and that by having their own terminal elevators they could keep the wheat separate, and it would bring in a better price.

They recommended not only that the State should have ordinary grain terminal elevators, but that the State also should have terminal grain hospitals. I explained to you what a grain hospital is. It is a place where they take damaged and injured grain and put it through a process of scouring and cleaning and make it merchantable.

In this connection I will read again what I called attention to the other day:

> In another place in this report we have described the business of the so-called grain "hospitals," or mixing houses. The improvement of grain by this process has become quite modern and, in our judgment, permanent, and we would suggest that the benefits of thus improving grain ought to be within the reach of farmers and shippers from our State. With this end in view, we would suggest the acquirement or operation of grain hospitals—one to be at Minneapolis and the other at the head of the Lakes—to be operated in connection with our terminal elevators. This would afford an opportunity for our North Dakota farmers or shippers who are unfortunate to come into possession of or raise smutty grain, or whose grain has been damaged by inclement weather, or who have not the facilities for cleaning grain before delivering same at the local market, to ship their grain to these houses for the purpose of improvement, they to become the beneficiaries of the increased market value by reason of such improvement and to be recompensed in a reasonable manner for the offal from such grain.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. WEST. I wish to ask a question about these grain hospitals, which I know nothing about. Is there a general improvement of the grain there or is it just made so that it will sell better?

Mr. NELSON. There is a general improvement of the grain. In this I refer especially to the smutty grain.

Mr. WEST. Do they absolutely take the smut out of the grain?

Mr. NELSON. Yes; they take all of it out. They have a system of fanning mills in those elevators where they take out all kinds of foul stuff. Smut is a poisonous substance; and if there is much smut in the wheat, and it is ground with it, the flour is not fit to eat.

We have several foreign substances that afflict the wheat raisers. We have smut; we have cockle, which is bad, but it is not so bad as smut—that is, it would not kill a man if he ate cockle, but smut would if he took enough of it. We have smut, we have cockle, we have what we call pigeon grass, we have wild buckwheat, and in later years we have been afflicted to a large extent with what we call wild oats.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I have always understood that wild oats came in the early years rather than in the later years.

Mr. NELSON. Oh, no; not this kind of wild oats. I ran my farm for 20 years without a bit of wild oats in it. I never had any of it on my farm during that time. I only got it because I was foolish enough to let the livery stables in my town haul some of their refuse matter on my farm and get straw in exchange. That is how I got it on my farm. Wild oats has come to us only in later years. The same is true of the North Dakota farmers. At an early date they had no wild oats. Nobody appears to know where it came from in the first instance. I have never seen any book or document that described where it came from; but it is a great affliction, and when the wild oats get thick it lodges the grain. It grows up fast and tall, and when it gets plenty and heavy in the wheat it lodges the wheat; and if there is much wild oats in the wheat it does not get a chance to ripen fairly, and then you get a lot of wild oats in your grain when it is thrashed that has to be taken out.

In further answer to my friend the Senator from Georgia I wish to repeat something that I referred to the other day. Shock thrashing, as we call it, prevails to a large extent in North Dakota. It does also to some extent in Minnesota in the Red River Valley, though it is diminishing year by year. Shock thrashing means this: The farmer cuts his grain and puts it in the shock, and he does not stack it. Here in the East, on the little farms, they haul in their grain and stack it in barns. They have these small thrashing machines and they thrash it in barns for the sake of saving their straw. In the Middle West, in the great winter-wheat States of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, Illinois, and Iowa, nearly all the farmers there stack their wheat. They let it stand in shock until it gets dry enough, and then they put it into stacks. After the wheat is put in stacks it goes through what we call a sweating process. It oftentimes happens, if your wheat has got bleached in the shock from sun and rain, that if you put it into a stack and let it stand it regains its natural, bright, good color and good quality.

This shock threshing is a risky thing on account of the weather. I want to deal fairly with North Dakota; they are a little farther west than we are. They are on the verge of the arid belt, and they are not quite as exposed to heavy fall rains as we are in Minnesota. There are some falls that they are very fortunate and are able to thresh their grain in shock before there is any rain on it, and the bleaching comes only from the dew and the sun and the wind; but in many cases they have rainy falls; oftentimes they have a good deal of rain, and the wheat in shock gets bleached and damaged. Then the threshing machine comes around. These are great, big machines, with big crews. They are anxious to hurry up with their work. If there happens to be a shower while they are there, of course they have to wait until the grain dries before they can go on; but they are so anxious, oftentimes, that they do not wait long enough. They proceed to thresh oftentimes before the grain is as dry as it ought to be. That kind of grain, threshed in that way, becomes bleached and damp and is liable to heat; it gets off color, and has to go into a wheat hospital before it can be used.

There is another thing that is likely to occur: If you take wheat that has not gone through a sweating process, if you take it when it is the least bit damp, and dump it into a car for shipment it is liable to injure the whole carload. It is liable to become what we sometimes call bin burnt. In case you have grain of that kind it is important that you send it to one of these grain hospitals immediately, where they will fan it, air it, take out all of the impurities, and put it in proper shape. They have a process of washing the wheat, scouring it, and getting all the impurities out of it. After they have put it through such a course much of the wheat gets back—not all of it, but much of it—to a normal condition. If it were not for these grain hospitals——

Mr. WEST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. NELSON. Yes. If it were not for these grain hospitals the damaged grain would in many instances have to be sold and used for feed. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President, it is well known that we have a disease called pellagra which has baffled the medical ingenuity of the skilled experts of the age.

Mr. NELSON. Is not that a human disease?

Mr. WEST. Yes, sir; but I want to get to this point. A great many of our skilled medical experts suppose that it comes from grain that has been spoiled, say from corn bread made from corn that has not had the proper treatment, or from wheat. Nobody knows what is the cause of it; but it is on the increase in the Carolinas and Georgia and Tennessee and Alabama and those Southern States. I have seen cases of it myself, but they suppose it is traceable principally to damaged grain.

Mr. NELSON. Damaged corn, I have heard.

Mr. WEST. Damaged corn; yes, sir.

Mr. NELSON. Not wheat.

Mr. WEST. But they do not know definitely what causes it; and great is the pity, too, because the disease is becoming worse every year, and especially in the Carolinas. I do not know whether there is any connection between that disease and the grain that is shipped in there, say damaged corn, or not, but it is supposed to come from damaged grain. I wish to inquire whether the Senator knows anything in reference to it.

Mr. NELSON. I can give the Senator no information on that point. As the Senator knows, I am only a farmer and a country lawyer by profession.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. I have had no education or training in the medical line, and I have only noticed this subject matter incidentally in the newspapers. I have seen in the newspapers some statement to the effect that it comes from corn. Perhaps the Senator from Illinois can give some explanation of it.

Mr. SHERMAN. With the permission of the Senator from Minnesota, I might add, in connection with the statement made by the Senator from Georgia, that it has not been established, unless it has been done very recently, what the cause of pellagra is. Commissions have been searching for its cause. One was appointed by a branch of the public service in which I was engaged for some years, consisting of some of the leading physicians and chemists of the western country, to ascertain the cause of pellagra. If any independent investigation in either State or Federal jurisdiction has found the cause, I do not think it has been made public yet. A great many scientists are now engaged in that research. They have arrived at certain basic conditions under which the disease appears, as I get the report from physicians and others who have made the examination. A great deal of chemical examination has been made in the laboratories; but I do not believe any definite cause has yet been ascertained, either in this country or in Europe. It was charged, in parts of southern Italy, and possibly some parts of Austria, that it came from musty grain shipped from the United States, largely corn.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota further yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. NELSON. I do.

Mr. WEST. Is the Senator aware of the fact that in northern Italy the death rate from pellagra has been largely reduced by improving the diet of articles made from grain?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the improvement of the diet has led to an abatement of the new cases and the improvement of the old ones under different dietetic conditions; but I remember quite well that in order to experiment we had a crate of 90 Brazilian monkeys brought up from South America and turned them over to the investigators in the laboratory. That was with the idea, with all due deference to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, that we preferred to experiment on them rather than on human beings. They are as nearly similar to human beings in many particulars, so the physicians and chemists informed me, as anything that can be had.

I am only saying this out of deference to the grain trade of the United States. If it should go in the RECORD without this explanation a misapprehension might be created abroad.

We put these alleged remote ancestors of ours under certain dietetic conditions; we fed them musty grain and musty foods of all kinds; the blood and poison or germ or active principle of pellagra was injected or sought to be implanted in the monkeys; we experimented by chemical examination of their blood, their digestive or alimentary tracts, and their general physical condition; and we could develop no case of pellagra in any of the 90 monkeys that came up by such experiments. All of them were very healthy specimens and in sound physical condition. We developed no original case of pellagra among them in the experiments that were conducted.

I think an examination of the testimony taken by various commissions in south Italy will show that probably the cases there had their origin in either insufficient nutrition or a low order of nutrition combined with very bad sanitary conditions and with the cases of middle-aged or old people. Where the sanitary condition as to light, air, diet, and so forth, is such as to show a very low degree of vitality it is possible that in some instances, with those conditions surrounding the patient, food made from musty grain—grain in that condition before it was milled—has led to an aggravation of the disease. Any unhealthful food might do so. It is barely possible that by this time some original cases may have developed under those conditions, but I do not think it has been established, unless it has been very recently, that any kind of musty grain when milled into foodstuff will cause an original case of pellagra. I believe the scientists in the New York laboratory thought they had developed a case. They had taken a monkey just as we had out in the western country to make some analogous investigation, and they thought they had developed a case of original pellagra in a monkey that they had in their charge.

This disease is one which when developed is practically incurable. It is a skin disease. In the first instance a sort of purplish red development forms on the hand or neck or face, and it continues until it partakes a good deal of the form of blood poisoning or leprosy. In subsequent stages it attacks the tissues and joints, as the doctors inform me. It then reaches a fatal stage.

When they got hold of this monkey they concluded that they had solved the question. It was found, however, that the monkey in question was not one in usual health. When the chemists and investigators went back of the source of supply, they found that he had not come from the native jungles of the South American forests at all, but he was a slum monkey that had been gotten out of the East Side some place and had been following life in an alley with a hand organ or something of that kind before the chemists got hold of him. He had been living in about the same condition that human beings had been living before they develop pellagra. So it was the lack of sanitation of the monkey and not the food he got that developed it.

It is pretty generally supposed, and I think some experiments have been had with human beings, that no amount of bin-burnt grain, musty corn, or other grain milled in food product will develop a case of pellagra in a human being under normal healthy conditions. I think it will require, in addition to that, the bad sanitary conditions or the run-down condition depressing the vitality and accompanying it which might produce it.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. NELSON. I do.

Mr. WEST. Does not this disease prevail more in southern than in northern climates?

Mr. SHERMAN. I am disposed to think that original cases develop in warmer climates than, say, from north of the Ohio River, or Cairo, Ill. It first was manifest in certain of the States south and in southern Italy. My recollection is that the first cases were known almost simultaneously in southern Italy and in some of the Southern States of the Union. But original cases have also appeared in the Northern States, and it may be that they are just as liable to occur in Northern States as elsewhere. Original cases have been found in many instances in almshouses, in hospitals for the insane, and other institutions where proper sanitary conditions have not been observed.

Mr. WEST. The Senator from Illinois seems to be quite conversant with the disease. Does he think that it is contagious?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir. I have not the least scruples about that from my association with physicians. I am not a physician, I want to explain, but only a country lawyer. However, for some years I was associated almost daily with physicians, with surgeons, with chemists, and here what I am giving is wholly from observation or information that they conveyed to me, and those who have had the most experience with it, who have been in daily contact with it in certain States of the Middle West. I have seen them go around without any fear whatever and take the hands of a pellagra patient and rub them and look at them and deal with such persons constantly, and they told me without exception they had no fear whatever of its contagious qualities. They show it by their handling of the patient.

Mr. NELSON. Now, I will state before I sit down that it will probably take me an hour and a half to finish what I have to say. I think in justice and fairness we who can not go off and play golf like some Senators should have a little rest.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brady	Gallinger	Martine, N. J.	Sherman
Bryan	James	Nelson	Shively
Catron	Kern	Norris	Smoot
Chilton	Lodge	Page	Weeks
Fall	McCumber	Sheppard	West

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Twenty Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 3 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, April 20, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 17, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, to whom we are indebted for all things and unto whom we are responsible for our acts, we thank Thee for all the blessings which Thou hast bestowed upon us, especially for the divine spirit with which Thou hast endowed us, which searcheth the heart, illumines the mind, and strengthens us for every noble endeavor. Make us more susceptible, we beseech Thee, to its holy influence, that we may in largest measure fulfill our destiny upon the earth and be prepared for whatever awaits us in the great beyond. In the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

INTERSTATE TRADE COMMISSION.

Mr. COVINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. STEVENS] and the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LAFFERTY] have three legislative days within which to file minority views on the bill (H. R. 15613) to create an Interstate Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes, now on the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. STEVENS] and the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LAFFERTY] have three legislative days within which to file minority views on the Interstate Trade Commission bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4260. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

S. 4261. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 11269) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHIVELY, Mr. JOHNSON, and Mr. STERLING as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On April 14, 1914:

S. 474. An act to authorize the issuance of unqualified patents to public lands in certain cases.

On April 15, 1914:

S. 3843. An act for the relief of Bellevadorah Steele.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 4260. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 4261. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

At the request of Mr. LOGUE, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was discharged from the further consideration of the House joint resolution 234, directing the selection of a site for the erection of a statue in Washington, D. C., to the memory of the late Maj. Gen. George Gordon Meade, and the same was referred to the Committee on the Library.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

By direction of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, Mr. FLOOD of Virginia reported the bill (H. R. 15762) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, which was read the first and second time and, with the accompanying report (No. 545), ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois reserves all points of order on the bill.

POST OFFICES.

Mr. BRODBECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD concerning certain newspaper articles charging that postmasterships are bartered and sold in York and Adams Counties, in my district, in Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner stated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is to vote on the amendments to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill (H. R. 15279).

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the amendments on page 2 and on page 12 apply to the mileage of Senators and Representatives. I therefore ask unanimous consent that these two amendments be voted on together.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the amendments with respect to the mileage of Senators and Representatives be voted on together. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the vote will be taken first on the amendment to section 6 of the bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the custom has been to take the votes on the amendments in the order in which the amendments appear in the bill, and not to take the amendment that is last in the bill and vote on it first. The first amendment to be reported is that on page 2. The mere fact that a separate vote is demanded on some particular amendment in advance of a demand for a separate vote on some other amendment does not change the procedure.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, the RECORD, and more particularly the Journal, show that my demand for a separate vote came first.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think it amounts to a bawbee which way the votes on these amendments are put.

Mr. MURDOCK. But I do.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will put them in the order in which they come in the bill, as that has been the practice.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I do think it makes some difference. There are going to be a number of roll calls here to-day, and I made my demand in the House first. The RECORD so shows, and the Journal carries the fact that my demand was first made, and if the proceedings of the House on a separate vote to-day are to follow the Journal, the vote on the amendment to section 6 ought to come first.

Mr. FITZGERALD rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will relieve all gentlemen from any remarks on the subject. The practice—and the Chair does not know how it grew up—has been to vote on the amendments in the order in which they come in the bill, although the Chair repeats that he does not see that it makes a particle of difference how the vote is taken.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair indulge me for a moment?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. MURDOCK. The amendment on which I demanded a separate vote covers all of the subsequent matters into permanent law.

The SPEAKER. But it will have the same effect, no matter when the vote is taken.

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes; but its fortune depends somewhat on the time on which it is voted on.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think so. The Clerk will report the first two amendments, which are to be voted on at the same time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, lines 4 to 10, inclusive, strike out the paragraph and insert: "For mileage of Senators, $51,000."

Page 12, line 19, strike out the paragraph beginning on line 19, on page 12, and including line 2, on page 13, and insert:

"For mileage of Representatives and Delegates and expenses of Resident Commissioners, $175,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on these two amendments together.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee) there were—ayes 65, noes 74.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOWARD Would a motion for the yeas and nays be in order as a substitute for the motion?

The SPEAKER. Of course it would.

Mr. HOWARD. Then, Mr. Speaker, I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, there is a dispute among Members here as to the exact question on which we are about to vote. What is the exact question?

The SPEAKER. The exact question before the House is whether it will have tellers, but the thing to be voted on is the mileage amendment in reference to Senators and Representatives, the two amendments to be taken together.

Mr. COOPER. What is the effect——

Mr. FITZGERALD. An "aye" vote means mileage under the present law; a "no" vote means the provision reported by the committee to pay the actual expenses.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BARNHART. I rise to demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. They have been already demanded.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered, and the Clerk will call the roll. These two amendments taken together reestablish the old law about mileage.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 95, nays 242, answered "present" 5, not voting 89, as follows::

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. GOLDFOGLE with Mr. LANGHAM.

Mr. GUDGER with Mr. GUERNSEY.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina with Mr. KIESS of Pennsylvania.

Mr. ESTOPINAL with Mr. PAYNE.

Mr. BATHRICK with Mr. WINSLOW.

On this vote:

Mr. TUTTLE (for the amendment) with Mr. PROUTY (against).

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

A quorum being present, the Doorkeeper was directed to open the doors.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the bill as it now stands has no provision for the Life-Saving Service or the office of the Comptroller of the Currency or of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and, in addition, there are certain other places which have been eliminated from the bill. I ask unanimous consent to insert amendments that will restore the items that were eliminated.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to consider at this time amendments for the Life-Saving Service, the Comptroller of the Currency, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and certain other places that were eliminated from the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. VARE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from New York whether among the "certain other places" he proposes to provide for the very efficient engineer in the Quartermaster Corps, who has spent 25 years in the service of the Government, who had passed a civil-service examination, against whom there were no charges made, and who was apparently dropped without any consideration whatever?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The position to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania refers was not reported in the bill, and was not reported because the Quartermaster General did not estimate for it. He stated to the committee that the place was not needed. Under these circumstances I could not request that $2,500 be carried for the compensation of an official for whom there is no use in the Government service.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask if it is the intention of the chairman of the committee to offer an amendment increasing the salaries in any of these divisions, to which he has alluded, above what was carried in the last appropriation bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not above what is carried in the current law; but they are in excess of the amounts fixed in some instances in the statutes creating the places.

Mr. FOWLER. It will not give them any advantage over salaries of officers carried in the last bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It puts them on the same basis. It puts in the bill the salaries of those officials which now exist and the compensation they are now receiving.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire whether this amendment will be subject to the same right of debate as if brought up in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think not; I am asking to have them inserted by unanimous consent.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman is asking unanimous consent to consider them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There was no objection to them except on the ground that they were in excess of the statutory amount. They will be reinserted in the Senate and agreed to. It would seem that if the House is to send a bill to the other body appropriating for departmental service, it should not send one eliminating three of the most important branches of the service in the departments in Washington.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from New York yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman a list of these amendments?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have.

Mr. MANN. Why not have it read?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask to have the Clerk read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the bill as agreed upon in Committee of the Whole as follows:

"On page 32, in line 16, instead of '$3,500,' where it first occurs, insert '$5,000,' and instead of '$3,500,' where it last occurs, insert '$4,500.'

"On page 33, in line 3, strike out '$2,500' where it first occurs and insert '$3,000.'

"On page 34, in line 13, strike out '$4,500' and insert '$5,000.'

"On page 35, in line 2, strike out '$3,000' and insert '$4,000.'

"On page 37, in line 3, after the word 'appointments,' insert 'chief of division, $3,000; assistant chief of division, $2,000.'

"In line 20, after the word 'moneys,' insert 'chief of division, $3,000.'

"In line 24, after the word 'currency,' insert 'chief of division, $3,500.'

"On page 39, in line 21, after the word 'architect,' insert 'Supervising Architect, $5,000.'

"On page 40, after the word 'Treasurer,' in line 21, insert 'comptroller, $6,000.'

"On page 43, in line 21, after the word 'auditor,' insert '$5,000.'

"On page 45, in line 6, after the sum '$3,600,' insert 'deputy assistant treasurer, $3,200.'

"Restore to the bill lines 20 to 25, on page 49, together with lines 1 to 5, inclusive, on page 50, providing for the office of Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

"Restore to the bill all of lines 9 to 17, on page 50, providing for the office of the Life-Saving Service.

"On page 51, line 19, after the word 'division,' insert 'chief, $4,000.'

"In line 24, after the word 'mint,' insert 'director, $5,000.'"

Mr. MURDOCK. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Before the gentleman reserves the right to object, the Chair wants to state the request. The gentleman's request is for unanimous consent to insert these propositions in the bill.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman a question. Is there anything touched in these proposed amendments save salaries?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Nothing whatever.

Mr. MURDOCK. On page 51 of the bill why is not the compensation of the Chief of the Secret Service restored to that which was carried in the bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the committee reported the compensation for the Chief of the Secret Service Division at $4,250. That was an increase over what he is now receiving. The request is to insert the compensation which he is now receiving, and not the increase, but the actual compensation that he is receiving, of $4,000. The same is true in the case of the Auditor for the War Department. The committee had reported an increase of compensation of $1,000, and a point of order was made against it. The request is to restore the compensation that he is now receiving.

Mr. MURDOCK. Is that true of all of these items?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is true of all of them. We ask to insert the compensation which these officials are receiving at the present time.

Mr. MURDOCK. And the gentleman is not seeking to restore the salaries first reported by the committee?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. In the instances where the committee recommended an increase and they were taken out on a point of order I am not attempting to restore the proposed increase, but merely to restore the compensation now being received.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, if these amendments are acted upon favorably, the action coming after the vote on the amendment to section 6 making these salaries carried in this bill the permanent law, will that section apply to these amendments, making them permanent law?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are some 16,000 salaries carried in this bill, and there are only about two dozen of the salaries that were dropped out.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I thought something was done in connection with the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, carried on page 50 of the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] withdrew the point of order on that item.

Mr. FOWLER. I made no point of order on that.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman is not seeking to reinsert the piece-rate section?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no. This does not put in the provision authorizing the piece-rate compensation.

Mr. BRYAN. The salary of the auditor, Mr. Kram, to which I made a point of order, is being restored to $5,000?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. BRYAN. I do not object to that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the chairman of the committee to explain the paragraph pertaining to the Life-Saving Service.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This paragraph was taken out on a point of order:

Office of Life-Saving Service: General superintendent, $4,000, and $500 additional while the office is held by the present incumbent; assistant general superintendent, $2,500; principal clerk, $2,000; title and contract clerk, $2,000; topographer and hydrographer, $1,800; civil engineer, $1,800; draftsman, $1,500; clerks—3 of class 4, 5 of class 3, 4 of class 2.

Mr. REED. The gentleman need not read anything further. That is the same as was carried in the provisions of the bill of last year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. REED. No change whatever?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No change whatever, but the paragraph was subject to a point of order because of the $500 additional while the present incumbent is in office, so that the entire paragraph went out.

Mr. REED. And unless this amendment prevails there will be no provision for paying those salaries?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; there will not.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York to insert these propositions in the appropriation bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report the same back at once with amendments striking from the bill all provisions for the traveling expenses of Senators and Representatives in Congress, with a further amendment reducing the salaries of Senators and Representatives in Congress to $6,000 per year, and a further amendment reducing the salaries of clerks to Senators and Representatives to $1,200 per year.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, on that I reserve the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman to restate the last portion of his motion.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Reducing the salaries of clerks to Representatives to $1,200 a year.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman include the clerks to Senators also?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No; I will leave that out.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the motion of the gentleman from Florida. The gentleman from Florida moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report back forthwith amendments striking out the mileage allowance to Senators and Representatives, reducing the salaries of Representatives and Senators to $6,000 per year, and reducing the salaries of clerks to Representatives from $1,500 to $1,200 a year.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have that amendment reported from the Clerk's desk.

Mr. MANN. It is not in writing.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand that the amendment be put in writing.

The SPEAKER. Of course it is subject to the point of order if the gentleman does not reduce it to writing.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I will do so if I am given the time. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no provision in this bill which carries any salaries for clerks to Representatives. There is no such position provided for in the bill, and if the whole proposition is submitted together the point of order to that ought to be sustained.

Mr. MANN. How about the Holman rule?

Mr. BARTLETT. The Holman rule is a good rule and ought to be observed. [Laughter.] My point, Mr. Speaker, is this: That there is no provision in the bill that provides for the salaries of clerks. The provision in the bill is for Members, for clerical hire, and the language is not for the office of clerks or clerks' salary.

The SPEAKER. Well, the Chair takes it for granted the gentleman will state the proper language when he reduces his motion to writing.

Mr. BARTLETT. At present as it is stated it is clearly subject to the point of order.

The SPEAKER. As presented it is out of order; but the gentleman is going to reduce it to writing.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to ask the gentleman from New York to move to take a recess or an adjournment for a day or two to give the gentleman time——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I asked for the regular order.

Mr. MANN (continuing). To reduce his proposition to writing and for the fellows to get their courage up to vote against it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the various subjects embraced in this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, why not have the speech at the present time? By that time the gentleman from Florida will be able to frame his motion to recommit.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to talk for a few moments on——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, why not give the gentleman the privilege of speaking at the present time, when there is nothing else before the House?

The SPEAKER. Because he can not get the chance. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Are these requests in order when the House is voting upon a bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, Mr. Speaker, I made a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the House is doing nothing and that kind of a request might be granted.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think the regular order requires the House to proceed to business. We are not obliged to wait for some one to prepare something.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I have prepared my motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wants to make this statement about this. The rule says:

> Every motion made to the House and entertained by the Speaker shall be reduced to writing on the demand of any Member.

And so forth.

That evidently contemplates giving a Member a reasonable time, not to take an hour or a week. Will the gentleman send his motion up?

Mr. RAGSDALE. Will the gentleman permit an interruption, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not the floor.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I thought he had it, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I am.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Mr. CLARK of Florida moves to recommit the bill with instructions to report the same back to the House at once with a provision striking from the bill the provision with relation to the mileage or transportation of Representatives, and also an amendment reducing the salaries of Senators and Representatives in Congress——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, wait a minute. It should be "mileage or transportation of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MADDEN. I think it should be modified so as to provide for Delegates and Commissioners.

The SPEAKER. That is a matter of argument, and the Chair has nothing on earth to do with it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. It should be "Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress."

Mr. MADDEN. "And Commissioners."

Mr. CLARK of Florida. "Salaries of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Mr. CLARK of Florida moves to recommit the bill with instructions to report the same back to the House at once with a provision striking from the bill the provision with relation to the mileage or transportation of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, and also an amendment reducing the salaries of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates to Congress to $6,000 per year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the motion by striking out all after the words "at once," and I move the previous question on the amendment and motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment to the motion to recommit, and moves the previous question on both propositions. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amend, by striking out all of the motion to recommit after the words "at once."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the motion be reported then as it will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> So that it will read:
> "Mr. CLARK of Florida moves to recommit the bill with instructions to report the same back to the House at once."

[Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. On that the gentleman from New York demands the previous question.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MURDOCK. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 144, noes 49.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, a division.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present—Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Clerk proceeded with the calling of the roll.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, is a parliamentary inquiry in order while the roll is being called?

The SPEAKER. Not when the roll is being called.

Mr. DONOVAN. But the roll has not been called.

The SPEAKER. Yes; the first name has been called.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, is not this roll call on the previous question and not on the Fitzgerald amendment?

The SPEAKER. Oh, no.

Mr. SAUNDERS. We have not reached the point of voting on the Fitzgerald amendment yet. It is on the question of no quorum.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman withdrew the point of no quorum and asked for the yeas and nays.

Mr. DONOVAN. Am I not in order in making a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER. Not after the roll call starts.

Mr. DONOVAN. This is a question, and I want to know how to vote on it.

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DONOVAN. But it will be parliamentary.

The SPEAKER. It is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DONOVAN. But it will be when I get it out. [Laughter.] I want to find out in voting "yea" if I vote to retain the salary as it now exists or to reduce it? Is not that a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. It is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ASWELL. It is a very important one.

The SPEAKER. Well, each man finds it out for himself. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 209, nays 94, answered "present" 4, not voting 124, as follows:

Mr. SAUNDERS with Mr. MCGUIRE of Oklahoma.

Mr. SMITH of Texas with Mr. MILLER.

Mr. SPARKMAN with Mr. PORTER.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to recommit, made by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK], as amended by the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have it reported again.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

By Mr. CLARK of Florida:

"I move to recommit the bill with instructions to report the same back to the House at once."

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. In order that the motion be reported and that the amendment to the motion be reported. I offered no such motion as that.

The SPEAKER. I know; but the proposition to be voted on is the motion of the gentleman from Florida to recommit with certain instructions, and the House has just voted on the Fitzgerald amendment, which strikes out everything after the last words read by the Clerk. So that leaves the proposition to be voted——

Mr. CLARK of Florida. As amended?

The SPEAKER. As amended.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does a vote for that amendment mean opposition to any reduction of salary?

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry. The question is on adopting the motion of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] to recommit, as amended by the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The motion as amended was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. HAMLIN, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for 10 days, on account of important business.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will submit it.

Mr. PADGETT. Will it be in order for me to submit a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the naval appropriation bill?

The SPEAKER. Yes; that is a preferential motion.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 14 hours, 6½ hours to be controlled by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HENSLEY], a member of the committee, representing himself and the others on the minority report; 3 hours to be controlled by myself; and 3 hours by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS], on the other side of the aisle in behalf of the bill; and 1½ hours to be controlled by the gentleman from California [Mr. STEPHENS], a member of the committee, representing the Progressive Party.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT], pending the motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, asks unanimous consent——

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. POU. I would like to inquire if this is not the Friday set apart under the rules for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. It undoubtedly is; but——

Mr. POU. Then, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Wait a minute. The Chair did not finish. A motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to discuss an appropriation bill is a preferential motion over that.

Mr. POU. I am aware, Mr. Speaker, that that has been so decided. The point I make is one that I do not think has been made before: Under the rules it says "it shall be in order." Now, the point that I am making is that it is at least for the Chair to decide which motion the Chair will entertain; that, having secured recognition of the Chair, I respectfully submit the motion that I make being equally in order under the rules with the motion of my friend from Tennessee, that my motion should be put first.

The SPEAKER. Oh, no. The preferential motion is put first.

Mr. POU. Then, Mr. Speaker, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. POU. The only way that the House can proceed with the consideration of the Private Calendar would be to vote down the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee?

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly it would.

Mr. POU. I will say, Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the House, that I do not want to make any fight against this motion, and I will ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday night of next week a session of the House be had at 8 o'clock, to continue until 11 o'clock, for the consideration of business on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] asks unanimous consent that on next Tuesday the House take a recess from half past 5 until 8 o'clock, and reconvene at 8 o'clock and continue until 11 o'clock, for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman springs a motion of that sort at a time when I do not know whether the gentleman has an engagement on that night or not, and I do not know whether I have an engagement on that night or not. I would not want to consent without knowing. But the gentleman's request would not bring any of his bills before the House on that night, anyhow.

Mr. POU. I was going to ask to amend that request by stating "for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Claims."

Mr. MANN. But the Speaker put the request before the gentleman amended it. For the present, for the reason I have stated, I shall object. I have no objection to the meeting if Members are posted in advance.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT], pending a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on the naval appropriation bill, asks unanimous consent that the general debate on the bill be limited to 14 hours; that 6½ hours of that time be controlled by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HENSLEY] and 6 hours be controlled by himself and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS] and 1½ hours be controlled by the gentleman from California [Mr. STEPHENS] for the Progressives.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I have just asked the chairman of the committee in regard to the distribution of the time, and I am surprised to find that the three hours that he has reserved in his own control is entirely parceled out. In view of the fact that some of us want some time for the discussion of this bill and in view of the fact that I myself feel that, in justice to the people whom I have the honor to represent, I ought to have some time, I shall have to ask for a longer time unless I can get time from the chairman or from the ranking minority Member, my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS].

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, 3 hours' time for the Republican side of the House, out of 14 hours of general debate, does not seem to me to be a very liberal allowance.

Mr. PADGETT. Fourteen hours of general debate.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] proposes 14 hours of general debate, and proposes to give the Republicans 3 hours of that. Of course we are not as numerous now as we shall be in the next Congress [laughter and applause], but we have not entirely disappeared from the face of the earth yet.

Mr. PADGETT. I will say to the gentleman that the time is being divided not so much politically as it is with reference to the alignment upon the bill. There are four gentlemen, members of the committee, who filed a minority report opposing certain provisions in the bill.

Mr. MANN. I believe they are all on that side of the House, are they not?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir; they are all Democrats.

Mr. MANN. That is the same thing.

Mr. PADGETT. I spoke to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS], and also to the gentleman from California [Mr. STEPHENS], and the arrangement that I have submitted was entirely agreeable to them. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS], with myself, stands in support of the bill, and that gives us six hours.

Mr. MANN. I am disposed to do anything that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS] wants, and yet he wants to pass the bill. Some of the gentlemen who want to be heard in general debate come to me on this side of the House and do not go to the gentleman from Massachusetts, because he was not the ranking Republican member of the committee.

Mr. PADGETT. That is true. But he is the ranking one who is present.

Mr. MANN. I say, Members did not know, because he is not the ranking Republican member. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] is the ranking Republican. We want more time.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. So do we.

Mr. PADGETT. I will state to the gentleman that some time since I spoke to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], who is the ranking Republican member on the committee, and the proposition was that we would devote two days to general debate, and that we would divide the time as I have stated, substantially, and it was agreeable to him.

Mr. MANN. That was before anybody had discussed the question, probably.

Mr. PADGETT. In other words, the proposition to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] agreed was that I would yield one-half of my time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HENSLEY], and he would yield one-half of his time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HENSLEY], so that those in opposition to the bill would control one-half of the time. He assented to that. Then we agreed to take care of the gentleman from California [Mr. STEPHENS], on behalf of the Progressives, out of our time; but when we come to consider the bill at so late an hour this afternoon, and on account of other arrangements, it was changed to an hour basis, and we made the arrangement as I have suggested.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? If the gentleman would postpone this matter until to-morrow, and give the Committee on Claims an opportunity to have two hours this afternoon, perhaps he might be able to make a satisfactory arrangement. I do not believe there is any reason on the face of the earth why two hours this afternoon should not be devoted to the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I should like to say to the chairman of the committee and to the Members of the House that I feel in a position of some embarrassment, not being the ranking member of the committee, in endeavoring to carry out what I understand was a substantial agreement between the ranking member of the committee and the chairman; and I want to say to the chairman of the committee that since the agreement was first made known to me there has been a very great demand among Republicans for time on this bill. I am quite certain that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] had no knowledge of the great number of Members who would desire to speak; and in view of the number of men who have come to me to-day, in addition to those who had signified to the gentleman from Pennsylvania their desire to be heard, I would suggest to the chairman of the committee that it would perhaps be a fairer division if we could have more time for general debate, and more of that added time allowed to the Republicans.

Mr. PADGETT. What suggestion has the gentleman to make relative to time.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I suggest not less than 16 hours.

Mr. MANN. We want at least five hours on this side.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I was going to say at least five hours for the Republicans; and even at that men will have to be denied the full amount of time that they have asked for.

Mr. MANN. Let me make this suggestion to the gentleman, that we ought to pass this naval bill without any trouble by the end of the month. If we pass the naval bill by the end of April, we will have some days that we can devote to trust legislation or anything of that sort, in addition to the private bills, probably, before the sundry civil bill is ready to come into the House. If we pass the sundry civil bill by the end of May, the diplomatic bill does not take very long, and we shall be ready, as far as the House is concerned, to adjourn fairly early in June; and if we do that, and something unusual does not come up, the chances are that Congress will be able to adjourn sometime in July. Now, there is no special hurry, so as to prevent proper debate on this bill.

Mr. PADGETT. There are two other appropriation bills which the gentleman has not mentioned—the pension appropriation bill, now upon the calendar, and the general deficiency bill.

Mr. MANN. The general deficiency bill usually does not take very much time, and the pension appropriation bill does not take much time. There is plenty of time for those. The only two important appropriation bills pending that take time are the naval bill and the sundry civil bill, which latter bill has not yet been reported by the committee.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, one other thought occurs to me. As I understood the original agreement, it was for 12 hours of debate. That agreement was made on the theory that we might finish general debate on the bill Tuesday afternoon. On the proposition for 14 hours' debate it is manifestly impossible to conclude this debate on the naval bill next Tuesday. It will have to go into Thursday to get in the full 14 hours. I have the impression that if we extend it to 16 or 17 hours we can finish the general debate Thursday night, and the Republican side of the House, at least, will be satisfied with the allotment of time to us of 5 hours.

Mr. PADGETT. How would this suggestion do, that we agree that the general debate conclude with the adjournment of the House Thursday night?

Mr. MANN. I do not think it would be wise to do that, in view of to-morrow.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. To-morrow will be a short day.

Mr. PADGETT. That would give to-morrow and it would give Tuesday, and I will also couple with it a request that we have a night session Tuesday night from 8 o'clock until 11.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I suggest that instead of a night session we come in at 11 o'clock on Tuesday or 11 o'clock on Thursday and get that much added time for general debate.

Mr. MANN. There is no such emergency now about time. We have plenty of time to get through with the appropriation bills and dispose of all the bills on the Private Calendar besides, before the end of June.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman any proposition?

Mr. MANN. Oh, let us increase the time.

Mr. PADGETT. Will 18 hours be satisfactory?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Five hours on the Republican side.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 18 hours, 5 hours of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS], 7 hours by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HENSLEY], and the remainder by myself. I will take care of the gentleman from California [Mr. STEPHENS].

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. MURDOCK. Give the gentleman from California an hour and a half.

Mr. STEPHENS of California. The original arrangement was that I should have an hour and a half.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; and I will carry out that arrangement.

Mr. STEPHENS of California. That is to be a part of the understanding and a part of the unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. And the understanding is that I shall be taken care of?

Mr. MANN. To the best of his ability.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. That I may have 20 or 30 minutes?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; 20 minutes.

Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts. And not "to the best of the gentleman's ability."

Mr. PADGETT. I did not say that.

Mr. MANN. I would not have the nerve to ask what the gentleman from Massachusetts is asking.

Mr. RUCKER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the question in my mind is whether this request carries with it an understanding that the debate will be continuous during the sessions until the 18 hours are consumed. If so, I want to object.

Mr. PADGETT. It will not interfere with Mondays or Wednesdays.

Mr. RUCKER. I want to say that on next Tuesday I hope to ask to take up a privileged report.

Mr. MANN. It would not interfere with that.

The SPEAKER. It can not interfere with privileged reports.

Mr. RUCKER. Then I want the House to understand that on next Tuesday, after the reading of the Journal, I expect to take up a privileged report.

Mr. MURDOCK. Is it not fair to let the House know what that privileged report is?

Mr. RUCKER. It is a report on a resolution offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] with reference to campaign contributions collected by Members of Congress from each other. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that there be 18 hours of general debate on the naval appropriation bill, 5 hours to be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS], 7 hours by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HENSLEY], and the rest of the time by himself, with the understanding that he shall yield one hour and a half to the gentleman from California [Mr. STEPHENS] and 20 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MURRAY]. Is there objection?

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the chairman if the 18 hours, if allowed, is to be used in debate on the measure reported, or are you going to allow those that have the time to address the House to talk upon any subject under the sun?

Mr. PADGETT. I can not answer that question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will answer the question.

Mr. DONOVAN. One more question.

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair answer this one first. In general debate gentlemen can speak about anything under heavens. [Laughter.]

Mr. DONOVAN. One more question. Do members of the committee have any rights over other Members; that is, are they favored in addressing the House in the allowance of time?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; members of the committee have precedence in recognition.

Mr. DONOVAN. The fact is, I want to say to the chairman of the Naval Committee that you have members of that committee who never attended any of the sessions, and they can not know anything about this bill. That is true, is it not?

Mr. PADGETT. No; no members of that kind are on my committee.

Mr. DONOVAN. The minutes of your committee show that they have been absent, and yet you are going to favor them with time. How can they have any knowledge of the measure if they never attended any of the meetings? I will say to the chairman of the Naval Committee that he does not know what is going on in his committee room if he makes the statement to this House that he does not know what members of his committee have been absent. The fact is, one of them has not been present at a single meeting, and another one has been present but a few moments. Now, they are to be shown favoritism over Members of this body who are here at every session, while these Members draw their salaries and are practically never present. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. POU) there were 135 ayes and 24 noes.

So the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the naval bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14034) making appropriations for naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I will ask that I be notified at the end of 50 minutes. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Naval Affairs, in submitting the present bill to the House, feel that the committee has submitted to the House for its consideration and its approval a bill which has been thoroughly considered, and which the necessities of the service thoroughly and fully justify.

The estimates, supplemental estimates, and recommendations submitted by the Navy Department for the fiscal year 1914, which was the last current act, amounted to $168,946,179. The estimates submitted and presented to Congress by the present Secretary of the Navy for the fiscal year ending 1915 amount to $144,492,453.53, being a reduction in the estimates of $24,453,725.47. The committee has reported a bill carrying $139,964,333.61, being a reduction from the estimates of $4,528,119.92.

The law of last year carried $140,800,643.53. The present bill is a reduction under the law of last year of $836,309.92.

Last year the bill carried one battleship. The bill as reported and pending before the House provides for two battleships. I wish to call the attention of the House to the statement of the reduction. In the present bill the following increases are made over the appropriation of last year: Pay of Navy, $746,062; contingent Navy, $104,000; Bureau of Navigation, $19,908; Bureau of Yards and Docks, $120,000; Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, $300,000. The following decreases appear in the present bill: Bureau of Ordnance, $695,110; Bureau of Equipment, $395,000; public works, $1,399,945; Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, $70,000; Bureau of Construction and Repair, $305,000; Bureau of Steam Engineering, $92,000; Naval Academy, $87,500; Marine Corps—paymaster, $157,826.96; quartermaster, $54,937. There were total increases in the bill amounting to $1,289,970, and there were total decreases in the bill of $3,257,318.92, making a net decrease of $1,967,348.92, under the provisions for the Naval Establishment. There was an increase in that portion of the bill for the increase of the Navy, new construction, on account of battleships, submarines, and for the ships heretofore authorized, and for ordnance equipment, and so forth, of the new construction of about $1,100,000, so that the total net decrease in this bill under the bill of the past year, as stated a moment ago, is $836,309.92.

There is one item of increase of $104,000 to which I call your attention, which is occasioned on account of the invitation which was extended by the President of the United States, pursuant to the resolution of the Congress, inviting the other nations of the world to send their ships and participate in the naval parade and demonstration incident to the official opening of the Panama Canal. That is provided for in this bill.

The building program as provided for in the bill is for two battleships, eight submarine torpedo boats, and six torpedo-boat destroyers.

The bill also carries a provision relative to the naturalization of enlisted men who have served four years in the Navy and have an honorable discharge. Under the present law it is necessary that a person applying for naturalization must have lived for one year in the State where he makes application. The enlisted men of necessity can not have that one year's residence, and this provision authorizes the naturalization of persons who are, under the law, otherwise qualified for citizenship, without requiring the one year's residence in the State and the two years' previous declaration of intention, the service in the Navy of four years and the honorable discharge being considered equivalent to the two years' declaration and the one year of residence.

There is another provision relative to amending the disposition of beneficiaries in the naval home. Under the present law, as is known, the naval home is maintained by the interest upon the trust fund that is in the Treasury, which arose from the prize money of the Navy. The interest upon this money is devoted, first, to the maintenance of the naval home, and the remainder goes to the general pension fund for distribution under the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Pensions. There are certain cases where persons in the home die, leaving certain little personal effects. This is to provide for the administration of these effects, and to put the naval home upon the same basis as the Army home for disabled soldiers.

There is also a provision increasing the number of chaplains in the Navy. We have at present 24 chaplains authorized for the Navy. That number was authorized by law in 1842, and it has never been increased since, and there has come up from all over the country a very insistent and persistent demand that there should be an increase in the number of chaplains in the Navy. The representatives of 31 Protestant denominations appeared before the committee, and also the representative of the Catholic Church, all agreeing in this respect, and we have so provided, and the proper needs of the Navy require the increase.

There is also a provision for the authorization of a contract for the construction of a dry dock at Hunters Point, San Francisco, Cal., authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to enter into a contract with the Union Iron Works for the use, not exceeding six years, of a dry dock capable of docking any ship that may pass through the Panama Canal, at an annual rental of $50,000. We will discuss the particular merits of the matter when we reach it under the five-minute rule, as I do not have time to take these matters up in detail now.

There is another provision authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to appoint, upon satisfactory examination, 25 men from the enlisted personnel of the Navy, to the Naval Academy each year. The committee thought that was a meritorious recognition of the enlisted men, and that it would open a door of hope and expectation to them to rise in the naval service.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Is that to be made without examination?

Mr. PADGETT. No; I said upon satisfactory examination conducted by the department.

Mr. HOBSON. Is it not competitive?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. It is open to all of them, and the 25 making the best examination, the best grades, are to be appointed. There is also a provision in the bill authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to make an investigation and report to the next Congress relative to the cost of the establishment of an armor-plate factory and the cost of manufacture by the Government, and to report all of the facts with a view of the next Congress considering the advisability and propriety of establishing a Government armor-plate factory.

These, I believe, are the new provisions in the bill. I wish now in a hurried manner, because in the time I have reserved for myself I will have to pass very hurriedly over the matter, to call attention to some matters in the minority views and to invite the attention and consideration of the committee to them. There is a statement in the report as follows:

The bill carries the sum of $139,964,333.61 for the Naval Establishment, and is less in the amount of appropriation than the sum carried in the bill of March 4, 1913, by $836,309.92. We regard the amount as inexcusably extravagant and a criminal waste of the public funds.

Farther down on the same page the minority views contain the following:

The Navy Department did seek at first to increase at the present session of Congress this criminal waste of the public funds more than $7,000,000; but after the committee had spent months investigating the matter and after the facts had been fully developed and the danger of a failure to secure the authorization of two more battleships had become apparent, then the department reduced its estimates about $8,000,000, and for this reason the bill now carries $836,309.92 less than the last appropriation bill.

Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen who signed those minority views, I am sure, understand the meaning of the English language and the use of words. I want to say that that is a criticism that has no justification whatever, either in respect to the committee or to the Navy Department. It is without foundation in fact and is a statement that has no basis upon which to rest. The statement says that the Navy Department sought to increase this "criminal waste of the public funds" more than $7,000,000. I have already called attention to the fact that the estimates submitted by the present Secretary of the Navy are $24,000,000 less than the estimates submitted one year ago by the preceding Secretary of the Navy.

I have called your attention to the fact that the estimates, all told, only amounted to $144,492,453. The bill is $139,964,333. Where could there have been any withdrawal of $7,000,000? The difference between $139,964,333 and $144,492,453 is only $4,528,119. Where could the Secretary have withdrawn estimates of $7,000,000? The fact is that neither the Secretary of the Navy nor the department withdrew one single cent of the estimates which they submitted. They were submitted to the committee, and the committee passed upon all of them; and the statement that the Secretary of the Navy or the department was playing with these estimates for the purpose of producing a condition to facilitate or encourage the authorization of two battleships has no foundation in fact. From the time that the committee had its first meeting until this moment it was perfectly apparent and plain that the committee was going to report two battleships. There was no necessity for withdrawing estimates, and no attempt to withdraw estimates was made. Now, I want to say that the present Secretary has manifested a personal interest in the management of naval affairs and has perfected economies that characterize his administration and differentiate it commendably from all that have passed heretofore. He has devoted his strict personal attention to the matter to such a degree that he was enabled to submit estimates of $24,000,000 less than the preceding year. I want to call attention, if you please, to some of the economies that he has effected. I have already called your attention to the recommendation of the decreases in this bill amounting to $3,257,318.92, and, you notice, those decreases were on shore, and the increases relate to matters afloat, where they should be; but let me call your attention, if you please, to something further.

On battleship 39, the last battleship authorized, in the purchase of materials the savings on special steel treatment were $378,261; on turbine rotor drums, $102,836; on medium-size plates, $19,000; on angle irons and small iron and steel material, $3,000; on forgings and shaftings, $159,646; making a total saving upon that one ship of $642,743. In the matter of armament for the ship—steel, and so forth, for the construction of the ship—on class A armor, $95,746; on turret armor, $12,600; on class B armor, $3,528; on bolts, $7,500; a total of $117,374, or a total saving of $782,117 on that one ship on those items. But let us proceed further. For projectiles, comparing the purchases of 1912 and the bids accepted and the contract made for the present year, this coming year, one year apart, the contracts are made for a specific amount with the condition that the Navy Department may call for 20 per cent additional if it so desires. Now, then, the total saving on the bid for 1914 on projectiles was $890,625. If the 20 per cent is called for under the contract, the saving on projectiles alone will amount to $1,008,750. If I had time, I could pick out many other items in detail, and go over them with you and call your attention to the fact that there is no foundation whatever for this criticism that is made of the Secretary and of the department. These same gentleman—with the exception of Mr. GRAY—Mr. WITHERSPOON, Mr. HENSLEY, and Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois, filed a minority report last year, and in that report they praised the department and spoke of it as follows:

Not only has the entire Navy Department in all its bureaus manifested a commendable effort to practice economy, but the Naval Affairs Committee in preparing this bill has, in our judgment, cut down every item, with the exceptions hereinafter pointed out, as low as is consistent with the efficiency of the Navy.

And all through that report they commend and speak of the commendable and remarkable economy of the Navy Department a year ago, and yet I tell you a year ago the department submitted estimates of $168,000,000, which is spoken of as commendable economy, and the present Secretary submitted estimates of $144,000,000—$24,000,000 less—and they call it inexcusable extravagance, a criminal waste of the public funds! We have to pass judgment upon whether or not the criticism has a basis and is justified. I want to call attention, if you please, to another matter. I see I must hurry on. On page 49 they speak of the Arkansas, the Wyoming, the New York, the Texas, the Oklahoma, and the Nevada as having been provided for, and that the Arkansas and the Wyoming are completed, and the New York and Texas will be completed, and have no part in the present bill. I want simply to call attention to the fact that this bill carries $139,000 for the Texas, notwithstanding the statement in the minority report that it has no part in this bill. Another thing, they charge the department with violating the act of Congress authorizing the construction of the Pennsylvania.

I will read:

The act of 1912, which authorized the construction of the Pennsylvania, expressly provided that it should have "as heavy armor and as powerful armament as any vessel of its class," and the act which authorized the construction of No. 39 uses the same language with reference to that vessel. But they have both been constructed with a much heavier armor and a much more powerful armament than any vessel of its class.

And they charge that that is an extravagance.

Now, let me call your attention to the facts. The Pennsylvania was provided for by the naval act of 1912. The British estimates of 1911 and 1912 provided for four battleships. The Iron Duke, which is contemporary with the Pennsylvania and antedates No. 39, carries 13½ inches of armor, which is the exact thickness of that on our own ship. The turrets on both ships are 10 inches. Then, when you come to armament, the German battleships of the Markgraf class carry ten 14-inch guns, and the British ships carry ten 13.5-inch guns. At the same time the Germans were designing two ships carrying eight 15-inch guns, and Japan had already begun four ships carrying ten 14-inch guns and three more carrying eight 14-inch guns. And yet they charge that the Secretary of the Navy was violating the act of Congress that provided that our ships should have as heavy armor and armament as any ship of their class; and these were being built by the other nations at the very time and the limitation of the bill was the minimum limitation of requirements.

I want to call your attention, if you please, to another statement on top of page 51, which says, speaking of other ships:

Our Navy has the same number as Germany and more than half as many as England.

I want to take occasion just at this time to refer to a comparison of the two countries. They say that the Navy of the United States is greater than the navy of Germany, and they use 15 or 20 or more pages arguing that contention and trying to establish that the Navy of the United States is greater than the navy of Germany. Every naval authority in the world classes the United States third, except these gentlemen in the minority report.

The total tonnage of England is 2,072,711 tons; Germany, 948,338 tons; the United States, 760,002 tons. That is what is built. How it would be if those built and building were counted is as follows:

Great Britain, 2,611,291 tons; Germany, 1,228,208 tons; the United States, 921,244 tons, or more than 300,000 tons less than Germany. But let us compare, if you please, the ships. Germany has built 13 dreadnaughts; the United States has 7. Germany is building 6 dreadnaughts; the United States is building 5.

Mr. HOBSON. Will the gentleman permit an interruption just now?

Mr. PADGETT. I have not the time.

Mr. HOBSON. Put in the battle cruisers.

Mr. PADGETT. I am coming to them right now.

Germany has built four battle cruisers, which are the equivalent of dreadnaughts, and has building three. The United States has none. These battle cruisers are 28,000 and 30,000 ton ships and carry 12, 13, or 14 inch guns, big guns, and are capital ships. So that in the modern ships that constitute the effective fighting force of the Navy Germany has 26 first-class ships of the dreadnaught type and the United States has 12.

But the gentlemen complain that the Michigan and the South Carolina are not counted, and that they should be. For the sake of argument, count the South Carolina and the Michigan as dreadnaughts, and the United States would have 14 and Germany has 26. The total number of ships—of battleships and dreadnaughts and battle cruisers—as I have stated, is as follows:

Germany has 46 and the United States has 36 effective ships. But they complain that 3 of our ships have been taken off the list—the Indiana, the Massachusetts, and the Oregon, which are old ships. Count them, if you please, and then we would have a total of 39. But there were 2 ships—the Brandenburg and the Worth—taken from the Germany Navy list, so that they would have 48 battleships and dreadnaughts to our 39.

Now, I have taken the pains to have here what the naval authorities of the world have to say upon that question. The British Naval Annual puts British first, German second, American third, French fourth, Japanese fifth. Jane, a British naval writer, says British first, German second, American third, Japanese fourth, French fifth. Taschenbuch, the German authority, says British first, German second, American third, French fourth, and Japanese fifth. The French Yearbook puts British first, German second, American third, French fourth, and Japanese fifth. Austria-Hungary places British first, German second, American third, French fourth, Japanese fifth. These are the same classification made by our naval authorities.

And yet 20 or more pages are spent in this minority report in arguing that the United States is ahead of Germany, when all the nations of the world place them just as we place them.

Now, then, I want to call your attention just in this same connection to another statement. On page 59 of the minority report appears this statement:

> On page 404 the Navy Annual gives the penetration of the 13-inch 35-caliber guns at 3,000 yards at 12 inches, and that of the 9.2-inch guns at 5½ inches the same distance.

Now, then, I have gotten the Navy Annual, and I turn to page 404. It gives the penetration at 3,000 yards of a 13-inch gun at 12 inches, but it nowhere mentions on page 404 a 9.2 or a 9.4 inch gun at all, and there is nothing given. But upon page 406 there does appear the penetration at 3,000 yards of hard steel plates of a 9.2-inch gun, 45 calibers, of 14.1 inches, and 9.2-inch gun, 50 calibers, of 15.2 inches instead of 5½ inches, as stated in the minority report.

At page 407 the Coventry Ordnance Works gives the penetration at 5,000 yards of hard-steel plates of a 9.2-inch gun at 12.3 inches, and they give the 11.2 inch, 50-caliber gun, at 18 inches.

And on page 411 are the Bethlehem Steel Works ordnance statistics, and they give the penetration of a 9.2-inch gun at 3,000 yards' range of hard-faced armor at 14.9 inches, and they give it at 8,000 yards at 10.8 inches. So that that statement in the minority report that the penetration of the 9.2-inch gun is 5½ inches does not seem to be sustained by the book that was referred to.

Another statement says that Col. Goethals stated to the committee that no hostile fleet would come wihin 500 miles of Panama if it were protected by submarines and torpedo-boat destroyers. I have here the statement copied from the hearings of Col. Goethals. I read:

> Mr. ROBERTS. If we had a large flotilla of torpedo boats, of both destroyers and submarines, stationed at either end of the canal, how close would the enemy dare to come, knowing that this large flotilla of submarines and torpedo craft was there?
> Col. GOETHALS. They would keep pretty well out.
> Mr. ROBERTS. A good many miles out?
> Col. GOETHALS. Yes, sir.
> Mr. ROBERTS. Fifteen or twenty miles from either end?
> Col. GOETHALS. It would depend upon the distance at which the torpedo craft could operate. It would depend upon their radius of action.
> Mr. HOBSON. I will ask the direct question, Can you defend the canal against land operations with an enemy in control on the seas by torpedo craft?
> Col. GOETHALS. Not by torpedo craft; no, sir.

Now, I wish to call your attention to another statement in this minority report. I have not time to read all of it. It says that the Secretaries of the Navy, when they first go in, recommend more battleships, but as they get familiar with things they recommend fewer and fewer each year, and that Mr. Meyer had stated that the ideal number of battleships was 41.

Let me read what was stated. What are the facts? In 1901 the department recommended 3 battleships; in 1902 it recommended 2 battleships; in 1903, 1 battleship; in 1904, 3 battleships; in 1905, 2 battleships; in 1906, 2 battleships; in 1907, 4 battleships; in 1908, 4 battleships; in 1909, 2 battleships; in 1910, 2 battleships; in 1911, 2 battleships; in 1912, 3 battleships; and in 1913, 2 battleships.

Does that look like getting away from the recommendations that have been made? And they omit the fact that the general board, the technical board of the Navy, that is charged with this duty, has consistently recommended 4 battleships each year. But it says that the Secretary recommended 41 battleships as the ideal number. I have copied some extracts from the Secretary's report. Here is what he says:

> The character of our battleships, armored cruisers, and coast-defense vessels built, building, or authorized would seem, according to present indications, sufficient to provide for any contingency within the limits of probability. This statement, however, must not be misunderstood. It does not at all mean that we should give up building new ships. On the contrary, the necessity for vessels of an improved type to take the place of those now recognized as obsolete, or evidently destined to become such, has become plain and urgent, while any discussion of our future needs and the proper means to meet them must of necessity be largely conjectural. I think it may be safely said that if the situation is not complicated by any unforeseen developments our program of naval construction for the future, in as far as it relates to our fighting fleet alone, should consist of substituting 5 new battleships and 2 armored cruisers for the oldest vessels of those types on our register and 5 more battleships for the 10 coast-defense vessels of the monitor type, and that the substitution should be made at least within the next six years.

Nowhere does the word "ideal" appear.

And I could take up various other reports along the same line in support of the same contention, but my time does not permit.

Great criticism has been made of the fact that the department did not count among our available ships the Indiana, the Oregon, and the Massachusetts. All the nations have adopted a general understanding that if a ship is more than 20 years old from the time of its launching—for the time of its launching determines the character of the ship—if it is more than 20 years old and has not been reconstructed within 5 years, it shall not be counted as in the available fighting force. The Indiana, the Massachusetts, and the Oregon come under that class.

It is intimated that a great fraud is attempted upon the House and upon the country in suppressing something, when, as a fact, it is set out on the face of all of the reports why the three ships are not counted. Again, they overlook the fact that in the German Navy they took out two of their battleships for the very same reason.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed 50 minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. I shall take only a few moments more. Now, gentlemen, under the allotment of time I can not consume more time of the committee. I say to you that if you will examine this report—and there are many other items here to which I could call attention, which I have marked, but which time forbids—that minority report is as full of inaccuracies and errors as it is possible, in my judgment, to compress in that space. It is as full of holes as a sieve. It does not represent the status of our Navy. I would be glad if it were true that our Navy were second, but we need not deceive ourselves. They say that we spend more money than Germany. Yes, we do. I want to call your attention to how we spend it.

We appropriate for the pay of the Navy $44,300,000, to pay the men in the Navy, counting the Marine Corps as a part of the Navy, because it is a part of the Navy, only a different bureau. Germany appropriated $11,400,000, about one-fourth as much. For provisions to feed the Navy the United States appropriated $8,600,000 and Germany appropriated $900,000, or less than one-ninth as much. To clothe and cover the bodies of the men in our Navy the United States appropriates $1,400,000. Germany appropriates $140,000. We appropriate ten times as much to take care of our men in that regard. Yet in this House, everywhere, on all occasions, great professions are made about men and laborers and humanity. Yet, when we come here with the facts showing that the Government of the United States feeds, clothes, and cares for the personnel, the men of its Navy, as human beings, we are criticized by comparison with a nation that conscripts its citizens to serve both in its army and in its navy. [Applause.]

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a short question?

Mr. PADGETT. If it is very short; yes.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. How does the number of men in the United States Navy compare with the number of men in the German Navy?

Mr. HOBSON. They have 10,000 more men than we have.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman from Alabama informs me that they have 10,000 more than we have.

Now, for new construction in 1913 England appropriated $78,336,000; Russia appropriated $57,626,000; Germany appropriated $53,568,000; France appropriated $44,365,000; the United States appropriated $35,315,000. In other words, Germany appropriated $18,000,000 more for new construction than the United States appropriated. They are putting their money into the building of powerful vessels, and have 26 to our 12, and are building at a rapid rate. Yet gentlemen, when they make comparisons, take the aggregate appropriation, where we make our increase in taking care of the human side of our Navy.

I ask the considerate, thoughtful attention and consideration of this committee to the provisions in this bill, knowing that the Secretary of the Navy has exercised every care that was possible to cut down the estimates, and that the Naval Committee has done the same thing. [Applause.]

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 45 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT].

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, the question of a further increase of armaments is inseparable from the progress of the movement which, if successful, will make all armaments, our own as well as those of the other nations, unnecessary. Therefore a discussion of the naval bill should always include an intelligent consideration of the peace movement.

What are the reasons underlying this great movement which aims to substitute judicial decisions for war? They are the growing abhorrence of war, its incompatibility with the civilization of the age, on the one hand, and the increasing burdens of the military system which are exhausting the nations and gradually bankrupting their governments on the other.

Why is it that the philosophy of brute force upon which that barbarous system is based has been allowed to hold sway so long even in republics where the people are supposed to rule?

The answer to this question, Mr. Chairman, is a long story, and it is my purpose to-day to tell it as best I can.

We say "where there is a will, there is a way," and, indeed, it would be easy to strike out "force" and insert the word "law" in the charters of the world's governments if only the people could or would assert their power. The new system simply requires justice as a corner stone, justice to be ascertained and administered by a world court the same as justice is now administered in all civilized countries through local and national courts. By applying the rule of law to international relations that rule is simply to be extended from the relations between man and man to those between nation and nation. I ask you in all seriousness, Is this not as it should be? Is it not the irresistible logic of evolution?

There is but one answer to these questions. But if it is so easy and so reasonable and a consummation so irresistible, why has it not yet been done? What is law for an individual should be law for a nation. Why has it not yet been made so? For three reasons, the first being the opposition of the interests; the second, human custom; and the third, human nature. But I am happy to say that neither of these obstacles is sufficiently serious to make our great cause hopeless. The greatest progressive movement of modern times will overcome all of them separately and collectively. The trouble heretofore has been that man was not certain about the remedy. He bewailed the horrors of war and moaned under the burdens of militarism without knowing how to free himself from his fetters. Like Don Quixote, he attacked the sails of the windmill without realizing that it was the wind which was moving them. Just now he is flying into a rage over excessive armaments, not knowing that he is mistaking the system for the cause. But the scales are gradually dropping from his eyes, and as soon as he can look a little more deeply into cause and effect, his reasoning power will overcome all opposition, which from purely selfish motives is now obstructing the new order of things, and it will have the effect at the same time of changing his ways of thinking. He will no longer judge every question that may come up from the standpoint of force, but will form the habit of bringing into play the principles of even-handed justice. There is human nature still to be reckoned with. While it is true that human passion can not be controlled by law, yet there is no question but what we can prevent it from being manifested by making its manifestation useless. I shall explain later on what is meant by that.

As a result of thought and study I have long ago come to the conclusion that the movement for international justice, which means peace, is really an earnest and noble effort to protect the human family against itself. No amount of suffering, no arguments, however plausible, have so far been found dynamic enough to restrain the wrath or destroy the cupidity of nations or to stop man from going to war. The appeal to pity has not been strong enough to prevent war. Its sufferings, though great and terrible, have not been sufficient to restrain those whose interests or passions drew them to arms.

"Man," says Walter Walsh, in his splendid book entitled The Moral Damage of War—> is a brave brute. All his story shows that wounds and death can not turn him. Before our day he has fought ten thousand wars, greedy of wounds, careless of torture, merry in the face of death. The cheeriest, heartfulest animal in the universe is man. He will make a million children orphans, including his own, with an oath upon the fathers who begot them; will break the hearts of ten thousand women, even his own mother's, with a song upon his lip; will spit an old mother's only son, or be spitted, on a bayonet with as little remorse as he would spear a frog; will gouge out the blue eyes of a girl's sweetheart with as little compunction as he would pare his nails. * * * Terrible as are the pictures of war's horrors drawn by pen and pencil, harrowing as are the reports of correspondents and letters of soldiers on the field, there is never any lack of recruits; some drawn by love of country, others by love of fighting, others by inflamed thirst for glory, others by nothing more exalted than a shilling a day. Though men might be expected to pause before the prospect of bodily mutilation, torment, thirst, in conjunction with mental rage, anguish, and despair—the physical hell of shot and steel and trampling hoof mingling with the moral hell of hate and revenge, brute foam, and devil fury; the early rain of blood and fell harvest fields of dead meeting the latter rain of tears and mournful aftermath of widows and orphans; the long agonies of broken limbs and the longer agonies of the broken hearts—yet it is vain to expect to put an end to war by considerations such as these, for experience has shown that they are powerless to restrain the passions which lead to it, that they have no terrors for the blood-hounds which begin to bay in man's heart when fired by lust of battle.

The stubbornness of human nature having so far resisted all appeals on account of the sin, the crime, the damage of war, Norman Angell has tried different tactics, and we have learned a great deal from him. He appeals to the self-interest of man and shows that wars are no longer profitable. Not only are the losses of the victor usually as great as those of the vanquished, but owing to the interdependence of nations he points out that the consequences are as damaging to the one as to the other. He also makes it plain that battleships have no connection with commerce, the best illustration being the foreign trade of Belgium, Norway, and Switzerland, which, though these countries have no navy at all, is relatively larger than that of both England and Germany. And, what is more, the consols of these countries command a higher price in the markets of the world than those of the great nations with powerful fleets. What the effect of these comparatively recent revelations will be remains to be seen, but in this connection we should not overlook the fact that increased direct taxation on account of increased armaments has a tendency to make expenditures for war preparations more and more unpopular. This is true in England, in France, and even in Germany, where, in order to secure the vote of the Socialists for the recent increase of the army, the Government had to consent to lay the needed additional taxes on the shoulders of the well-to-do alone. And it is also true in our own country, for the imposition of the income tax will put thousands to thinking who heretofore have not given the enormous expenses for Army and Navy even a passing thought. In fact, I am quite sure, Mr. Chairman, that if the bulk of our revenues had to be raised by direct taxation the American people would have stopped us long ago from continuing the foolish rivalry in naval construction, or, in other words, from imitating a European insanity.

Besides human nature itself, which I shall discuss later, there is in the pathway of peace an interested opposition to which I desire to pay my respects. During the last few weeks, and especially since the Panama tolls question has become a live issue, that opposition has thrown off its mask and shown its face in all its hideousness. It has also pulled off its velvet gloves and its ugly claws are dripping with the blood of every public man who dares to disagree with it. This opposition seems to be a combination of jingoism and material interest, whose rage knows no bounds, because equal treatment of all nations at the Panama Canal will lay the foundation for lasting peace and good will between the United States and the rest of the world. [Applause.] I acquit all those of my colleagues who voted against tolls according to their honest convictions of any knowledge of this conspiracy, but of its existence there is no doubt, and it is also evident to me that the interested parties really do not care for the right or the wrong of the thing; they are indifferent even as to the Shipping Trust, which was to be so exceptionally favored. What they want to prevent is the deadly blow which will be dealt to the cause of war by a final decision in favor of the equal treatment of all nations, a decision which will vouchsafe to us the respect and good will of the civilized world, and, consequently, will render unnecessary the maintenance of vast armaments in the future. These same interests evidently command the support of powerful allies in the press, for the very same papers which shout themselves hoarse for a bigger and bigger Navy whenever this bill is under consideration happen to be in favor of the United States defying the world in the matter of Panama tolls. The same papers are also for intervention; that is, for war with Mexico. I leave it to the people to determine whether this is merely an accident or rather an evidence of deliberate consistency.

Now, let me point out to you the real enemy of the peace movement. Of course there is the indifference as well as the easy excitability of the masses of the people, but these are merely stock in trade in the hands of the mighty, the war materials trust. I am not surprised that what I am going to say has never been stated on this floor before, because that trust is all powerful, and can make and unmake Congressmen. The reason I have not mentioned the matter myself is that the facts have not been as patent as they are to-day. When we deal with the trust just referred to we are dealing, it seems, with an international conspiracy.

Under date of February 7 a Washington paper published an alleged cablegram from Berlin of nearly a column, with a half dozen headlines, to the effect that—

> There will be grave danger of war between the United States and Japan if the former country maintains its present indifferent, if not antagonistic, attitude toward Japan's demand for a settlement of the questions now pending.

And so forth.

This statement is contained in what purports to be an interview with "a prominent member of the Kaiser's court." I have carefully watched Berlin papers to ascertain whether they would contain any such news of an impending war between Japan and the United States, but there was nothing of the kind published; and therefore we can safely put this article down as manufactured at the behest of an international conspiracy, which is fomenting trouble in behalf of the war materials trust—trouble with Japan, trouble with Mexico, trouble with England, Germany, or any other country which happens to be handy for such a purpose. We all remember when some weeks ago the papers published cablegrams to the effect that Germany had officially warned Mexico that any injury to German subjects would meet with retaliation. When President Wilson was asked about it, he positively denied that the American Government knew anything of such a report, and added that—

Germany's attitude toward the position of the United States in the Mexican situation had been satisfactory and friendly, and that Germany had occupied a most dignified position throughout.

He did not believe reports, he said, that Germany was disposed to complicate the situation. And there you are. Another international lie, told to hasten intervention and war, nailed down by the President himself.

We all remember the authentic reports which came from Europe some time ago, according to which an ammunition firm in Berlin was found to have employed an agent in Paris, who had smuggled items into the Paris press about the increase of the French army, the purpose being to hasten a similar increase of the German army in the interest of the war materials trust. Let us see what that interest is. The trade of furnishing war materials and keeping up the business of preparation for war costs the world to-day about $3,000,000,000 a year—a sum beyond the human imagination, almost. The whole work of carrying on the ordinary affairs of civilized government—internal improvements, education, the collection of revenues, social order, everything imaginable connected with human government—does not total even half of that sum. In this almost unthinkable and profligate waste of so many billions every year there are fabulous fortunes reaped by those in the trade, and there is no other trust in the world which reaps such profits. Is it any wonder, then, that the men who control the conspiracies of this gigantic trust have been found within the past few months bribing Government officials at London, at Berlin, at Tokyo?

The president of the National Liberal Federation of England, Sir John Brunner, recently published a letter which plainly reveals the international character of the business of supplying armaments to the great powers. He says, among other things:

Messrs. Krupp, the great German makers, have recently been in trouble because they bribed German officials to obtain help in their trade and also for having tried to induce a Frenchman to urge the French Government to increase their armaments to enable France to oppose Germany. It is notorious that they have helped a Russian armament firm with artillery to increase the military power of Russia, and the Russian Government has recently forbidden this particular Russian firm to apply to Messrs. Krupp for money required to increase their factory.

A great English firm manufacturing armaments has a controlling interest in a second Russian firm of armament makers.

Another English firm, the most powerful of them all, has a branch factory at Naples.

The great French armament makers have also a manufacturing interest in Russia, and it is now understood that they are preparing to help with money the Russian firm first mentioned.

This same authority adds:

We have seen of late years how a number of greatly distinguished servants of the State have left our public employ and have become directors of English armament companies. These great English companies, enormously wealthy and influential, are quite impartial in their readiness to supply armaments to any country in the world which is able to pay for them.

From facts personally known to me I might add that the same is true in this country. And all this great international organization commanding the support of influential men and newspapers is constantly engaged in persuading the great powers, as well as the smaller ones, to arm against each other, and the people of these countries believe themselves to be patriots when they accept these invitations, and they profess their readiness to make sacrifice after sacrifice in order to prepare against war. We might well exclaim with Sir John, "Lord, what fools these mortals be!" I believe the matter to be too serious to be thus dismissed. In my judgment the facts of this plot against the peace of the world should be officially ascertained, and I could think of no more fruitful subject for the third Hague conference to look into than the organization of the war materials trust. Thus we might learn where the jingoes and their press organs receive their inspiration. I believe every good and honest man to be for peace, and that those who shout for war usually have an ax to grind. Wars in this enlightened age, while not impossible, are certainly no longer necessary except to repel attack or invasion, for the simple reason that there is no controversy imaginable between two nations which can not be arbitrated [applause]; in fact, every nation on earth has arleady laid down this same principle in its domestic affairs and the disputes between individuals. For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, are we not justified in looking with suspicion upon those who flippantly talk war on every possible occasion? But, speaking of the profits of the war materials trust, you can figure out yourselves how enormous they must have been in our country during the last 15 years.

When I came to Congress in 1893 the appropriation for the Navy was, in round figures, $23,000,000. In 1898, the year of the Spanish War, it amounted to only $33,000,000. Then it increased in leaps and bounds, until it reached the enormous total of $140,000,000, and this has been the amount regularly appropriated during the last four and five years. Hence the trust since the Spanish-American War has increased its business by about a hundred millions a year. It has been openly charged that the trust had fomented the agitation which drove us into that war, and evidently it has paid mighty well to do it. No wonder that its animus should be directed against the friends of peace and all organizations, including the Carnegie endowment, which are engaged in spreading the gospel of peace. These people are a menace to the profits of the trust and threaten to spoil its business. Hence what they call the peace trust had to be investigated. Thinking only in dollars, the instigators of that investigation evidently calculated that as it takes money to make men bad, it must also require money to make men good. It was ascertained that postage was paid for mailing peace literature, for lectures, and so forth. I do not know how much, but, Mr. Chairman, whatever the amount, I regret it was not a hundred times more, for the highest interests of the people, their happiness and welfare, demand that this peace literature should be read at every fireside in the land. The growing understanding of the question, the dawning of the truth upon the minds of the people, will result in the opposition, selfish and other, to the cause of peace vanishing like mist in the sun. [Applause.]

The great goal of all friends of peace is world organization on the basis of law and justice. Our present peace, backed only by armaments, is too fickle a thing to vouchsafe the security, tranquillity, and happiness of the people. It may be endangered any moment by the whims of the rulers, the passions of the people, and by the existence of the very armaments which are foolishly believed to protect it. To be secure it must be removed from those disturbing factors and anchored upon the rock of law. It is for these reasons that the perfection of the legal machinery to take the place of force in the settlement of international disputes is more important than even an immediate reduction of armaments. For when the nations will agree to take their quarrels to court and have them decided according to recognized principles of international law, from that moment on armaments will become useless except for the enforcement of the court's decrees, and for that purpose a small police force only will be necessary, to be jointly contributed by the several nations. Not that I regard a cessation of naval construction as immaterial; on the contrary, such a decision by Congress at this time would have a far-reaching salutary effect and confirm American leadership of the great procession of the nations, already set in motion, from the bloody field of battle to the temple of international justice.

In this connection it will also be well to remember the opinion of President Taft, expressed shortly before he relinquished his high office, to the effect that with the completion of the Panama Canal it would no longer be necessary to increase our Navy. However, what I wish to impress upon your minds is the one great truth that enduring peace, the peace founded on justice and binding international agreements, the peace which can not be disturbed by any one nation without a break of its contract with the other nations, will not become a reality until the world court at The Hague has been made a fixed institution and recognized as a judicial tribunal by all Governments alike. Therefore what the people of all countries should do at this moment is to prevail on their Governments carrying out the unanimous resolution of the second Hague conference in favor of the establishment of a real court of arbitral justice in place of the arbitration tribunal now existing and which had been the achievement of the first conference. This is, of course, looking beyond the mere question of battleships. In the creation of such a court, I firmly believe, will be found the only antidote against an outburst of human passion, or as Walsh puts it, against "the bloodhounds baying in man's heart when fired by lust of battle." When it has become a matter of common knowledge that, whatever the provocation, there will be no fighting, that all controversies which diplomacy fails to compose will be settled judicially, it is but reasonable to expect that the fighting blood will soon cease to boil, and the populace of both contending nations will in the end as readily submit to the dictum of an international tribunal as the American people submit to a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. The tractability of the masses, owing to their better realization of the harrowing effects, the criminality, the waste of war, is well illustrated in the present Mexican situation. The mere knowledge that the President would not countenance intervention has had the effect of keeping the people quiet and patient and caused them to acquiesce in the policy of the Government. And we must also take into account the diminishing causes of future war. There will be no more religious wars, and wars of conquest are improbable even in Europe. Ask Italy. A war to defend the national honor is out of the question, because no nation will ever assail it, and every Government is supposed to deal honorably with the other Governments in this time and day. So the only possible cause of friction left would be trade advantage, and who would dare to lead the flower of a nation to slaughter for mere commercial gain? If ever there was a time when a ruler, at the risk of his own head, attempted such a thing, that day is past and gone forever.

And now, Mr. Chairman, I have mentioned the main obstacles in the pathway of peace, and I hope you will agree with me that they are not insurmountable. I fully realize that as long as force is the recognized basis of government just so long will governing bodies be compelled to make that force as great and resistless as they can. But there is a limit to their capability, a limit fixed by the resources of the people and their capacity to pay taxes. In many countries that limit has already been reached, and it will not be long before the Governments will be in despair and the people in the throes of revolution. Therefore who will stand up and deny that to prevent such a calamity is the most imperative question, the most vital issue now confronting the nations of the world? We are no longer in doubt as to means to prevent it, as were the people in the Dark Ages. We know that, by agreement, justice can be substituted for force as a basis of government, that justice which will obviate the necessity of defending by force of arms what we possess and which will guarantee to all nations their independence, their sovereignty at home, and their rights and possessions. A great beginning has been made. A high court of nations is an established fact. Though largely ignored by the press and unappreciated by the people, it nevertheless exists as a sacred shrine in lasting honor of the generation which created and rescued it from the teeth of triumphant militarism. It needs perfection and honest recognition by the powers. It is the task and the duty of the present generation to secure both. An important step in that direction is the proposition which America has laid before the nations. It reads, "Let us investigate before we fight," and is a bridge leading from militarism to law, from the battle field to The Hague. If we can prevail upon the nations to adopt this plan and to live up to it honestly and without purpose of evasion, it would mean the end of war even before The Hague is reached; but we will, nevertheless, rejoice in the existence of that tribunal as a high court of last resort, a final arbiter of the affairs of mankind, and a bulwark of the world's peace.

Mr. Chairman, the world's hope is not a lie. To despair of the attainment of a condition of peace founded on justice rather than dreadnaughts is to despair of the progress of civilization. The day is dawning—not the day wished for by those who make war a profession, but the glorious day which will know war no more. [Applause.]

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Chairman, it has been really painful to sit in this House and witness the distress upon the faces of gentlemen on the Republican side as they would one after another rise in their place and, being no longer able to restrain their wrath and indignation, thunder criticisms and invectives against President Wilson and his administration. As some offer one criticism and some another, I think it will be necessary to analyze the present situation somewhat in order to ascertain just what their grievance really is.

We know they are dissatisfied with the new freedom now being inaugurated by this administration; we know they have no sympathy with the present movement to restore personal, political, commercial, and industrial liberty in this country.

Mr. Chairman, that once proud and powerful political organization which carried us so far away from these inestimable blessings is now, happily for the people, divided, discordant, and decadent. Demoralized, helpless, and impotent, its scattered remnants, ashamed and afraid to propose a return to its former discredited and discarded policies, occupy their time with dire predictions and calamity howlings and with diverting attention from its disgraceful record.

Under these circumstances, it is pertinent to engage in a little retrospection, to inquire what things the Republican Party stood for and to what conditions its policies led.

Let us set its record clearly before the country in order that no one may forget and be misled, for I believe that as long as that record of misrule remains unforgotten there is not the slightest possibility of a rehabilitation of that party.

The Republican Party owes its origin solely to the issue of negro slavery. It had but one mission, the freedom of the negro slave. That accomplished there was no further excuse for its existence, and it was confronted with the alternative of finding some other means of perpetuating its control of the Government or of going out of power.

The bedrock upon which Jefferson had founded the Democratic Party was "equal rights to all and special privileges to none." This at the close of the war was still the fundamental law of Democracy, the chart and compass which guided and controlled its principles and shaped its policies. The Democratic Party occupied the entire field of true popular government, and such occupancy had been too long, open, and notorious to admit of question. Therefore it was necessary for the Republican Party to find and occupy another field, and this it did.

It sought the aid of special interests. It allied itself with private business. It bartered and sold special privilege for financial and political support. And by intimidation, coercion, and corruption in elections, by secret dealings and dark-lantern methods and by deception it did succeed in continuing itself in power, until its excesses became so notorious and offensive that a large majority of its own members deserted and turned against it, with the result that at the last election it carried but two States, and they were the smallest of the entire Union.

THE TARIFF.

The special interest with which the Republican Party first allied itself was that of the protective-tariff beneficiaries. This hungry horde had taken advantage of the necessities of war to raise the tariff rates. Necessity for larger revenue to meet the expenses of war had won where the plea for the protection of infant industries had failed. But when the war was over and a reduction of the revenues became necessary other taxes were dispensed with and the war tariff schedules continued. The tariff beneficiaries and the Republican Party had struck a bargain. Protection to American industry was now boldly proclaimed as a cardinal policy of the party. The beneficiaries of that policy were to furnish campaign funds and political support, and in return they were themselves to have the privilege of writing the schedules and of fixing them as high as they pleased. This bargain was renewed election after election, and as the greed of the tariff barons increased and the needs of the campaign chest enlarged the rates of duty were correspondingly raised until a veritable Chinese wall was erected around our borders. All competition from abroad was absolutely excluded, and under the shelter thus afforded the protection beneficiaries easily formed themselves into monopolies and eliminated all competition at home.

THE MONEY POWER.

The same considerations that led the Republican Party to ally itself with the protection beneficiaries also caused that party to place itself in subserviency to the financial interests of the country. It inaugurated and has continuously maintained and defended a financial system under which it has been possible, by means of corporate devices and otherwise, for the control of the money and credit of the country to be concentrated in the hands of a few private persons, under which it has been possible for a few men to absolutely control the very lifeblood of the commerce and industry of the Nation.

THE SPECIAL INTERESTS LINKED TOGETHER.

These two special interests very early and very naturally became affiliated with each other. In personnel they became largely the same. They worked together. The special privileges which they enjoyed and the great wealth they controlled enabled them to bring into being and put at their command the greatest number of monopolies, and some of the most powerful monopolies, the world has ever seen. These monopolies have stalked with giant tread the industrial and commercial fields of America and dominated every market place, controlled almost every avenue of trade, and exercised the power of life and death over nearly every business enterprise.

It is conservatively estimated that under the Republican protective tariff there was taken from the people annually the stupendous sum of nearly two and three-quarter billions of dollars, of which only about one-ninth, or a little over three hundred millions, went into the Public Treasury. The balance, amounting to two and one-half billion dollars annually, went into the pockets of the favored and protected industries.

The greed of the money power has been equally as insatiable. By the manipulation and control of money and credit and by "high financial legerdemain" the toiling millions of this country have been robbed of untold wealth.

This iniquitous system of greed and graft so long fostered and maintained by the Republican Party was as a great sponge gradually absorbing the substance of the people and concentrating the property of the country into a few hands.

And in order that the saturnalia of graft should continue it was necessary that the Republican Party should be kept in power, and to this end a goodly part of these ill-gotten gains poured regularly into the Republican campaign treasuries; as far as possible the press of the country was subsidized and corrupted; powerful lobbies were constantly kept at the Capital; and the elections shamefully debauched and corrupted.

STANDPATISM.

Now, let me call attention to another important fact, and that is that in order to maintain this wicked reciprocal arrangement between crooked business and crooked politics all the other policies of the Republican Party were so shaped as to promote the interest of the partnership. No legislation was permitted which would offend the interests or obstruct or hinder their predatory operations.

For instance, the Republican Party stood against an income tax. It piled the burden of taxation high upon the backs of the poor, but absolutely refused to require the rich to bear their just share of taxation.

They persistently refused to pass legislation needed and demanded by the workingmen of the country, because the interests were opposed thereto.

They set themselves against the election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people because the interests believed they could dictate the selection of Senators under the old method and better control them when so selected.

Then, as a final protection to this plunderbund, they set up a throne in this House and placed thereon a czar and clothed him with the power to deny the chosen Representatives of the people of this country the right even to propose measures of relief.

OPPOSED PUBLICITY.

Mr. Chairman, I call attention to another fact, and that is it was essential to the success of such a policy that its operations should be carried on in secret. The people had to be kept in ignorance of its methods. The Republican Party knew that its dealings with special interests behind closed doors, its secret barter and sale of special privilege, and its insidious corruption and debauchery of elections would no more bear the light of day or stand the test of public opinion than the damp vapors and vermin of the darkest dungeon would stand the light and heat of a midday summer's sun. Therefore it stood against every measure that would require publicity of governmental affairs or of campaign contributions and expenditures, and it let no law pass looking in that direction until compelled by an irresistible public sentiment to do so.

THE DEMOCRATIC ATTACK.

Mr. Chairman, against this citadel of special privilege, graft, and corruption, so fortified and defended by the cohorts of Republicanism and special interest, the militant hosts of Democracy have made many an assault. And many a time have we been hurled back in defeat. But, undaunted and undismayed, we have each time rallied our forces and, appealing to the conscience of our countrymen, renewed the attack. One after another of their wicked contrivances we have exposed to the light of day. We turned in upon them the searchlight of truth until mutiny burst forth in their own camps, and then the old Republican Party began to totter to its fall.

At Chicago it had to make a fight even against its own men to preserve its alliance with the special interests. It won the fight, but there immediately followed so many desertions from its standard that it went down in overwhelming defeat in the following election.

RULE OF THE PEOPLE.

Thus ended the rule of the special interests and began the rule of the people. The Democratic Party came into power under obligation to no special interest. The agents and representatives of predatory wealth had been scourged from the Baltimore convention and their offers to the campaign fund had been spurned. The nomination and election of Woodrow Wilson and a Democratic Congress were accomplished by a free and untainted vote.

We are absolutely free to serve the people, and are doing so. Already much has been accomplished.

The method of electing United States Senators has been changed. They are now being elected by direct vote of the people and are responsive to the people's will.

Cannonism in this House has been overthrown, the Speaker has been stripped of the autocratic power the Republicans conferred upon him, and the constitutional rights and privileges of the people's representatives restored to them. Thus the two Houses of Congress have been unshackled, and they are both now free to serve the people.

THE LOBBY DRIVEN OUT.

Moreover, to further clear the way for a return to the service of the people, we have driven the lobby from this Capitol. We found these base political brokers here and immediately turned the light upon them. We exposed them and their foul practices, and they fled before the scorn and condemnation of the people they had so long outraged.

PARTNERSHIP WITH TARIFF BENEFICIARIES DISSOLVED.

Now, with these obstacles out of the way, what followed? We took charge of the Ways and Means Committee and of the Committee on Finance and drove the tariff barons and their hired agents and attorneys from the committee rooms. We served notice upon them that they could no longer dictate the tariff schedules in their own private interest; that they could no longer use the taxing power of the Government to fill their own pockets. And for the first time in more than 50 years a tariff law was written entirely by the chosen representatives of the people, uninfluenced by any lobby or special interest. We have returned to that primary principle of Democracy which holds that the taxing power of the Government can be rightfully exercised only to raise revenue to meet the needs of the Public Treasury; that to exercise it for private benefit is nothing more nor less than downright robbery.

We have revised the tariff downward. We have largely relieved industry of its burdens. We have either removed it entirely or greatly reduced it on the necessaries of life and left it highest upon luxuries. Thus the burdens of the tariff have been made as light as possible, and no legitimate industry has been hurt.

INCOME TAX.

Another important thing we have done: We have required the wealth of the country to bear its just share of taxation. We have levied a tax upon surplus incomes, and from this source we expect to obtain nearly $100,000,000 annually in revenue, which I have no doubt will in time enable us to still further reduce the tariff taxes, which, to my mind, is the most unjust system of taxation ever devised.

PARTNERSHIP WITH THE MONEY TRUST DISSOLVED.

Mr. Chairman, we have also dissolved the partnership with the Money Trust. As soon as President Wilson was inaugurated and his Cabinet installed the work of cutting all the underground connections between the United States Treasury and Wall Street was begun. The representatives of big finance who had been given desks in the Treasury Department were "bounced" instanter.

The Republican policy of keeping the United States Treasury in subserviency to the Wall Street banks was completely reversed. These banks were in the habit of bringing about money stringencies and even financial panics at pleasure. The Republican way of dealing with such situations was to pour the Government's millions into the Wall Street banks and leave it to them to take care of the business needs of the country. We all know the result of such a policy. It did no good. We recall that in the panic of 1907 Mr. Roosevelt poured millions into the Wall Street banks, and the banks in turn loaned it to the Wall Street gamblers instead of putting it into the legitimate channels of trade, and the panic continued until the business of the country was completely paralyzed.

Soon after the Democrats came into power last year these same Wall Street bankers conceived the idea of bringing on a great money stringency in order to discredit the Democratic Party and forestall legislation they did not want, but they were sadly disappointed. Instead of playing into their hands as his Republican predecessors had done, Secretary McAdoo defied them and announced that he would take care of the situation himself by furnishing the money needed direct to the legitimate business of the country. This completely thwarted the conspiracy, broke the backbone of the money power, and rescued the Treasury from the dominance of private interests.

Then, in order to make the victory complete and permanent, Congress has passed a law establishing a new financial system, put it under the control of the Government, and placed it absolutely beyond the power of the Money Trust to longer control the money and credit of the country.

My judgment is you will never see another financial panic in the United States.

ABOUT TO MOVE AGAINST THE TRUSTS.

But, Mr. Chairman, important, far-reaching, and beneficent as are the great measures I have mentioned, I may say that the reform which has been undertaken by the Democratic Party for the people has really just begun. Other great measures are in course of preparation, and I hope they will be crystallized into law before the end of the present session is reached. We have declared that private monopoly is intolerable and indefensible, and we will pass laws to make good this declaration.

The tariff and currency laws, to which I have already alluded, will go far to discourage and prevent trusts and monopolies, but further remedies are needed and we will soon supply them. We expect to make it impossible for a private monopoly to exist in this country. In the future men must live by their industry and their wits, and not by the brutal exercise of the powers of monopoly. And those who violate the law will be required to answer in the criminal courts, and if found guilty pay the penalty just as any other criminal.

LET US REMAIN STEADFAST.

Mr. Chairman, if those who have stood for the people in this great fight shall only remain steadfast, the good work which has been brought thus far will be carried to completion. Every special interest will be driven from this Capitol and the rule of the people completely restored.

But if any of our friends feel that the fight is over, that the enemy has given up and retired from the contest, let them be not deceived. I warn them that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," and it was never more so than at this juncture.

The interests which have, through special privilege, so long fattened upon the substance of the masses have no thought of surrender. The sting of their defeat serves only to intensify their greed and fire their resentment. They are now shifting their ground and are beginning a more aggressive fight than they have yet made. Their aim is to get their feet back into the public trough. But, of course, they do not dare to meet the issue openly and squarely. Where is one bold enough to suggest a return to the Payne-Aldrich tariff law—that crowning infamy of all protection legislation? And where is one who would suggest a repeal of the income-tax law or propose a return to private control of the money and credit of the country? I do not believe such a one can be found, yet these things are precisely what they want done, and they are the things the Republican Party stood for when in power.

Mr. Chairman, the reform of the tariff, the levy of an income tax, and the establishment of a currency system in the interest of the people are policies the plunderbund know they can not successfully attack. So, as I have already said, they have shifted their position and are now assailing us upon other grounds. They are trying to discredit this administration by assailing its foreign policies. The cry of the jingo is heard throughout the land. They believe that if they can by any means impair the leadership of President Wilson or discredit him in any way they may be able to restore the Republican Party to power and get back into the green pastures of special privilege from which they have been driven. Therefore they are assailing him with a vindictiveness never before equaled in this country. They falsely charge him with subservience to foreign domination and with a compromise of the national honor. They know this to be untrue, yet they hope to make enough people believe it to carry the next congressional election. But they can not. The plot is too transparent. I believe the great mass of the people of this country are awake to the true situation. They know that those who, from day to day, are assailing the President really care not so much about the national honor as they do about restoring the plunderbund to its former prestige and power.

THE LOBBY STILL BUSY.

Mr. Chairman, there is another phase of the situation to which I feel I ought to call attention, and that is that every Member of this House who has been the most loyal to the President and the most ardent for the new freedom is marked for political slaughter. The lobbyists, having been driven from the Capital, have begun to turn their attention to the coming elections. They will be found trying to bring about the defeat of every Congressman unfriendly to the rule of the special interests where they have the slightest hope of success.

Already many opposing candidates are in the field, raising every issue before the people except the true one. And we may be sure that wherever the defeat of a loyal administration man is accomplished, whether by the election of one calling himself a Democrat or by a Republican, a mighty shout of joy will go up from the plunderbund and it will be heralded throughout the country as a repudiation of Wilson and his policies.

Mr. Chairman, I have faith not only in the patriotism but in the intelligence of the people.

Those who ask for the retirement of loyal administration Members of this House just as the fight against special interest and special privilege has fairly begun will be required by the people to reveal the real motives which prompt them to do so.

I do not believe there will be any turning back. The reign of predatory wealth under Republican rule was so hateful to the American people they would no more go back to it than they would return to a dangerous pestilence from which they had fled. In my opinion, they are going to press forward. They are going to demand that every vestige of special privilege be uprooted and destroyed and that equal opportunity for all be restored, to the end that even the humblest in the land may enjoy the full fruits of his own labor and that none may impose burdens upon him which he ought not to bear. [Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. ASHBROOK having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 14034, the naval appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, April 18, 1914.

Mr. FITZGERALD assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our heavenly Father, in whom all our longings, hopes, and aspirations are centered, we wait upon Thy wisdom, power, and goodness to shape our ends, correct our mistakes, strengthen us in our weakness, and bring us into harmony with the eternal principles of right and truth and justice. Take away from us all that we condemn in others and quicken those qualities of soul which we admire in others that we may be what we ought to be, what we long to be, what we hope to be. And glory and honor and praise be Thine in Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I present the Member elect from the twelfth district of Massachusetts, Mr. JAMES A. GALLIVAN.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts presents Mr. JAMES A. GALLIVAN, the Member elect from the twelfth district of the State of Massachusetts, whose credentials are here, have been examined, and found to be in proper form.

Mr. GALLIVAN took the oath of office.

FOLDING OF SPEECHES.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 461 (H. Rept. 549).

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, to be expended under the direction of the Doorkeeper upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee on Accounts, a sum not exceeding $2,000, for the purpose of folding speeches, at a rate not exceeding $1 per thousand.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 4, amend by striking out "$2,000" and inserting "$3,000."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL POLICEMEN, HOUSE OFFICE BUILDING.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I also present the following privileged resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 440 (H. Rept. 550).

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint three policemen for the House Office Building at an annual salary of $1,050 each, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House until otherwise provided by law.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, this resolution provides three additional policemen for the House Office Building. At the present time the force is not as large as it ought to be, and since the addition of the 40 rooms in the additional story it becomes necessary to have additional police force. The entrance to the court has not had an officer heretofore, and it is necessary for the protection of the building and the rooms that somebody be stationed at that door. The reason for this is that recently there has been complaint that something has been stolen from different rooms in the building. People can get in at that doorway. There is no one to guard it, and it is thought necessary to have some one at that door.

Mr. MANN. Which door is that?

Mr. LLOYD. That is the entrance to the court. It is on Second Street.

Mr. MANN. On the south side?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Do any of these policemen stay on the upper floors, as a matter of fact?

Mr. LLOYD. I do not know where they will stay. I could not answer that question.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman said they were needed because of the rooms on the fifth floor. Will any of them ever be on the fifth floor?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes; they have to patrol every floor, and they do patrol every floor.

Mr. MANN. Patrol the floors?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I at one time had an office in the House Office Building. I do not now. The gentleman may be able to give me information about it, but I never knew of one patrolling the floors over there.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that they do much patrolling, but they are there for that purpose. Every room in that building is under the control of these men, and it is their duty to protect the rooms, and it is necessary to have an additional force over that which we now have.

Mr. MANN. This is to restore three policemen who were taken away at the beginning of the reform in respect to the employees of the House, is it not?

Mr. LLOYD. This will restore two policemen on account of the additional space required to be patrolled, and it also will provide an officer for that entrance to the court. We never have had an officer there.

Mr. MANN. Whether these new rooms will add anything to the duties of the policemen over there, I have no doubt that very likely we will need additional men, although recently the House insisted that a lot of the police force ought to be cut down in conference, and this House did cut down the House police force. We learn as we go; besides we need the jobs.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. How much of a complement of men are over there to take care of that building?

Mr. LLOYD. Eleven.

Mr. MURDOCK. That is the police force?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes, sir.

Mr. MURDOCK. Have not you in addition to that watchmen?

Mr. LLOYD. No.

Mr. MURDOCK. And then you have elevator men and charwomen?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. And then janitors. Taking in all the number, how many are employed in the upkeep of that building?

Mr. LLOYD. I do not know. Most of the employees in the House Office Building are under the Secretary of the Interior and controlled by an officer under the Secretary of the Interior——

Mr. MANN. The Superintendent of the Capitol.

Mr. LLOYD. The Superintendent of the Capitol has immediate control of the House Office Building, and he controls the employees, charwomen, and every employee who is over there that has anything like police duty, except what we call the House police force.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman. My recollection is, that beginning with the Sixty-second Congress, the Capitol police force was cut practically in half. Then, if I remember correctly, in the current legislative bill the conferees between the Houses increased the number of men on the Capitol police force about 16, or something like that. Now, I would like to know whether those 16 men, if that be the correct number, as agreed upon by the conferees between both Houses, were put to work, and, if they were, are these 3 policemen in addition to the extra police force provided for in the legislative bill?

Mr. LLOYD. The police force over there has nothing to do with the Capitol police force. It is called the House Office police.

Mr. COX. Are they not under the House Sergeant at Arms?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes; they are under the control of the House Sergeant at Arms.

Mr. COX. Do not they draw the same salary as the Capitol police force?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. COX. Are not they part of the general police system of the Capitol?

Mr. LLOYD. They are not transferable. It has been so construed; they are not transferable at all, neither in the House Office Building nor over in the Senate.

Mr. COX. Can the gentleman answer the first part of my inquiry, whether that extra number of police force was put to work, as provided for by the conferees between the two Houses in their report?

Mr. LLOYD. I think the gentleman makes a mistake when he expresses himself that the police force at any time was cut down. Under the provisions of the bill to which the gentleman refers we cut the Capitol police that have control of the Capitol and grounds just half, which was two years ago.

Mr. COX. I am trying to get information——

Mr. LLOYD. This does not increase——

Mr. COX (continuing). In that conference report the force, as I recall, was increased something like 16.

Mr. LLOYD. The gentleman is mistaken about that; it was not increased.

Mr. FOSTER. If the gentleman will permit, what I think the gentleman from Indiana is trying to get at is the police force of the Capitol was cut down to 34.

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Then it was restored, I think, about half the number which was cut down. I think the gentleman is right about that.

Mr. COX. That is what I am trying to get at.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. MANN. There is an increase in the legislative bill which was passed yesterday of 15 in the police force over what was carried in the current law.

Mr. COX. What is the recollection of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. LLOYD. I can answer the question. The original number of the police was 69, and they were cut down to 35. The number of policemen about the Capitol Building and Grounds are 35 at the present time.

Mr. COX. What I am trying to get at is whether this extra increase was provided for and whether or not that extra number had actually been put to work and are at work now?

Mr. MANN. What extra number?

Mr. LLOYD. The gentleman is mistaken about the extra number.

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. BARNHART. Does my colleague from Indiana know of any man having been put on the police force who never did work at his job?

Mr. COX. I do not know.

Mr. BARNHART. I thought my colleague knew about that.

Mr. COX. I do not know anything about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. MANN. As I understand this increase, it is to be an addition to the 15 increased in the legislative bill.

Mr. LLOYD. This has nothing to do with the legislative bill.

Mr. MANN. No; I understand. This is to employ three to be paid out of the contingent fund.

Mr. LLOYD. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. And the legislative bill carries an increase of 15 over the number now authorized?

Mr. LLOYD. But those policemen are not to be used, of course, until the 1st of July, and they may not be agreed upon.

Mr. MANN. But these three will continue after the 1st of July, as well as the increase of 15.

Mr. LLOYD. But there is no increase.

Mr. MANN. I expect you will get the proper number after a while, if you keep on increasing them gradually.

Mr. LLOYD. There is no increase in the legislative bill for the House Office force.

Mr. MANN. How does the gentleman know? Here is an increase of 1 special officer and 14 privates in the police force in the legislative bill.

Mr. LLOYD. That applies to the Capitol Building and Grounds and not to the House Office Building or the Senate Office Building.

Mr. MANN. But these are Capitol police.

Mr. LLOYD. But there is a distinction between the Capitol police and the police of the House Office Building.

Mr. MANN. I think they are all under the same organization.

Mr. LLOYD. They are spoken of separately, they are classed separately, and the assignment is made separately, and not transferable at all.

Mr. MANN. They are all assigned by the captain and carried in the same item in the bill.

Mr. LLOYD. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The policemen at the House Office Building are not under control of the captain here.

Mr. MANN. They are under the control of the lieutenant there, and the lieutenant is under the control of the captain.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

KATHARINE KIRBY.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I also present the following resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 464 (H. Rept. 554).

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, the sum of $1,200 to Katharine Kirby for services rendered as stenographer and typewriter and for preparation of reports and action of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor in connection with the Alaska fur-seal investigation.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is an unusual one. This authorizes the payment to an individual that was employed by the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and provides pay for the woman who was employed for the period she was employed. Under the law and under the resolutions of this House the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce has a clerk, and it has no additional force except one clerk during the session, or a session clerk. That committee did some investigation and they found it necessary to employ additional help. They employed as a stenographer, typewriter, and special assistant an individual who had previously been employed by the District Committee in an investigation which the District Committee made, and when she got through with that service the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce employed the lady to assist in that service. Under the law and rules of this House, as I understand them, there was no authority for that employment, but the employment was made, whether it was legal or illegal. The lady rendered the service, and every member of that committee, Democrat and Republican, insists that the woman did splendid service and performed her part in good faith. And this provides the pay for the service which she actually rendered.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. LLOYD. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I want to get recognition in my own right.

Mr. LLOYD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I served on the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor during the last Congress. That committee by resolution was authorized to investigate the seal-fisheries question. That committee made the investigation which was authorized. It reported the completion of its labor, and the reports were filed during the last Congress. The Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce now and in this Congress has assumed the right to go on and investigate the question, which was closed, without any authority whatever from the House. The Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce has a clerk to-day, paid out of the contingent fund of the House, as all other clerks are paid. That clerk has never appeared, so far as I know, in the committee room, and has performed no duties whatever. Whether the money that he is supposed to draw was ever paid to him or not, I am unable to say, but I am able to say that he is not here and has not been here. The woman in whose favor this recommendation is made has really performed the work for which the payment is intended to be made. It is perfectly proper that she should be paid, for she has performed excellent service. What other work she does there I do not know. Whether she acts as secretary to the chairman of the committee or not, I am not prepared to say, but I am prepared to say that the whole subject of the employment of the additional clerk hired in this committee is a violation of the law and against the instructions given by the House under the resolution authorizing the investigation. There is a man named Elliot over there who makes his headquarters in the committee room. He filed complaint about the manner in which the seal-fisheries business was being conducted by the department during the last administration, and he, the complainant, has headquarters in the rooms of this committee, making his own investigations of his complaint, writing the reports of the committee, or the chairman of the committee, and doing everything except the things that they are authorized to do.

Now, I submit to the House that there ought not to be any such latitude given to any committee of the House. And I suggest that the Committee on Accounts, charged with the responsibility of auditing the bills contracted by these committees—and not particularly this committee, about whose work I know something—ought to investigate thoroughly before any bills ever are audited, except this particular bill.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, may I say in this connection——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. LLOYD. May I say in this connection that the Committee on Accounts has refused any audits on any of those bills?

Mr. MADDEN. All right, then. I am glad to know that, but I think it is only proper and decent and fair to the House itself to understand that the work in which this committee is supposed to be engaged is not only not authorized by any action of the House, but that the work which the committee was authorized to do was cleaned up and closed in the last Congress; and by what authority or for what purpose the committee presumed to go on and investigate further and contract obligations against the Government in a matter over which it had absolutely no jurisdiction is something I am unable to say, and I file my protest against that kind of practice.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. FOSTER. When was this service rendered?

Mr. LLOYD. Since the 1st of August last year and up to the present time.

Mr. FOSTER. So that it comes in this Congress and not in the last?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOSTER. And it was done without any authority from the House?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; absolutely.

Mr. FOSTER. Or without an attempt to secure an appropriation for additional help?

Mr. LLOYD. Do not understand me as saying that they had any authority from the House. I said a moment ago, in making the statement for the Committee on Accounts, that, according to my view of the situation, the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce had no authority from the House, but I understand the committee insists that they had authority to make the employment.

Mr. FOSTER. Let me see if I understand the situation correctly. The Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor in the last Congress was authorized by special resolution in that Congress to make a special investigation, and was given a clerk during that time to make the investigation?

Mr. LLOYD. Correct.

Mr. FOSTER. They were ordered to make the investigation. Is that true?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes. They made that investigation.

Mr. FOSTER. Was not that done in the Sixty-second Congress by special resolution of this House, directing the committee to make certain investigations?

Mr. LLOYD. This work has been done in the Sixty-third Congress.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; I am coming to that. Now, they went ahead—certain committees of the House went ahead—and made certain investigations. I think the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department made one—the committee of which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] was chairman at that time. Now, the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce undertakes to make certain investigations and employ certain help without authority from the House?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes, sir; that is correct.

Mr. FOSTER. Without even introducing a resolution asking that any help be given?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOSTER. During that time that this help was employed, from last August up to the 1st of December, the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce had no clerk?

Mr. LLOYD. That is correct.

Mr. FOSTER. But since the 1st of December, when Congress met in regular session, that committee did have a clerk allowed at $6 a day?

Mr. LLOYD. No; at $125 per month.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; at $125 per month. Now, this amount of $1,200 is in addition to what is allowed regularly for the clerk?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes, sir. It would not be necessary to come here with a recommendation for this compensation if the case were not in that situation.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems to me, if the gentleman will yield just a moment more, it is a little unusual to incur an expenditure of $1,200 and then come to the House and expect it to be paid. It is a fact that sometimes these committees that are allowed a session clerk have an extraordinary amount of work during a certain period in a Congress, and probably an additional amount of help ought to be given.

Mr. LLOYD. That is true in this case. They did have the extra work.

Mr. FOSTER. Just a moment. It seems to me that what the chairmen of committees ought to do when additional help is required would be to come to this House and ask for it. I do not believe that this House would refuse to give to any committee that is doing work that is for the benefit of Congress whatever help is necessary. I have never known it to be refused. I do not believe the House would have refused it in this case if a proper showing had been made. I do not believe that we ought to pay a bill that has been authorized by a committee unless it was on account of an emergency that could not be avoided and when authority could not be given. We ought not to pay a bill that has been contracted by a committee without authority.

Mr. LLOYD. In this particular case the committee and the chairman of the committee believed that they had the right to make the employment. They made the employment in accordance with what they thought was their right. The person employed had previously been employed by a special committee authorized to make a certain investigation, to wit, the District of Columbia Committee. She rendered service to the District Committee, and after she got through that service she was employed by the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce. She believed that the committee had a right to employ her, and she did not question that right. The committee believed that it had the right to employ her. Now, when she presented her claims to the Committee on Accounts, the committee refused to audit them, because the employment had not been authorized by the House of Representatives.

Mr. FOSTER. Did not the Committee on the District of Columbia, which was making certain investigations here, have authority from Congress and an appropriation with which to do that work and to pay for it?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOSTER. I realize that this woman who has done this work, and done it faithfully and efficiently, ought to have her money. Otherwise it would be a hardship on her.

Mr. MADDEN. She ought to have it.

Mr. FOSTER. She ought to have her money.

Mr. LLOYD. I think every person connected with the matter at all will tell you that this woman ought to have her money, and I believe that every person who has looked into this matter will tell you that this ought to be a very forceful illustration of the fact that no committee of this House should be allowed hereafter to make any expenditures not authorized by resolution of the House or by law. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSTER. That is correct.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes, sir.

Mr. SISSON. Does not the gentleman think the best way to handle that matter, so that the committees in the future will not repeat this practice, is not to excuse it in this instance and to make a real example of it?

Mr. LLOYD. I think it would be a serious hardship to take this poor girl, who has been without her money all this time, and make her suffer as the result of the failure of somebody else to do his duty. She acted in good faith.

Mr. SISSON. But I will say to the gentleman that there is a principle involved, and not a person. Suppose the person involved was a man or a boy?

Mr. LLOYD. We are just as anxious as the gentleman not to allow this to become a precedent in the future.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. LLOYD. With pleasure.

Mr. MANN. From what period of time has this employment been made?

Mr. LLOYD. From August last to the present time—eight months.

Mr. MANN. What is the basis of the employment?

Mr. LLOYD. One hundred and fifty dollars a month, the same as she received from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. Has the employee been getting money from anybody during these eight months?

Mr. LLOYD. Not so far as we know.

Mr. MANN. Is she not put on notice?

Mr. LLOYD. She is on notice now.

Mr. MANN. If a person comes and works in a place where the custom is to pay the employees once a month, is she not on notice when the monthly payment is not forthcoming?

Mr. LLOYD. She has had the promise from time to time that she would receive her money.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that she has been paid something every month?

Mr. LLOYD. No; I think not.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I think I am in possession of some information about that.

Mr. LLOYD. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I had the impression all the time, and I think that at least some other member of the committee——

Mr. LLOYD. The gentleman is a member of the committee?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I am a member of the committee. I had the impression all the time that the young woman was the appointed clerk of the committee. There had been a question raised as to whether the committee was acting within the scope of its authority, and that is a debatable question now, in my judgment. But until recently I thought the young woman was the clerk of the committee and the only clerk of the committee. It develops, however, that another party had been designated as clerk, a man whom I have never seen in the committee room. Then, when the question of the paying of the young woman was brought up, it developed that she was employed by the chairman, with the specific understanding that Congress would appropriate money to pay the expenses of the committee, and the young woman has been working there doing the work of a private secretary as well as the work of the clerk of the committee, and you might say the work of a messenger, for more than eight months, with the understanding that Congress would appropriate for this investigation and that the investigation was entirely legitimate in every detail. She is absolutely blameless in the matter. If any mistake has been made it has not been her mistake. She had every reason to believe that the committee knew what it was doing, and I am not altogether certain that it did not.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD] has the floor. Does he yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. LLOYD. I yielded to the gentleman from Oklahoma to answer a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. How much time?

Mr. LLOYD. He was simply answering the questions of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Five minutes.

Mr. LLOYD. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma five minutes.

Mr. SISSON. If the committee made the mistake, ought not the committee itself then to pay this woman? Suppose I employ some one to do some work and am not authorized to do it. Ought I not to pay for my mistake? Ought not the chairman of that committee to pay her?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The gentleman is asking a question that it might be a little embarrassing for me to undertake to answer. In any event the gentleman will concede one proposition, and that is that the young woman is in no sense to blame.

Mr. SISSON. I do not say that she is; and if she is not to blame then the committee is to blame, and the individual member of the committee who employed her ought to pay her out of his own pocket. Will the gentleman set a precedent here, that any committee may go ahead and employ people?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Oh, no.

Mr. SISSON. Or that they may do it in the departments?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. This is an exceptional case. I will say this to the gentleman: I have made some investigation, and it is my judgment, and if the gentleman will make an investigation I think he will find that my conclusions are correct. In my judgment unless this House pays this committee clerk—this young woman—she will never get an additional dollar. That is my judgment after investigation.

Mr. MADDEN. Does anybody know where the clerk of the committee is?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I have made some investigation with respect to that matter. Some one has been named as clerk. I can not now recall his name, but I have never seen him about the place and do not know anything about it. I simply know this: The testimony before the committee is that the chairman told this acting clerk of the committee that when Congress appropriated for this investigation she would get her money, and she has been acting along that line and on that theory.

Mr. LLOYD. I think it is due to the House to say that, as far as the Committee on Accounts has any information, the man who was appointed clerk to the committee has never been in attendance on the committee, with the possible exception of one or two days, and that this woman has performed the work of clerk. She has done practically all the work that has been done, and has done it in a very capable way.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am informed that the man appointed clerk is named Baker. Is he the same man who came before the lobby investigating committee to testify in regard to disclosures as to the use of this room down here in the basement by Mr. Mulhall? As I recall, and perhaps my colleague from Indiana [Mr. CLINE] will confirm it, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCDERMOTT] summoned as one of his witnesses a man by the name of Baker.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Joe Baker.

Mr. STAFFORD. He was at one time a secretary for Mr. MCDERMOTT. He came and testified for a day. It was stated that he was engaged in other work. He did not testify that he was the clerk to this Committee on Expenditures.

Mr. LLOYD. He was not at that time.

Mr. STAFFORD. This committee had occupied the room that Mulhall was allowed to occupy down here, and I think we should have further information about this matter.

Mr. LLOYD. At the time of the Mulhall investigation this man Baker was not the clerk of the committee. According to the record he became the clerk of the committee after the authorization of the clerk, which was in December last.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LLOYD. I yield the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has this man Baker drawn the salary of the clerk of the committee?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. My understanding is—and I think it is based on sufficient testimony—that he has drawn the money that goes to the clerk of the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. And he performed no service.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The House might just as well have the facts. He has not been there. He has not done any work. He has not been a private secretary. The work done has been done by this young woman. I thought she was the clerk of the committee, but I have made an investigation and find she was not, but had done the work, and unless you allow this bill she will never get a cent, and she has a widowed mother to support.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. This man Baker, then, has received the money?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. What excuse has this committee to offer for paying him?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I want to say, so far as excuses are concerned, that I have no apology to offer, because I have not done any of it. I am not one of the majority of the committee. I think what has been done has been done by the chairman of the committee. There are some things with respect to this that I feel like criticizing, but that does not affect the services of this young woman, who has done all the work—as much work as any clerk in Congress.

Mr. CLINE. Who has been getting the clerk hire, or the secretary's hire, in that committee? Has this young lady, who has been doing the work of a secretary, been getting it?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. No; she has been working on this theory, on this promise or understanding, that this committee was making a special investigation—and Congress always appropriates for special investigations—and when the appropriation was made for the investigation she would get her money.

Mr. CLINE. I understood the gentleman to say that she had done the work of the secretary.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. CLINE. Did she get the money?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. No; she did not get it.

Mr. CLINE. What became of the money?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I do not know.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, in the hurry there seems to have arisen a confusion about the matter, and this confusion and misunderstanding is not based on the facts or the law in the case. The law is so clear and the facts bear out the action of the committee in such a strong light that after a short explanation there can be no doubt not only about the correctness and appropriateness of the payment of this claim now before the House but also in reference to the investigation itself.

There is a party fight on hand with reference to the investigation, but there is no party fight in reference to the allowance of this claim. We have had for several months quite a disagreement between the majority and minority members of the committee on the investigation of expenditures in the Department of Commerce, of which committee Mr. ROTHERMEL is chairman. The majority and minority members have not agreed at all upon the investigation. But the investigation has resulted in shedding considerable light upon the conduct of officials in the former administration, and when it comes to that question the majority members of the committee are prepared to support their majority report, which shows that those who have been depredating in the fur-seal industry, killing seals in Alaska, are now indebted to the Government, according to prices they were to pay for sealskins, $5,000,000, which have not been paid, and according to the value of the skins, $23,000,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATKINS. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman refers to the report made by the committee in the last Congress?

Mr. WATKINS. No; the report in this Congress. Now, Mr. Speaker, that is the cause of the controversy we have before the House. There is no doubt at all that this lady is entitled to $1,200, at the rate of $150 a month, where she has been working for eight long months. During the heat of last summer and the fall, when we could not get a quorum in the House of Representatives, she was there every day, and oftentimes at night, doing this work.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATKINS. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. I understand the chairman of the committee, like all other Members of Congress, has $1,500 for clerk hire.

Mr. WATKINS. No. Not then, as chairman of the committee.

Mr. GOOD. I am talking about him as a Member of Congress.

Mr. WATKINS. Oh, certainly.

Mr. GOOD. This young lady is the only person that has been in the office doing clerical work during the past eight months. Is not that true?

Mr. WATKINS. I can not say.

Mr. GOOD. Has the gentleman seen any other clerks there?

Mr. WATKINS. I have; yes.

Mr. GOOD. You have seen this young lady there?

Mr. WATKINS. No; I am not talking about the young lady. I have seen others there on frequent occasions. The office is divided into two apartments, and one is where the private work of the secretary is being done and the other where the work of the committee is being done. I was in the part where the committee work was being done, and I saw the lady doing the work, making compilations, taking dictation, going on necessary errands to the departments to get information, and so forth.

Mr. GOOD. I understand from other members of the committee that this young lady is the only person doing clerical work of the chairman of that committee. It seems to me if that is the case that what we are asked to do is to pay double compensation to one Member of Congress for his clerk hire and for his secretary. If that is not the case, I would like to have it explained why.

Mr. WATKINS. The gentleman asked if I had seen any other clerks there who were apparently doing the work of the chairman. I have seen clerks there, but whether they were doing the work of the secretary I am not prepared to say. I know that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROTHERMEL], chairman of the committee, who happens, unfortunately, to be absent at home to-day, claims that he has a secretary, who is employed at $125 a month, doing the work, but I am not prepared to state that of my own knowledge.

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATKINS. Yes.

Mr. BARNHART. In addition to a secretary and a stenographer, does the committee have a clerk?

Mr. WATKINS. It has a committee clerk now, but not last fall.

Mr. BARNHART. The gentleman says that it has a committee clerk?

Mr. WATKINS. It has at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. WATKINS. I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. LLOYD. I will yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. WATKINS. I want to finish answering the last question before I read the law. The fact is that this committee has what is known as a session clerk and not an annual clerk. This lady came there the 1st of August, when the commitee had no clerk.

Now, this is the authority under which this allowance is asked. I read from Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, page 831, section 4316, which says:

> The several committees on expenditures in the departments of the Government, being charged by the rules with the duty of making investigations, have assumed the right to do so without further specific direction of the House.

It goes on to enumerate the instances in which investigations have proceeded in that line.

Under that authority the chairman of the committee called the committee together, and it authorized this investigation to be made. Witnesses were brought here from various parts of the United States, and almost daily for months that investigation has been going on. This young lady, who is highly accomplished, thoroughly educated, commenced to do the work and has been faithful in the discharge of the duties, performed them to the perfect satisfaction of the committee, so much so that the committee unanimously, both majority and minority members, voted for this allowance.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATKINS. Just one moment. Not only has the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce unanimously passed a resolution to this effect, but also the Committee on Accounts has now reported back favorably this resolution, which shows that two of the committees of this House have concurred in the opinion that this is a just allowance. I yield now to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. MURDOCK. Did I understand the gentleman to say that a majority of this committee had reported out a finding that $5,000,000 are due the Government through fraud in sealing?

Mr. WATKINS. Yes; here it is; and we believe we have the facts to back it up. But that ought not to enter into this. The reason I mention that is to show that there is a partisan feeling injected into this discussion when there should not be.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATKINS. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. Is the report the gentleman speaks of founded on the testimony of this man Elliott?

Mr. WATKINS. Dr. Elliott? No. In broad language and to be explicit, I would say no. But in answer to the gentleman from New York, I will state that while the report is not based on the testimony of Dr. Elliott it is based largely on the investigation which he made and the collation which he made from the statements of various witnesses who have testified heretofore before this same investigating committee; and he in his statement showed the evidence, the statements, and the acknowledgments of these parties made at various times.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Elliott did?

Mr. WATKINS. Yes; he made the collation. He made the examination of the records and got them together, as well as making a trip to Alaska.

Mr. PAYNE. I hope the committee has not invested any money on any such statement as that. I would like to know whether the chairman knows whether Dr. Elliott has been receiving any money from the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. LLOYD. No; he has not—not through the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I can answer that question. He has not.

Mr. WATKINS. We have proceeded in the regular, orderly, proper way in the conduct of this examination, as well as reporting this matter to the House. This law says that we must first make the investigation and then report to the House and ask for an appropriation to be made to pay for the investigation already made. This we have done.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the citation quoted by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WATKINS] has nothing to do with the case. It does not purport to give the committee authority to hire or employ a clerk. The Committee on Expenditures has the authority to make the investigation. I think this committee had authority to make the investigation which it did make, but this Congress has been in continuous session now for a year. It was in session in August. If the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce—and, by the way, it is the Department of Commerce and not the Department of Commerce and Labor, as appears in the resolution.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. It used to be.

Mr. MANN. I know, but it is not now, although the Committee on Accounts apparently did not discover that. The Committee on Accounts could have brought in a resolution in August. The Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce, if it desired to have a clerk at that time, could have asked the House for permission. It paid no attention to the House. The rule is:

> The Chair shall appoint the clerk or clerks or other employees of his committee, subject to its approval, who shall be paid at the public expense, the House having first provided therefor.

The committee knew, or the chairman knew, the committee had nothing to do with it. The chairman knew that he had no authority to employ this clerk. The chairman, like all other Members of the House, has a clerk allowance of $1,500 a year. Since the first of the session the committee, in addition, has had an allowance of $125 a month. I think it is $125 a month, is it not? The claim is now made that we ought to pay this girl $150 a month because she has been acting as clerk of the committee.

This committee has one room, no more. It has had no other clerk in the room, either private clerk or committee clerk, than this one lady. I am informed that the lady has been paid for a portion of the time she served over there at a less rate than $125 a month.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I can inform the gentleman just what the lady was paid and the arrangement under which it was paid.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not do that in my time. I have not the time. It is enough for me to know that she has been paid something. She knew what she was doing. The chairman knew what he was doing. Now, at the end of eight months, when no clerk has been there representing the Member, when no other clerk has been there representing the committee, by what right is it proposed to demand the payment to this lady of clerk hire which has been paid to some one else as a committee clerk and paid to the Member in behalf of a private clerk? Everybody knew they had not the authority. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that if we are ever going to control the employment of clerks by committees we might just as well commence now.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. I think he is getting after the wrong persons. It appears that this man who has been the nominal clerk of the committee has been receiving the pay that the clerk ought to have, and from what appears he is getting it yet. Is there not some way that we can stop that payment going to that man? I am informed by a member of the committee that this appointment was made by the chairman without its being brought before the committee for their approval. In other words, I suppose it is a void appointment. I understand it must be brought to the committee and approved by the committee before the appointment becomes a real appointment.

Mr. MANN. Well, I do not think so myself.

Mr. PAYNE. In regular committees that has always been the custom.

Mr. MANN. We do know this: That the committee, while the House was in session, in deliberate violation of the law, proposes now that we pay a clerk employed then by the chairman, who has no pretense of the right of employment of a clerk until the House has authorized it.

Mr. LLOYD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, here is the proposition involved in this case as I learn from members of the committee. This young lady was employed by the chairman of the committee, who informed her when she was employed that she would be the clerk of the committee and would be paid this present salary of $150 a month if she would serve for the committee, and that the Congress would make an appropriation for her. The chairman of the committee has paid her, as I am informed, on two different occasions the sum of $50; in other words, she has received altogether $100. She has served since she supposed she was appointed as clerk of the committee. The committee during all this time understood she was the regularly appointed clerk of the committee. They never knew that a man who has never been there and never served had been secretly appointed by the chairman of the committee and that such person had been drawing the money all the time, and they did not know that this girl had never received any of it except the sums stated until a short time ago. The committee certainly can not be blamed, and above all else this girl can not be blamed. She thought she would receive the pay that had been promised her. She thought Congress would appropriate the money she was entitled to. She was doing all the work of the committee. She did it faithfully and well, they all say. It is true by refusing this payment you can punish the committee. It is true you can punish the chairman of that committee by taking away the pay of this girl, but do we want to do that? The principal punishment you will inflict will be upon this girl, who has done no wrong. Would it not be vastly better for us to deal justly with this girl and pay her for the work she has done and then investigate the conduct of these men with regard to this transaction?

Mr. SUMNERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Gladly.

Mr. SUMNERS. Under the state of facts the gentleman has enumerated, does not the gentleman think this girl's claim is a personal claim against the chairman of the committee, because he selected her and let the salary go to somebody else and he is responsible, and she could so recover in any court of law?

Mr. TOWNER. I will suggest to the gentleman that upon equitable grounds we are liable, because all this time the United States of America has been accepting her services and has profited by them, and hence ought to pay for them.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield——

Mr. TOWNER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not any of these committees on expenditures were authorized to employ a clerk between the month of August last and the beginning of the present session of Congress?

Mr. TOWNER. I am not informed as to that.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will ask the chairman of the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I think not.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Then this young woman's service from August to December was without any authority whatever, and if she was the private secretary or the clerk to the chairman of the committee, who received $1,500 a year, the same as every other Member does, and he has not paid her, and we make an appropriation to pay her from August until December, will we not have to do it for the chairman of every other committee on expenditures of this House and pay them from August to December?

Mr. TOWNER. Let me say to the gentleman that this girl never was employed as a private secretary. She was employed as clerk of the committee, and when she received the payments that have been made, two of them of $50 each, she supposed the money she was receiving was part of the compensation which the chairman had agreed to pay her as clerk of this committee.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. As a matter of fact, the service which she was rendering from August to December was that of clerk to the chairman of the committee as a Member of the House.

Mr. TOWNER. Oh, I think not at all. This is true, and we might as well admit it. This money has been drawn by the chairman, both for his private secretary and for clerk to the committee, and has been paid to himself or paid to somebody else for service that was never rendered. But that does not change the fact that this girl was employed as clerk of the committee, served as clerk of the committee, and she has not been paid. Of course any of these objections are sufficient if gentlemen desire to use them as a reason for voting against this claim, but it seems to me that any man ought to see that it is a just and meritorious claim, and that this House should deal equitably and justly with this girl and then investigate these matters that seem to demand investigation.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Let me put a further inquiry to the gentleman, if he will permit——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Let me ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. Does this resolution provide for paying this girl $150 a month?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The clerks authorized to the other committees on expenditures get $125 per month after December last or from the beginning of this session. Is that not correct?

Mr. LLOYD. It is. Mr. Speaker, there are a few things about this matter that I am very anxious every individual should get in mind. In the first place the claimant here is a poor girl, who has dependent upon her a widowed mother and an afflicted sister. She needs every dollar of the money that is due her to meet the expenses of the family and to perform the duties that devolve upon her in taking care of these dependents. In addition to that this girl was employed, as she thought, legally. She had been employed by a similar committee, and that committee had paid her, and she believed she had the right to be employed by this committee in the same way. So that, so far as she was concerned, the employment was in good faith. The chairman of the committee now, as I understand it, and a part of the committee still insists that they had a perfect right to make this employment, and I beg you to do the fair thing toward this girl. I have no personal concern in it whatever; but she has rendered the service, she is entitled to her pay, and I am sure that every Member of this House will see to it that she does get her pay.

Mr. BATHRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. BATHRICK. If she has been performing services for the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROTHERMEL] in his private capacity as a Representative, has she not recourse against him to collect that money?

Mr. LLOYD. But she has not been rendering service to him in a private capacity.

Mr. BATHRICK. It was so stated.

Mr. LLOYD. The work she has performed was performed for the committee as an employee of the committee.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. I understand from the statements so far that this young lady was at no fault whatever.

Mr. LLOYD. None whatever.

Mr. RAKER. But she relied on the committee that she would get her pay for this work?

Mr. LLOYD. The members of the committee connected with it agree that this woman is entitled to her pay.

Mr. RAKER. Would it not look quite peculiar, the committee agreeing that this young lady should have her money, that because she did not know the law and did not demand her pay in advance she should be cheated out of it.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Is it a fact that this committee has been allowed $125 a month for a committee clerk?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. And that the $125 a month has been paid to some person other than this girl?

Mr. LLOYD. I understand it has been paid to somebody other than the girl. It has not been paid to the girl.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. And it is a fact that the girl was employed as clerk of the committee?

Mr. LLOYD. No; as a clerk for the committee, not the clerk of the committee.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. A clerk?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman, as he is at the head of the committee that supervises the expenditures of this House, if this House does as he desires, and grants substantial justice to this young lady, is he and the majority Members of this House going to allow this matter to rest without further investigation of the conduct of the chairman of that committee——

Mr. LLOYD. I can not answer that question.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts (continuing). In allowing a man who has never been here to continue to draw money for doing no service whatever?

Mr. LLOYD. All I say in response to that is that I have no apology to make for the chairman of this committee. All I am asking now is that this girl who rendered the service for the committee shall receive the money to which she is entitled.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I want to say to the gentleman, if he will permit just a moment, that I am in hearty sympathy with him in seeing that this young lady is paid, but I do not feel like resting with the matter there. I think it should be pursued further. I think it is a matter affecting the majority side of this House, and some Member on that side ought to pursue it.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not want this committee to be named the "Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor"?

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the two words "and Labor." Before moving the previous question, I move to amend by striking out the words "and Labor" where they appear in the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the words "and Labor."

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I move the previous question on the resolution and amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. FOSTER. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 61, noes 29.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-eight Members are present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors; the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absentees. As many as are in favor of the resolution will, as their names are called, answer "yea," and those opposed will answer "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 186, nays 68, answered "present" 10, not voting 168, as follows:

Ending April 25:

Mr. MCKELLAR with Mr. NORTON.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair with the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think he did not vote. I voted "nay." I will withdraw my vote and ask to be recorded as "present."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. MANN, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors.

On motion of Mr. LLOYD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LIEB. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD my remarks of yesterday on the bill H. R. 15279, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LIEB] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 14034, the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, pending that motion will the gentleman permit me a word of inquiry?

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. In view of certain conditions of affairs and events that are likely to happen to-day, when is it the intention of the gentleman to move that the committee rise?

Mr. PADGETT. At 4 o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. MANN. Very well.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 14034, the naval appropriation bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 14034, the naval appropriation bill, with Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 14034, the naval appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14034) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HENSLEY] if he desires to use some of his time?

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 hour and 30 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON]. [Applause.]

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Mr. Chairman, this appropriation bill proposes to appropriate $139,000,000 for the support of the Navy. Seventeen members of the Naval Affairs Committee reported this bill, and four of us have refused to vote for it on the ground that it is a useless, inexcusable, and criminal waste of the public funds. That is our position on this bill.

The first part of the bill to which I desire to call your attention is the part which appropriates $19,000,000 to pay for the work for the next fiscal year on vessels heretofore authorized. That sum is nearly $3,000,000 less than it was last year on the corresponding item. We claim that it should have been a great deal less; that it should have been perhaps $7,000,000 less instead of between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000 less. And we base that contention on the fact that during the next fiscal year covered by this bill there will be only four battleships upon which work will be done. During the present fiscal year there were six.

The difference between the number of battleships for the next fiscal year and the present one is that up to two years ago Congress had been authorizing two battleships a year. It takes about three years to build one, and when two are authorized every year it results in having about six under construction at the same time. But during the last two years we have only authorized one battleship each year, and that will result in the fact that during the next fiscal year there will be only four of them to complete. Therefore there should have been a much greater reduction in this item than there actually is.

The reason why the reduction is so small is because the Navy Department has violated the acts of Congress authorizing the last two ships. The language of those acts conferring authority on the Navy Department to construct battleships, among other words of limitation and description, provides in each case that they might build a battleship carrying as heavy armor and as powerful armament as any vessel of its class. Now, when we come to consider what that means, we find that in our own Nation the largest vessel of its class at the time it was authorized was a vessel of 26,000 tons. Both of these ships have a tonnage of 31,400 tons. In other words, they exceed the tonnage of the largest vessel of their class by 5,400 tons, and they exceed the tonnage of the largest vessel of their class in any navy of the world, because the largest vessel of its class in our Navy was so much greater than the largest ship in the English or German or any other navy of the world.

The chairman of the committee, in trying yesterday to excuse this violation of law, pointed out some vessels that Germany is building as being equal to these in armor, but the acts did not authorize the Navy Department to build a ship with as heavy armament as any ship that might be built, but it said "as any vessel," and a vessel is something that is already built.

That failure to comply with the words in the act of Congress impressed us with the necessity that hereafter the act should be so drawn as to make it impossible for the Navy Department to defeat the legislative will by building ships not authorized. The very object of Congress in refusing in the last two sessions to authorize two battleships, and in authorizing only one battleship each year, was to reduce these enormous expenses. That was the object of it; but they have defeated that object in a large measure by building two ships so much larger than they were authorized to build that the expense of building them is almost as great as if we had authorized two of the class that we had been authorizing.

The second part of this bill to which I want to call attention is the part that appropriates $17,000,000 for the first year's work of construction on 2 battleships, 6 destroyers, and 8 submarines. That is nearly $5,000,000 more than the corresponding item in the last appropriation bill, and of course this large increase in that item grows out of the fact that in the last appropriation bill we only authorized one battleship, while this bill proposes to authorize two. That increases this item from something over $12,000,000 to something over $17,000,000.

And that brings up the question whether our Navy ought to be increased. Have we not a sufficient number of ships? Does the good of our country require that we should increase the number? That is the question to which I wish mostly to address my remarks and to invite your attention.

It does look to me as though a Navy that has, I believe, 383 ships in it, including 39 battleships, 15 armored cruisers, 10 monitors, about 50 submarines, I believe, 60 destroyers, and a great many other ships—a Navy which, if it was strung out on the ocean in line, would be about 95 miles long—ought to satisfy any ordinary mortal, however highly developed his extravagance may be. [Applause.]

Now, I want to submit to this House some few reasons in the beginning why we need no larger Navy than we have, and why, in my judgment, the Navy would be amply adequate if it was half or a third as large as it is now. What do we want with a Navy? Do we want it to protect us in wars waged against us by foreign countries or do we want a Navy for conquest?

If anybody wants a navy for conquest, if there is anybody left in this civilized age who is so barbarous and brutal that he wants to prepare to conquer other countries, I have not a minute of my time to waste in arguing with such a man as that. [Applause.] But assuming that we are civilized people, and that means that we want to make no preparations except to defend our rights and our honor, I want to submit to you several reasons why we need no more ships. One reason is that in my judgment there is no people on earth that desires to go to war with us. Do you want to go to war with anybody else? Have you any desire to see the blood of your fellow man shed? Have you any desire to see the property in any other country on earth destroyed by your guns? Who will get up and confess that he is that kind of a barbarian? And if he is not willing to confess that he is, how can he say that the people in any other country are?

In the second place, there is no country on earth whose interest would make them go to war with us, even if you could credit them with a barbarous desire to do so. Our trade relations have become so enormous, the world is so dependent upon the products of our farms and factories, that it can not get along without us, and those very bonds of self-interest are a strong guaranty that our rights are not in danger by war from any country on earth.

A third reason is our isolation. No nation on earth could war against us at a distance not less than 3,000 miles, and it is almost impossible for any nation situated as they are to provide themselves with the necessary coal, oil, ammunition, and supplies with which to wage war with us at that distance. And that is another guaranty that we have. Conceding though that all these reasons may fail, outside of the Navy we have these guaranties.

Every nation on earth would consider whenever it comes to contemplate war with us that when its ships got to our shores it would find the most powerful shore defenses; they would know that the mouth of every river, every bay and inlet were filled with hidden mines which they would have to pass. They would find a great number of torpedo destroyers that they would have to overcome. And, above all, that they would find—no they would not find because they could not be seen—but they would know that a large number of submarines would be roaming around under the water, and that the first warning they would have of the presence of those terrible engines of war would be when the bottom of their ships was blown out and they began to sink. Now, that I want to impress upon you.

We had a very intelligent statement made about this situation to the Naval Affairs Committee by Col. Goethals in the last Congress. He was telling us about the defenses at Panama, and he described it in the most intelligent way. I heard him make the statement that if Panama was defended by a reasonable number of submarines and destroyers that there was no nation on earth that would dare to come within 500 miles of us. That statement does not appear in the hearings. The chairman of the committee said yesterday afternoon that that was not true, but I am here to tell you that it is true, for I heard Col. Goethals say it. I was astounded, and I thought at the time why do we need to spend $15,000,000 for a battleship when we have a fleet of submarines and no fleet on earth would dare to come within 500 miles of us.

Admiral Dewey made this statement about it. He said that if the Spaniards had had two submarines at Manila Bay when he took it he never could have held it. He said that with two submarines at Galveston, Tex., all the navies of the world could not blockade that port. Why? Because of the moral effect of submarines. There is nothing like it; he said it would wear men out. A brave man can stand up and fight as many as will come to him, but if he knows that there are a few assassins lying concealed that are going to shoot him in the back and he does not know where they are, his nerve will be gone. That is the effect Admiral Dewey said the submarines had and would have on any fleet that might approach our shores.

While Admiral Vreeland was testifying some member of the committee asked him this question. He said, "Admiral, what would you do if you were commanding a fleet and approaching a shore where you knew there were some submarines?" He hesitated for a second, like he was thinking what he would do, and then he said, "I would keep moving."

If you will read the naval literature of the day by men who have studied this question, you will find that the best thinkers among them say that the day of the battleship is about at an end. The submarine makes it useless; that at present the domain of the battleship's action is out in midocean; and if Huerta had a couple of them at Tampico, our Atlantic Fleet would stop several weeks at Guantanamo before it got there.

Now, for these reasons, if we had no Navy at all we would not suffer. No nation on earth but that would hesitate long before they would attack us if we did not have a battleship on the ocean.

Let us see what the proposition is. The proposition is that we build two battleships a year for the next four years, making eight more battleships. That increase in the Navy is about five times as fast as we have increased it for the last 24 years. In 24 years we have built 33 battleships, which is an average of a battleship and one-third per annum. Now, after we have gotten 39 we propose to increase it about five times as fast as we did increase it when we had an insignificant Navy. The Secretary of the Navy tells us that the battleships they are building now are equal to three of those that we used to build when we built one battleship and a third a year. So two of them now would be equal to six of the kind we used to build. Do you know anything else on earth that human beings care to use and need which they acquire faster and more rapidly after they have gotten all they can use than they did when they were getting what they really needed?

Suppose you buy a fine house to make a home, and when you get through with it your money is all gone and you begin to hedge around to buy furniture, and it takes two or three years to get furniture enough to fill every room; but finally you get it all through. You get every room filled with the finest and most handsome furniture you can find. Now that you have it, are you going to buy furniture six times as fast as you did when you were in need of it? That is the kind of nonsense and stupidity that characterizes the policy of our Government. [Applause.]

But the Secretary of the Navy recommends it, and usually his recommendation has just gone through without asking any questions, except one time he was asked a question and he refused to answer it. But this time we did not assume that the Secretary of the Navy's recommendation should go through, and we have investigated and developed the facts. We have gotten the reason and the facts, and I want to submit them to you. Now, he gives various reasons. He says, in the first place, that the general board wanted to build four battleships a year, and he decided to recommend only two, and that his reason for recommending only two is that it is a small and moderate increase inspired by the spirit of economy.

Now, for the last 24 years we have been spending about $9,000,000 a year on battleships. That is all that it has cost us. The Secretary of the Navy now asks you to adopt a program which he says himself will cost $30,000,000 a year; or, in other words, more than three times as much as we have been spending for the last 24 years, and says that that is a manifestation of his economy. In the last 24 years we have spent $220,000,000 on battleships. Now, this program of the Secretary of the Navy means that during the four years of his administration we shall spend $120,000,000, or $10,000,000 more than half as much as the Republicans spent in the last 24 years.

If that is economy, then the conduct of the Republican Party for the last 24 years must have been mean and stingy. [Laughter and applause.] But the Secretary says that our old ships are becoming obsolete and worthless; that they can not fight; that they reach not their maturity but their old, decrepid age, when they are 20 years old, and that it is necessary to build these two battleships a year in order to replace these ships that are becoming obsolete and to maintain the present efficiency of the Navy. That is another one of his reasons. Let us see. Let us concede that that is true, and that we ought to replace every one. We have six dreadnaughts, two of them just about completed and the other four under construction. He says that each one of these now would replace three of our old ships. If that be so, we have enough ships already being constructed right now to replace 18 of our battleships. We have but 25, and the present dreadnaughts that we are building will replace 18 of them, leaving only 7 to be replaced, and they are just 6 and 7 and 8 years old. That would be the case without building any more, but suppose you carry out the Secretary's recommendation to build 8 more battleships or dreadnaughts in the next 4 years. You add those 8 to the 6 that we now have under construction and it will make 14. Those 14 dreadnaughts would replace 42 battleships, according to the Secretary's statement. In other words, they would replace every battleship we have and 17 that we have not. [Laughter.] That is the reductio ad absurdum, to which the Secretary's logic will inevitably lead you. Can you follow the recommendation of a Secretary that bases them on such logic as that? I can not do it and will not do it.

Another reason—and the principal reason, and the one to which I propose to devote myself—is the statement repeatedly made not only in the hearings but made in all the great organs of graft, waste, and extravagance, and even in the little country newspapers all over the United States, that our Navy is so far inferior to the navy of Germany that we must increase it. They used to work the Japan racket on Congress, but I do not hear much of that now. The fact is that our Navy is so far superior to any other navy in the world, leaving out England and Germany, that nobody who has any idea at all about it will compare ours with any other except that of Germany and England. We have, I believe, 10 more battleships than France, 20 more than Japan, 24 more than Russia, and 22 more than Italy, and in that way there is no comparison between our Navy and that of any other country except Germany and England. So that Germany is the last straw that the grafters can catch hold of. [Applause.] And they tell us that our Navy is inferior to Germany's navy, and I am right here to tell you that that is a slander on the American Navy. The American Navy has never been inferior to any other navy from the time John Paul Jones first unfurled the Stars and Stripes to the ocean breeze. [Applause.] And it stands to-day, preeminent, the queen of the seas; and no one except one whose national pride is dead, whose patriotism has grown weak, and who knows nothing about it can believe that our Navy is inferior to Germany's. [Applause.]

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WITHERSPOON. I can not yield.

Mr. HOBSON. After the gentleman uses the word "grafters" he can not yield?

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Mr. Chairman, I have notified the gentleman from Alabama that I decline to yield to him.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will be permitted to proceed uninterrupted. [Applause.]

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Mr. Chairman, I want to compare these navies. In our Navy we have 39 battleships, we have 15 armored cruisers, we have 10 monitors, making 64 armored ships in all. Germany has 20 battleships, 13 dreadnaughts, and the same—well, the same number of battleships, 39; and then she has 16 cruisers, making 55 armored ships that Germany has. In other words, we have 9 more armored ships than Germany. Do not understand me to say that that proves that our Navy is superior to Germany's navy. It does not prove anything of the kind. The truth of the business is that we have more ships than we could possibly use, and Germany has more than she can possibly use, and therefore the excess in numbers amounts to nothing. Just like, if two men were going to fight a duel, and one had 10 pistols and the other 50, one would be just as well armed as the other. [Laughter and applause.]

The fellow who had 10 pistols could not use more than two at the utmost, and the other fellow could not use any more than that, so the balance of the pistols would be like this great superfluity of battleships. It would just be evidence of somebody's folly, and that is all it is. Why, if you were to send our 64 armored ships out to sea, they would make a line 16 miles long; and if you were to send Germany's 55 armored ships out to sea, they would make a line 12 miles long, and the rear ships in our line would be 28 miles from the rear ships in the German line after they got right up together, but when they reached battleship range, 7 miles apart, it would make about, I believe, 34 or 35 miles between our rear ships and the German rear ships, and the truth is that a large part of the ships in both navies would never hear the booming of the cannon or see the enemy's ships sink. [Laughter and applause.] So I do not admit that any difference in the number amounts to a row of pins, and I did not make that comparison in numbers to produce that impression, but I just made that comparison out of the benevolence of my heart for certain gentlemen who imagine that the strength of our Navy depends on how many ships you can count on your fingers.

Let us take the guns of the two navies and compare them. We have on our battleship fleet 492 guns, on our dreadnaught fleet 144 guns, on our armored cruisers 264, and on our monitors 26, making a total of 926 guns on the armored vessels of our Navy. Germany has 380 guns on her battleship fleet, 202 on her dreadnaughts, and 255 on her armored cruisers, making a total of 837, showing that we have in number of guns 89 more guns on our armored vessels than there are on the armored vessels of the German Navy.

Mr. SHERWOOD. How does the capacity of our 12-inch guns compare with the German Navy?

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio is trying to get over to something I am coming to later. I am going to dwell on that before long. My friend knows perhaps more about war than any of the balance of us, and when he asks me that question he shows by the question that he knows what constitutes superiority. [Applause.]

Now, in order for Germany to have as many ships as we have she will have to build 9 more armored ships. In order for her to have as many guns as we have if she places on the ships the same number of guns that are now stylish, she will have to build 11 more than she has authorized before she will have as many guns in her navy as we have. Now, I want to call attention in the next place to the size of the guns and the weight of the shells, and I am going to show you by a mathematical demonstration before I get through the reason why our Navy is superior to the German Navy. Now, of the first 10 battleships built by Germany, each one is armed with four big guns, as they are called. They are 9.4 inches in diameter, and our first 8 vessels are armed with four 13-inch guns, making the size of our guns corresponding to the German guns 3.6 inches larger in diameter than theirs. Those 9.4-inch guns of the Germans carry a shell weighing 419 pounds, while our 13-inch guns carry a shell weighing 1,130 pounds, or, in other words, our shells weigh 711 pounds more than the German shell. Now, that is as to the large guns on the first 8 or 10 ships. Then the Germans have 14 of their next ships using guns 11 inches in diameter, and we have 17 armed with guns 12 inches in diameter.

In other words, the diameter of our guns which I am going to compare with the German's is an inch larger than the German's. Our 12-inch gun carries a shell weighing 870 pounds, while the German 11-inch gun, corresponding to it, carries a shell weighing 661 pounds. In other words, our shell weighs 209 pounds more than the German shell. Now, that is a comparison as to the big guns. Now, on the first eight ships that we built and the next size guns that we armed them with are 8-inch guns, and the corresponding guns on the German ships are guns 5.9 inches in diameter. In other words, our 8-inch gun exceeds the German 5.9-inch gun by 2.1 inches in diameter, and our 8-inch shell weighs 260 pounds and the shell of the corresponding German gun weighs 101 pounds, or 159 pounds more than the German shell weighs. Now we come to the other small guns. After the first 10 battleships built by the Germans were armed, the next 10 were the 6.7-inch gun, while we were arming ours with the 7-inch guns and 6-inch guns. The difference in the diameter there is very small—three-tenths of an inch. Our shell weighs 165 pounds and the German shell weighs 154 pounds, making it weigh 11 pounds more than the German shell. Coming to the dreadnaughts, the Germans have a good many of their dreadnaughts armed with 12-inch guns and we have eight of ours armed with 12-inch guns, and our 12-inch guns carry a shell weighing just 10 pounds more than the German 12-inch gun does. Comparing the balance of the German dreadnaughts with ours, we have six dreadnaughts armed with 14-inch guns. They are 14-inch guns, 2 inches larger in diameter than the corresponding German 12-inch guns, and the shell of our 14-inch gun weighs 1,400 pounds, which is 540 pounds more than the 12-inch shell carried by the German 12-inch gun. That leaves for comparison only one other gun.

The last two German dreadnaughts are armed with 15-inch guns, which are larger than any we have in our Navy, but there are only 16 of them, while we have 64 carrying 14-inch shells. Now, those 15-inch shells weigh 1,767 pounds, which is 366 pounds more than our 14-inch shell weighs, and that is the only shell in the entire German Navy that is not largely less in weight than the corresponding shell in the American Navy.

Now, I want to submit to you this proposition, that the weight of the shell and the size of the gun are the two elements that constitute the destructive power of a navy, because the bigger the gun is the more powder you can put into it, and the bigger the shell is the more destructive force it has. That is not a question of opinion; that is a question that is capable of mathematical demonstration; and on that proposition I want to call your attention to a formula by which the destructive force of a gun is determined mathematically. Now, when you want to determine the destructive force of a gun or its striking energy at any distance we have a formula by which you can tell exactly what it will do at a certain distance. If you want to find out what would be the striking energy of any gun at 9,000 yards or 12,000 yards, or any other distance, you would have to take the formula that I am going to call your attention to in order to determine, and this is the formula: $E=\frac{W V^2}{2g}$. "E" represents energy. Energy means the striking force or power of a shell, and you want to find out what that will be. Now, that is equal to W into V^2, divided by 2g. "W" is the weight of the shell. "W" is one of the factors in the dividend of your fraction, and, of course, the larger W is the greater will be the value of your fraction. Now, suppose you want to find out what would be the striking energy of a German 9.4-inch shell, which weighs 419 pounds. You put 419 in place of "W," and then substitute the proper quantities for all the other letters there and you would get the striking energy of that shell.

Do you not know that if you were to put the American 13-inch shell, weighing 1,130 pounds, or weighing 711 pounds more than the German shell, the value of the fraction in the formula would be much greater than if you were to substitute for "W" in the formula the weight of the corresponding German shell weighing only 419 pounds, and that the destructive force of the American shell would be much greater, and that the same result would follow if you were to substitute for "W" in the formula the weight of all the other American shells than if you should substitute the weights of the corresponding German shells, which I have shown are much less in weight.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Do you mean when you speak of energy the penetrating power of the shell or the destructive power of the explosive?

Mr. WITHERSPOON. It is the penetrating power. It is generally measured in foot tons. For instance, you take our 13-inch gun and it has a muzzle energy of 40,388 foot tons, which, I understand, means that if that energy could be so harnessed and arranged that it would lift an object right at the muzzle of the gun it would lift 40,388 tons a foot high. That is the way it is measured. As to the bursting charge in the shell, that is a different proposition; that I will get to after a while; but it is very important, and it is just as important almost as the energy given by the charge in the gun that shoots it.

And while I am on that I will explain it. The bigger your shell is the greater the bursting charge you can put in, and the greater its destructive force for that reason. And just to illustrate to you what that means—what is the importance of the bursting charge in the shell—they had an experiment here where they shot a 40-caliber 12-inch gun at two targets, which were upright pieces of steel, one of them 8 inches thick and the other, right behind it, 10 inches thick. The shell struck the first target, 8 inches thick, penetrated it, and went clean through it, and between the first target and the second target the shell exploded, and the explosion was so violent that it thrust the solid part of the shell, or the point, against the other target, 10 inches of steel thick, and it went entirely through it. That shows what the bursting charge will do.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Does not the penetrating power of shells depend upon their velocity and have to do with this question of whether a small shell would not have more velocity than a larger one?

Mr. WITHERSPOON. I will get on to the subject of velocity later. The fact, as I will show you hereafter, that the total weight of all the shells from a broadside of all the American armored vessels weighs 72,000 pounds more than the weight of the shells of a broadside from the entire German armored vessels proves that this factor "W," in determining the striking energy, would be far greater in the American Navy than in the German Navy, assuming all the time the silly proposition that you could ever get these two navies in any such position where they could shoot all those guns. "V^2" is the velocity. The striking energy, therefore, depends upon the weight of the shell and its velocity, and, of course, the velocity depends upon the amount of powder you put behind it, and the bigger the gun is the more powder you can put in and the more velocity you can get. That is what mathematicians say in response to these fellows who are saying the German Navy is superior to ours.

Not only that, but the weight of the shell is an important factor in determining the velocity. The velocity, of course, is the product of the powder, but the velocity that the shell will have at any distance is largely affected by the weight of the shell. Now, if you want to determine the velocity, you would use this formula. Say you wanted to determine the velocity at the end of 9,000 yards, and let "S" represent the 9,000 yards. Then you would have this formula: $S=\frac{W}{id^2}(Sv_2-Sv_1)$, and so forth. The other letters are not important, but you see the "W" is a factor in the formula for determining the velocity itself, and that the greater the weight of the shell the greater the velocity will be, all other things being equal, at any given distance.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I would like to ask the gentleman this question——

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. In that formula there do you mean weight multiplied by the square of the velocity, or plus?

Mr. WITHERSPOON. I mean multiplied. They stand right together, and that means multiplication, does it not?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Well, hardly.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. You use a different algebra out in Oklahoma than we do down in Mississippi.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. We use a good many algebras, and they are standard textbooks. I was asking for information simply. You have no figure there to indicate whether that is plus or multiplied, or what. You have your division all right.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. I was never trained to do that. You put a lot of letters together and that means multiply.

Mr. CARTER. They mean multiply in all algebras.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. But the gentleman's language did not indicate. He said "and." That means plus.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. I want to impress upon you this proposition, that, of course, in determining the destructive force of guns one factor, the weight of the shell, would remain permanent. The shell would weigh the same when it leaves the muzzle of the gun as when it strikes the target. That is permanent; it does not change. The velocity is changing every second. It is getting slower and slower. The proposition I want to submit to you is that a large shell loses its velocity much slower than a small shell. I do not know the reason for that, but I believe it is on account of the proportion between the weight of the shell and the resistance of the atmosphere, or something like that. It is on the same principle that if you were to drop a feather, which is lighter than the air, it would float about. The air would influence it a great deal more than it would lead if you dropped a piece of lead. And that same principle would be carried out in the very largest shell, which would make the resistance of the atmosphere much smaller upon the large shell than on the small one. But, however that may be, the fact is that the large shell does not lose its striking energy and power nearly as rapidly as a small one, and it is also a fact that where you attempt to get a large striking velocity by an overcharge of powder, that kind of a gun loses its striking energy much faster than one with a reasonable charge and a larger shell.

Now, I have a lot of figures here from the ballistic tables, and I want to call your attention to them. We will first take guns of the same size and carrying the same size shell and show you the difference between a gun with a great deal of powder in it and immense velocity and one with a lower charge of powder and less velocity. Now, compare, for instance, our 12-inch gun, 50 caliber, with our 12-inch gun, 35 caliber. The first carries 340 pounds of powder and develops a muzzle velocity of 2,950 foot-seconds.

The other carries only 160 pounds of powder and develops a muzzle velocity of only 2,100 foot-seconds, or 850 less than the other gun.

Now, at the muzzle the high-powered gun will penetrate steel to the depth of 25.7 inches, while the other will penetrate only 14.2. In other words, the high-powered gun at the muzzle exceeds the other in penetration 11½ inches. But when you get 9,000 yards away the high-powered gun will penetrate only 11 inches and the low-powered gun 7.2. In other words, the difference there is only 3.8 inches. At 9,000 yards the difference between the two guns has been reduced from 11½ inches to 3.8 inches; the high-powered gun has lost in 9,000 yards 14.7 inches of its penetration, while the other has lost only 7 inches, or less than half; or one has lost at the rate of an inch and six-tenths of an inch for every thousand yards and the other only seven-ninths of an inch.

You will find the same thing in comparing our 10-inch 40-caliber guns with the 30-caliber guns. The one carries 207 pounds of powder, the other 90. The big load of powder develops 2,700 muzzle velocity of foot-seconds and the other only 2,000, making a difference of 700. Now, at the muzzle the high-powered gun will penetrate steel to a depth of 19.4 inches, while the other will penetrate only 10.7, a difference of 8.7 inches between the two guns. But at 9,000 yards the high-powered gun penetrates only 6.9 inches and the other only 5, a difference there of 1.9 inches. In other words, the destructive power of those guns has been reduced from a difference of 8.7 inches at the muzzle to 1.9, which shows you how rapidly a gun loses its destructive force where it depends for its destructive force not on the weight of the shell but on the amount of powder in the gun.

Now, comparing our two 8-inch guns in the same way, the 45-caliber 8-inch gun carries 98 pounds of powder, and the 35-caliber gun 43 pounds. One has a muzzle velocity of 2,750 and the other 2,100. One has a penetration at the muzzle of 12 inches and the other 8.6, a difference of 3.4 inches. But at 9,000 yards the high-powered gun will penetrate 4.4 inches and the other only 3.6, a difference of eight-tenths of an inch. In other words, that difference has decreased from 3.4 inches at the muzzle to eight-tenths of an inch at 9,000 yards away. That is the value of destructive force when produced solely by the powder that is in the gun.

Now I want to give you two guns with different sized shells, in order to show you how much more rapidly the gun with the smaller shell loses its striking energy than the one with the larger shell. Take, for instance, our 12-inch 50-caliber gun. That has a charge of 340 pounds and a muzzle velocity of 2,950, and has a shell weighing 870 pounds. Compare with that the 13-inch 35-caliber gun, which they claim is the gun with which the weakest ships in our Navy are equipped—and they are the ones that we want to count—with a muzzle velocity of only 2,000, 950 less than the other. At the muzzle the 12-inch gun will penetrate 25.7 inches and the other only 15, a difference of 10.7 inches. At 3,000 yards the 12-inch gun will penetrate 17½ inches and the other only 12 inches, a difference of 5½ inches. At 6,000 yards, 13.9 for the 12-inch gun and 9.7 for the other, making 4.2 difference. At 9,000 yards the 12-inch gun, with a small shell, will penetrate 11 inches and the other 8.1 inches, making a difference of 2.9. In other words, the difference between the two guns at the muzzle is 10.7 inches penetration. At 9,000 yards it is only 2.9 inches difference, and if the table had given it on to long battle range, at this rate the 13-inch gun would have been more destructive than the other. This shows that at 9,000 yards the 12-inch 50-caliber gun loses 14.7 inches of penetration, while the other only loses 6.9, or less than half. Or, in other words, it shows that the gun with the smaller shell loses 1.6 inches of its penetration every 1,000 yards, while the other loses only seven-tenths of an inch every 1,000 yards.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from New Hampshire?

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. REED. Without in any way questioning the veracity of the gentleman's figures, will the gentleman kindly tell me from what compilation of figures they were taken?

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Those last figures were taken from what is called the Elements of United States Naval Guns. That is prepared, I understand, by the Office of Naval Intelligence, in our Navy Department. I have the tables here.

Mr. REED. They are the Government figures, not the Du Pont Powder Co.'s figures?

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Oh, no. I do not take the figures of any trust. I am giving you solid figures when I speak.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman speaks of "caliber." What does he mean by "caliber"?

Mr. WITHERSPOON. That word "caliber" is used in a way to confuse. I understand, ordinarily, the caliber of the gun to be the diameter of its bore. That is the way we use it in common parlance. But the length of guns in the Navy is always stated in calibers. For instance, you speak of the 12-inch 50-caliber gun. That means that the diameter of the bore is 12 inches and that the length of it is fifty times that caliber, or the diameter, which in that case would make it 50 feet long. That is what I understand "caliber" to mean.

Having shown the principle that a large shell will not lose its striking force nearly as rapidly as a smaller shell, and having shown you that all through our Navy, from the beginning to the end, our shells are a great deal larger than those of Germany, I claim that that proves ours are superior.

But I do not ask you to take my reasoning. I ask you to take the actual results that I am going to give you, taken from one of the highest authorities, and that is Jayne's Fighting Ships of the World. I take it from that authority, not because I know that he is better than any other, but because he is the only authority I can find who gives a table showing the destructive force of both the German and the American guns. I found others giving the figures as to the German guns, and some giving the figures as to ours, but this is the only authority I could find that gives the two side by side, and I took that to mean that they had been calculated by that author according to the same formula and therefore it would be a fair comparison. Let us take them up and compare them.

Starting out with our 13-inch guns and comparing them with the corresponding German guns of 9.4 inches, at 3,000 yards the penetration of our gun is 12 inches and of the German gun 10 inches. At 6,000 yards the penetration of our gun is 9.75 inches and of the German gun is 7 inches, a difference in our favor of 2¾ inches. At 9,000 yards the penetration of ours is 8 inches and of the Germans' 3½, a difference in our favor of 4½ inches, showing that at that distance the destructive force of our gun is twice as great as that of the corresponding German gun.

I call your attention to the fact that in 3,000 yards the difference between the two guns is only 2 inches, but at 9,000 yards it is 4½ inches. The difference is more than twice as great at 9,000 yards as it is at 3,000 yards, demonstrating what I have argued, that where you have a larger shell in your gun it will lose its destructive force less rapidly and be more superior to the other gun the greater the battle range is.

Mr. SHERWOOD. It is more effective.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. More penetrating?

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Yes; it will destroy a ship, and put its guns out of action and kill more men and do more devilment generally.

Now, comparing next our 12-inch guns with the corresponding 11-inch gun of the Germans, which I have already described, showing you that our shell weighs 209 pounds more than their shell, we have this result: At 3,000 yards the penetration of our gun is 13.3 inches; of the German gun it is 14 inches. In other words, at that distance the German gun has a penetration of seven-tenths of an inch superior to ours. That undoubtedly is caused by putting more powder in the gun. The amount of powder in the gun when this table was figured was 180 pounds, which is a very small charge, I understand; a reduced charge. But that is evidently the result of the relative proportion of charges of powder, that at 3,000 yards this German gun is seven-tenths of an inch superior to ours. At 6,000 yards the penetration of our gun is 10.5 inches, of the German gun only 10 inches. There you see our gun has gained on it, and it is five-tenths of an inch superior to the German. It has gained 1.2 inches in penetration in 3,000 yards. Again, at 9,000 yards the penetration of our gun is 8.3 inches and of the German gun only 6 inches, giving us a superiority of 2.3 inches at the range of 9,000 yards.

As the German gun starts at 3,000 yards with seven-tenths of an inch greater penetration than ours, it would make a difference of 3 inches in the superiority of our gun at a distance of 9,000 yards, which seems to me to demonstrate the essential superiority of a navy that is built upon the plan of large shells, instead of one like the German Navy, that is built upon the plan of small guns and small shells with a great deal of powder behind them to make up for the deficiency in the size of the gun and the weight of the shells.

Take next our 8-inch gun and compare it with the corresponding German gun of 5.9 inches. At 3,000 yards our gun has a penetration of 8.6 inches and the German gun 3.5 inches. Ours has 5.1 inches greater penetration than the German gun at 3,000 yards; at 6,000 yards the penetration of our gun is 6.1 inches, and the table does not give the German gun any at all. It is not put down, and I suppose that the German shell fell in the water before it went 6,000 yards, and that is the reason they did not put it down. [Laughter.]

Now, comparing our 7-inch gun with their 6.7-inch gun, the penetration of ours at 3,000 yards is 6.4 inches and of theirs is 5 inches, making a difference of 1.4 inches in our favor. At 9,000 yards this author gives the penetration of our gun at 3 inches and does not give any for the German gun. I do not know whether it had any or not. They may have been ashamed to put it down it was so little.

Taking some of the guns on the dreadnaughts, we have our 12-inch 45-caliber guns. That gun has a penetration of 15.5 inches. The Germans have four of their dreadnaughts armed with 11-inch guns, and at 3,000 yards they have a penetration of 16 inches, or half an inch more than ours. At 6,000 yards the penetration of our gun is 12.3 inches and of theirs 13 inches, making a difference in their favor of seven-tenths of an inch. At 9,000 yards the penetration of our gun is 9.8 inches and of theirs 8.5 inches, giving the superiority of our gun at battle range of 1.3 inches over theirs. That is on four German dreadnaughts, where the superiority of our gun is that much greater than theirs.

The other guns on both fleets are 12-inch guns, and are practically the same, except the 64 14-inch guns, which are much more powerful than any of the others, but which are new guns, the penetration of which was not put down in this table. But Admiral Twining told the committee that these 14-inch guns had a destructive power 50 per cent greater than that of the 12-inch guns. That is his statement before the Naval Affairs Committee. And he not only said that they had 50 per cent greater destructive power, but that a gun of that kind would shoot with 30 per cent more accuracy than the smaller gun, because he said on account of the flatness of the trajectory and the weight of the shell it would be less influenced by forces working upon it and would shoot with 30 per cent more accuracy. If his statement be true as to the difference between the 14-inch and the 12-inch American guns, then it is true all through the comparison of the American and German Navies that our guns, on account of the greater weight of their shells, will shoot with 30 per cent more accuracy than the German's, which is the same thing as saying that it makes our Navy a third greater than theirs on that account. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman pardon me?

Mr. WITHERSPOON. I yield with great pleasure.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. From the gentleman's standpoint is there any need at all of a comparison between the American and the German Navy?

Mr. WITHERSPOON. There is absolutely no need among that class of people who resemble the gentleman from Missouri and myself, but there is some need, I think, for others who take a different view of it and who have been led into believing that our Navy is inferior to the German Navy.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. What I meant was that Germany is in an entirely different situation than we are. Germany is surrounded by enemies and we are practically isolated.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Yes.

Mr. HENSLEY. Will the gentleman from Mississippi quote Admiral Vreeland on that proposition of the strength of the navy of Germany and England that would be sent against the United States in case of war?

Mr. WITHERSPOON. I intended to quote that after I had compared the navies to show which one was the greater. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has two minutes remaining.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 20 minutes more.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Will the gentleman from Mississippi yield for a question?

Mr. WITHERSPOON. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but I will not be able to get through with my speech in the time that I have. The way to tell which navy is superior to the other is to compare one navy with the other, and that is what I have partially done. The way these men that have made you believe that the German Navy is superior to ours is never to compare the American Navy with the German Navy. They could not do it. The way they do it is to pick out a part of the American Navy and compare that to the whole of the German Navy. You never have seen in any magazine or newspaper in this country a single comparison of the American and German Navies, and you will never see it from that crowd. They know better than to try it.

Now I want to show you how they do. You take the Navy Yearbook and you will find that in order to compare a part of our Navy with the entire German Navy the two navies are divided up into three classes—first, battleships; second, dreadnaughts; third, cruisers. Then they give, on page 832, a list of the German battleships, German dreadnaughts, and the German cruisers, and on the other page, 833, they give a list of ours. There they stand side by side. The way they have done that is that they leave out 17 of our armored ships. They leave out 3 of our battleships, they leave out 4 of our armored cruisers, and they leave out all 10 of the monitors—17 armored ships do not appear in the comparison at all.

Then they will take from the dreadnaught class some of our dreadnaughts and put them up as common battleships, so as to make our dreadnaught class look as little as possible, and then come in here and argue about the number of "capital ships." You heard the chairman of the committee tell about 26 capital ships that the Germans have. Well, they are "capital ships." They cost more than any other ships that can be made, especially those battle cruisers, and they afford more profits to "capital" than any other ships that are constructed. [Laughter and applause.] There was never anything more properly named than the "capital ships." [Laughter and applause.]

Another thing about it. Did you ever notice how timid capital is and how it will run away from any danger? Capital never fights, it always wants to run, and a characteristic of these battle cruisers is that they have enormous speed, and there is nothing on the ocean that can catch one. [Laughter and applause.] Of course, they are "capital ships." But there is not any one of them that can whip the Oregon—little, old, thin-armored ships that they are; they are not made to fight; they are made to run.

Now, this question of comparison by taking a part of our ships and comparing them with all of the German ships is what they are doing. Why, you could prove that England has the smallest navy in the world by that kind of logic. Let me take England's navy and pick out such parts as I want and then compare it with all the other navies, and I will prove to you by that kind of logic that England has the smallest navy on earth. [Laughter.]

It reminds me of what I saw at a fair that we had in my town last fall, where they had on exhibition what was claimed to be the largest horse in the world. He was a magnificent specimen of horseflesh. I never saw anything like him before, and they also had a little insignificant looking donkey. The logic of these naval spendthrifts has suggested to me how I could prove that the donkey was much bigger than the horse. All I would have to do would be to take the ears of the horse and the ears of the donkey and compare them and make the donkey the larger. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, I want to look into this process. In the first place, in the list they leave out the Indiana, the Oregon, and the Massachusetts battleships. They say that they ought not to be counted or considered at all in comparison with the German Navy. They tell us that these old ships are of no account. The Secretary of the Navy looked at me and said, "The Oregon can't fight; you wouldn't call that a fighting ship." That is what he told me I wouldn't do. He didn't know me then. [Laughter.]

Now, the chairman of the committee undertook to prove the worthlessness of the Oregon by asking the Secretary of the Navy this question: He pulled out the ballistic table, handed it to the Secretary of the Navy, and said, "Now, Mr. Secretary, you see the penetration of our 50-caliber gun at 9,000 yards is 16.4 inches, is it not?" The Secretary looked at it and said, "Yes." "Now, look at the penetration of the 13-inch gun and you see at the same distance it has a penetration of only 8.1 inches." The Secretary said, "Yes." The chairman said, "That shows, does it not, Mr. Secretary, that the Oregon's guns are not half as powerful as the modern gun?" Of course, the Secretary said, "Yes." That is all there was to that. I was astounded. I did not know what it meant. I do not know all about this Navy. That mystified me. I went to the office and wrote the Secretary of the Navy, asking him to send me the table from which he gave that testimony. I looked at it and found it was like he stated; but I found this, too. I found opposite this calculation for 13-inch guns these words: "For 2-caliber radius." Then I found up above for the calculation of the other gun, "7-caliber radius." That was all Hebrew to me, but I got a couple of naval experts. I have one or two myself; they are not all on the other side. [Laughter.] I asked what that meant and they explained it. I found that that made all the difference in the world. The attention of the Secretary of the Navy was not called to that nor was it called to the fact that in the 13-inch gun there was 185 pounds of powder, while in the other gun there was 340 pounds, although the 13-inch gun has a powder chamber several hundred cubic inches greater than the 12-inch gun. Of course, you can put half a load of powder in a gun and make it inferior to any other kind of a gun. So I got the experts to take that and figure it out, using the same formula of the same caliber radius for both guns, and I want to show you what it is.

First figure them both according to the old 2-caliber radius, as given in the British Navy Annual. I find that this is the difference between the two guns. The 12-inch gun at the muzzle has a penetration of 25 inches and the other 15 inches. At 3,000 yards it has a penetration of 17 inches and the other 12; at 6,000 yards one has 13 and the other 9. Now, we will take it at 9,000 yards. That was what the Secretary testified to, where it was figured according to another formula, where the 12-inch gun had a penetration of 16.4, or over twice as much as the other, and here is what this authority gives it when the table is all figured by the same formula for both guns: The penetration of the 12-inch gun is 11 inches and the other is 8.1 inches, making a difference of only 2.9 inches between the two guns at 9,000 yards, instead of one being twice as great, and even then the 13-inch gun had just about half a load of powder.

Mr. SIMS. Each of those calculations represent the Oregon?

Mr. WITHERSPOON. The 13-inch guns. The first eight ships were constructed with 13-inch guns, and they are trying to consign those ships to the scrap pile in order to furnish a pretext for wasting the people's money, and one of the things they are trying to do is to prove that the guns are worthless.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman did not mention the Oregon, although I thought that was what he had in mind.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. That is the fact. I want now to give you what the Naval Pocket Book says about the Oregon, or the 13-inch guns on the Oregon. On page 431 it gives the muzzle velocity at 2,300 foot-seconds and the muzzle energy at 40,388. That 2,300-foot muzzle velocity is 300 foot-seconds greater than the one given out in this table, where it had such a small reduced load of powder. Put enough powder in the gun to develop a velocity of 2,300 feet a second, and I want to show you what character of gun it is. I have had it figured out by two experts. Taking the gun with the small load of powder and a muzzle velocity of 2,000 foot-seconds, and figuring it for a 7-caliber radius instead of a 2-caliber radius—and if I had time I would like to explain to you what that means—that gun has at the muzzle the power to penetrate Krupp steel, which is the hardest steel made, to the depth of 14.96 inches; at 6,000 yards, 12 inches; at 9,000 yards, 10.72 inches; and at 12,000 yards, 9.6 inches. That is the destructive force of the guns on these old warships at 12,000 yards, which is as far as you can see on the ocean, and I know that is the fact. It will penetrate the hardest steel there is to the depth of 9.6 inches, even with a reduced load of powder.

Mr. SIMS. And yet they say they are obsolete?

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Oh, yes; they are obsolete. Put a little more powder in it and develop a muzzle velocity of 2,300 feet a second, and then you have this, that the penetration at the muzzle would be 17.74 inches; at 6,000 yards, 14.4 inches; at 9,000 yards, 12.86 inches; and at 12,000 yards, 11.76 inches, or nearly 12 inches, and all of the battleships and cruisers in the world do not exceed in thickest armor more than 11 inches. I do not mean that there is not one here and there, but the great mass of the battleships have not armor plate on them where the most of the guns on these ships that the naval spendthrifts want to throw away will not penetrate as far as the human eye can see.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Is there any reason why they could not put these new guns they claim are better than the old ones on the old ships?

Mr. WITHERSPOON. None in the world. I was going to discuss that if I had the time. The very fact that they do not do that shows, to my mind, that they are not working to increase the efficiency of the Navy. They are working to squander the public funds. [Applause.] We have in our Navy 78 35-caliber guns; 32 of them are 13-inch guns, 6 are 12-inch guns, and then comes 40 8-inch guns, and these could be replaced with 45-caliber guns and probably increase the efficiency of the Navy by 25 per cent; and I am ready to vote for that to-day or any other day. But the difference between that and this bill is that if you were to put the best guns on all of those old ships we have a gun factory that can make those guns and there would be no profit in it to the trust. [Applause.] That is the difference between that and the building of battleships.

There is a great deal about these old ships I wanted to say, but my time is so short that I will cut it all out. But I want to say this: Just say that those ships are worthless. Admit that. Admit it for the sake of argument. Germany has 20 battleships that are compared with our battleships. I tell you that the Oregon and the Indiana and the Massachusetts, the three ships they will not count, are more powerful than any ships in the German predreadnaught Navy [applause], and if our three are not to be counted because they are worthless, then Germany has not a battleship that she ought to count.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Now, if you will give me your attention, I want to compare the Oregon with all of the 20 German battleships; and, first, I compare them by the weight of metal in a broadside. The weight of all the metal in the guns of the Oregon from a broadside would be 6,600 pounds of steel. It has four 13-inch shells weighing 1,130 pounds, making 4,520 pounds, and eight 8-inch shells weighing 260 pounds, making 2,080 pounds, giving a total of 6,600 pounds that a broadside from the Oregon weighs. Now, you take the first five German ships, and they each have four 9.4-inch guns, with shells weighing 419 pounds, or 1,676 pounds, and fourteen 5.9-inch guns, with a shell weighing 101 pounds, making 1,414 pounds, in all making 3,090 pounds. Comparing this with the Oregon as to weight of metal in a broadside, it is 6,600 from the Oregon and the German battleships only have 3,090 pounds, less than one-half, or a difference of 3,510 pounds of steel in favor of the Oregon, so far as the broadside is concerned. Now, taking the second five German vessels, which are just like the others, except instead of having fourteen 5.9-inch guns they have 18; a broadside from each one of those second five German vessels weighs 3,494 pounds, which is a little more than one-half of the weight of the broadside from the Oregon, or, in other words, a broadside from the Oregon exceeds that from any one of those five ships by 3,106 pounds. Now, with the last 10 German ships, which are superior to the others, the weight of a broadside from each one of them is 4,800 pounds, which is just 1,800 pounds less than a broadside from the Oregon. [Applause.] Now, take next the muzzle energy. The muzzle energy of the Oregon is 40,388 foot tons—I am speaking of the 13-inch guns on the Oregon—and the muzzle energy is 40,388 foot tons.

The muzzle energy from the big guns of the first 5 German battleships is 16,855 foot tons, or just about 8,000 less than half what it is on the Oregon. Now, you take the next 5 German battleships and the muzzle energy from them is 22,215 foot tons, or just a little over one-half the muzzle energy of the big guns on the Oregon. Now, take the last 10 German ships and the muzzle energy of the big guns is 35,270 foot tons, which is 5,000 foot tons less than the muzzle energy of the big guns of the Oregon. So when you come to the muzzle energy there is not a battleship on the German side that is any more equal to the Oregon than when you consider the weight of the broadside from the vessels. Now, in the next place, take the armor. The Oregon, the Indiana, and the Massachusetts have the thickest armor, are the best protected vessels I have ever seen any description of in the world. [Applause.] I am not going to detain you with a detailed description, but I will just take out three of the most important points on a vessel. On the Oregon the belt is protected by 18 inches of harveyized steel. The bulkhead and the main gun position is protected by 17 inches of harveyized steel, and I have never seen a description of any other ship that had as much armor on it as that. Now I want to compare that with the German ships, and in order to do that I have got to reduce the harveyized steel to the German Krupp steel, which is the kind that the German vessels have on them. You take the penetration of a shell in harveyized steel and then eight-tenths of that will give you the amount of the depth that shell will penetrate Krupp steel, so reducing that 18 inches and 17 inches to Krupp steel we would have the belt of the Oregon protected by Krupp steel 14.4 inches thick, while the belt of the first five German battleships is protected by steel 12 inches thick, or 2.4 inches thinner than the belt of the Oregon. Now, comparing the Oregon in that respect with the other 15 battleships their belt is protected by Krupp steel 9 inches thick, which is just 5.4 inches thinner than the belt on the Oregon.

Now, coming to the bulkhead of the Oregon, that would be protected by Krupp steel 13.6 inches thick. On the first 5 German battleships they have their bulkhead protected by Krupp steel 8 inches thick, which is 5.6 inches less than the Oregon has her bulkhead protected by. Then the second 5 German ships are protected for their bulkhead by 6-inch steel, which is 7.6 inches thinner than the Oregon has on her; and the other 10 German battleships, if they have any protection on the bulkhead at all, the British Navy Annual does not give it. Now, that is the way they stand here. Now take the other position, the main gun position. I find the comparison is not so much in our favor. The Oregon is protected by 13.6 inches. The first 10 German battleships are protected by 10 inches, which is a difference of 3.6 in favor of the Oregon; and the last 10 German battleships are protected by—that is, the main gun position—11 inches, which is 2.6 less than that on the Oregon. That is the way this Oregon compares with the German 20 battleships in that particular. Now, coming down to the final point, and that is the destructive force of the guns. At 9,000 yards the big guns of the Oregon will penetrate Krupp steel to a depth of 10.72 inches.

At the same distance the 9.4-inch guns on the first 5 German battleships have a penetration of 3½ inches, or less than one-third the penetration of the guns on the Oregon. Now, comparing them with the second 5 German battleships at 9,000 yards, they have a penetration of 4 inches, which is 6.72 inches less than the penetration of the big guns on the Oregon, and comparing it with the guns on the last 10 German battleships—that is, their 11-inch guns—they have at the distance of 9,000 yards a penetration of 6 inches, which is 4.72 inches less than the penetration of the big guns on the Oregon. So in point of weight of the metal in a broadside, in point of the muzzle energy, in point of protection by their armor, in point of the destructive forces of the gun, there is not a battleship in the German line that is near equal to the Oregon. [Applause.] The truth of the business is if the Oregon was in a battle with any 6 German battleships it would destroy every one of them before they would get close enough for their guns to penetrate its armor. [Prolonged applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.
